TUSCOLA COUNTY, BANNER COUNTY OF THE STATE--KNOWN AS THE THUMB COUNTRY.

Lies in the Saginaw River Valley, and is crossed by three trunk line railroads, and their branches. It has a taxable wealth of $30,600,000, and a population of near 38,000.

Caro, the county seat, has a population of about 3,000, with paved streets, boulevard lights, and state piked roads leading to it: with its manufactories, numerous business houses, four hotels, three banks, and one of the largest beet sugar refineries in the United States.

The soil of Tuscola county is generally level, from a sandy loam to black loam, with splendid rivers and water powers, splendid schools and churches, rural mail routes, telephones, milk routes, improved roads, and pikes running everywhere.

The sugar beet crop leads, with the bean crop second, also a large acreage of corn, wheat, oats, hay, alfalfa, fruits and potatoes. Unexcelled markets everywhere in the county--within a hauling distance not exceeding 5 or 6 miles from any farm listed, and over the best gravel and state reward roads.

Considering the high quality of the soil and its productiveness, the prices of farm lands are far below those of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. Tuscola county has more automobiles than any county in Michigan outside of Waye county.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She mixed Sulphur with it to Restore Color, Gloss, Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a 50-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ."

"TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will cure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Harmless to flush Kidneys and neutralize irritating acids—Splendid for system.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent [illegible]-water drink, which quickly relieves [illegible] trouble.

MANY CANDIDATES IN INDIANA MILITIA

HOOSIER TROOPERS TOO BUSY TO CONDUCT LONG-DISTANCE CAMPAIGN.

WANT TO BE REMEMBERED

Of the Ten Aspirants One, Capt. A. L. Moudy, Commander of the Auburn Company, Third Infantry, Is Running for Governor.

Llano Grande Tex.—Ten men and officers among the Hoosier soldiers serving their country on the border are to be voted on at the November election as the nominees of their respective parties for various public offices of Indiana, but they are entirely too busy with their military duties, which they place above their own selfish interests, to conduct a campaign even from long distance.

Their political interests truly "are in the hands of their friends." They are here performing a patriotic service for their country without even giving much thought to their political fortunes. Few of them have even written letters back home calling attention to their candidacy. Only one plans to obtain a leave of absence to engage in the campaign.

Every one of these soldier-candidates, irrespective of his political faith, has the best wishes of his comrades in camp. Comradeship binds the men of the army closer together than any political ties. In fact, party politics has no place in camp.

It is a distinction to the Indiana brigade that one of its officers, Capt. Alfred L. Moudy, the commander of the Auburn company, Third infantry, is the nominee of his party for governor of Indiana. His chances of being elected are remote since he belongs to the minority Prohibition party, but nevertheless the brigade considered it an honor that one of its number is a nominee for the exalted office of governor. It so happens, too, that Captain Moudy's company is one of the most efficient in the Third regiment. He is popular with the men of his command and the officers of the brigade.

Others of the brigade who are candidates for Indiana offices are as follows:

Maj. Joseph C. Clark of Spencer, commander of a battalion of the First infantry; candidate for clerk of the circuit court of Owen county.

Sergt. Jack Dilworth of Laporte, the first sergeant of the machine gun company, first infantry; candidate for representative in the legislature from Laporte and Starke counties.

Lieut. Arthur Tuteur, a battalion adjutant of the Third infantry; candidate for county prosecuting attorney.

Maj. Glen VanAuken of Auburn, the brigade adjutant; candidate for state senator.

Capt. Oscar B. Abel, commander of the Seymour company, Second infantry; candidate for prosecuting attorney of Jackson county.

Capt. Walter R. Meyers, commander of the Newcastle company, First infantry; candidate for prosecuting attorney of Henry county.

Private Joseph Favorite of Knox, a member of the hospital detachment of the First infantry; candidate for coroner of Starke county.

Lieut. Leonard P. Collins of the First infantry hospital detachment; candidate for coroner of Pulaski county.

Lieut. Ross O. Baldwin of the Seymour company, Second infantry, now serving with a detachment of the Twenty-sixth United States regiment for instruction purposes; candidate for surveyor of Jackson county.

Lieut. John G. Capouch of the Winamac company, First infantry; candidate for prosecuting attorney of Pulaski county.

Hoosier Soldiers Registered.

Indianapolis.—Fred Van Nuys is home from Llano Grande military camp in Texas, where he spent a week registering voters among the Indiana National Guard members. He said there was no mention of politics on the trip, and that he registered Republicans as well as Democrats among the Indiana soldiers who called on him.

Van Nuys said on his arrival at the camp he called on General Lewis, commander of the Indiana brigade and of the camp, and explained his mission. He was sent there by the Democratic state committee to register the voters on the theory that if the troops should be returned to their homes before election day they would be qualified to vote.

General Lewis, he said, gave him the freedom of the camp. Van Nuys opened headquarters in a tent and the word was passed around that all Indiana voters might prepare their registration applications there, and that he would bring them back to Indiana and file them in their proper precincts.

"A number of Republican voters came to my headquarters and I prepared their registration blanks," Van Nuys said. "Lieutenant Colonel Emmett F. Branch of Martinsville, who is there with his regiment, also has been registering Republican voters. There was no mention of politics between us. Everything was done harmoniously.

"I found among the 3,000 Indiana soldiers about 800 men under the age of twenty-one. I had no idea the number of minors was so large.

"The soldiers are in fine condition. There is very little sickness among them. They have a wonderful camp, the sanitary conditions are excellent and the place is as clean as a floor. I wore a soldier's uniform while I was there, slept in a tent, ate at the soldiers' mess and lived with them, and I thoroughly enjoyed every minute of the time.

"Those men are real soldiers. There are no 'tin soldiers' on the border. I saw them at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and the difference between them then and now is very marked. They are strong, hard and healthy, and they work every day. There is no fooling around. We have a real army down there.

"There is nothing but army life at the camp. Those men scarcely know the day of the week, and they have no idea what is going on out in the world. It is work and drill and training with them, and no attention is paid to anything else.

"The soldiers appear to be well contented and to be enjoying the training. They are on the jump all the time. Major Robert Tyndall took his batteries out for a long march the other day, and they were to spend about a week at target practice. The Battery A boys looked fine. One of the Indiana regiments went out for drill the other day, and it was real work, too.

"The Indiana soldiers bombarded me with questions about things in Indiana, and they inquired about many persons. Many of them asked about Billy Blodgett of the Indianapolis News, who was at the camp for many weeks."

New Incorporations.

Horn Mercantile company, Vanderburg county, has dissolved.

Kokomo Investment corporation, Kokomo; capital, $10,000; realty; directors, W. M. Wells, M. A. Brown, Henry Quigley.

Sellers Clothing company, Logansport; capital, $10,000; wearing apparel; directors, H. F. Wills, Oscar Laverty, J. W. Wills.

B. & B. Manufacturing company, Indianapolis, has increased its capital from $5,000 to $10,000.

Money for Indiana.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Newton at Washington, who has charge of the building operations of the government, says that steps will be taken immediately to make use of the money appropriated during the recent session of the congress for the purchase of sites or the construction of post-office buildings in Indiana. Two years ago there were many authorizations for the construction of federal buildings in the state, but the treasury department held up most of the projects.

The sundry civil appropriation bill of the recent session carries appropriations for the following expenditures that must be made during the present fiscal year, which will end the first of next July:

Bluffton, to be used in obtaining a site and beginning work on the building, $12,500; Elkhart, for improvements in the post office building, mainly for lookouts, $1,000; Evansville, for the completion of the improvements on the federal building, $75,000; Fort Wayne, for putting in mail-conveying machinery, $5,000; Greensburg, for the purchase of a site, $12,000; Huntington, for continuing the work on the building, $30,000; Indianapolis, for putting in mail-conveying machinery, $20,000; Kendallville, for continuing the work on the building, $500; New Albany, for the renting of temporary quarters while the federal building is undergoing repairs, $1,500; Seymour, for completion of the building, $15,000; Shelbyville, for the purchase of a site and beginning work on the building, $17,000; Terre Haute, for putting in lookouts, $4,000, and Washington, for continuing the work on the building, $25,000.

Upholds Validity of Law.

Judge A. B. Anderson, in federal court, upheld the validity of the trading-stamp statute of Indiana, passed by the state legislature of 1915, which provides that all companies doing such business in Indiana must pay a license fee of $1,000 in each county in which they transact business.

The suit originally was brought by three trading stamp companies, the Sperry & Hutchinson company, the Home Merchants' Trading association and the Profit-Sharing company, against Alvah Rucker of Indianapolis and other prosecuting attorneys in Indiana, to enjoin the enforcement of the law. A temporary injunction was issued last spring.

Under the ruling by Judge Anderson this injunction is dissolved, and unless his ruling should be set aside on appeal, trading stamp companies may continue business in Indiana only by paying the license fee of $1,000 in each county in which they desire to do business.

Judge Anderson followed a recent ruling by the United States Supreme court, in which laws similar to those of Indiana were declared constitutional.

SHORT STATE NEWS.

Greenfield.—On the banks of Brandywine creek, overlooking "The Ole Swimmin' Hole" which he made famous, lifetime friends paid tribute to the memory of James Whitcomb Riley, Hoosier poet. A large stage was erected on the banks of the creek, hills to the east forming a natural amphitheater. Arrangements for the celebration were being made when the poet died and the observance now was in the nature of a memorial.

Indiana Brevities

Brazil.—William Anderson, who was stabbed with an ice pick by an unidentified assailant, is in a serious condition.

Warsaw.—Reuben Dewart, thirteen, has disappeared. The boy ran away from the home of his aunt, where he lived, and has not been seen since.

Newcastle.—Mayor Watkins is leading a movement to place cluster lights on Broad street, in the business district, between Fifteenth and Twelfth streets.

Princeton.—Mayor D. R. Head has appointed Ellis Helsley, a patrolman, chief of police, to succeed August Fichter, who returned to business as a barber.

Indianapolis.—Senator John W. Kern, majority leader in the senate, has abandoned his speaking tour temporarily because of illness due to a deep-seated cold.

Anderson.—Mrs. Sarah Ramsey of this city has reported to the police that her daughter, fifteen years old, disappeared. Her mother thinks the girl went with another girl to Indianapolis.

Winamac.—A remonstrance was filed by 70 Cass township voters against granting any liquor licenses, following the application of Fred Timm for license. Sixty-nine signers were necessary.

Gosport.—The board of health here has ordered the schools, churches and all public meeting places closed to prevent the spread of scarlet fever. There were five cases last week, two of which were fatal.

Hammond.—As a result of ill-feeling between R. A. Littler, agent of the Erie at Markle, and John Spaht, a track foreman, Spaht hit Littler in the head with a brick, killing him instantly. Spaht gave himself up.

New Albany.—The New Albany Ministerial association reorganized with four new members recently assigned to Methodist pulpits. Officers elected were: Rev. H. G. Connelly, president; Rev. W. H. Towerton, vice president, and Rev. W. H. Todd, secretary and treasurer.

Indianapolis.—Police scoured this city in search of Harry Browning, who escaped from Deputy Sheriff Brown near Broad Ripple, while en route to the penal farm from Kokomo. The deputy sheriff lost sight of his prisoner for a moment and the prisoner jumped off the car when it stopped for a passenger.

Indianapolis.—Early returns from the registration of Monday and Tuesday indicate that Indiana will cast the heaviest vote in the coming election that it has cast in years. Twenty precincts in Indianapolis showed a gain in registration from 6,000 to 9,080. Other cities in the state record a proportionate increase.

Columbus.—Amos Chambers, eighty-nine years, who was born in Bartholomew county, has arrived here in a small runabout after traveling more than 2,000 miles from his home in Walnut Springs, Tex. He was accompanied only by a boy sixteen years old. Chambers expects to spend the winter here visiting relatives.

Indianapolis.—After the board of public works had called the managers of a pure food show on the "carpet" the food show promoters agreed to allow President Wilson to speak to farmers on rural credits in Tomlinson hall. The hall had been rented and the pure food show promoters threatened for a time to refuse to give it up.

South Bend.—Several barbers in a Mishawaka barber shop were endangered when a vent pipe in a gas heater at the shop permitted so much gas to escape that, before the trouble could be determined, two barbers were overcome and fell to the floor. Jack McGowan and Carl McMann, the two who were overcome, were sent to a physician's office nearby, where they were revived.

Indianapolis.—Thirty-two members of a newly recruited field hospital corps of the Indiana National Guard shivered as they slept under makeshift tents while the big, steam-heated barracks of Fort Harrison was empty. Due to a difference between authorities as to whether the war department or the state of Indiana should bear the expense of the mobilization of the new company, the men were forced to sleep in the open with practically no equipment.

Gary.—The Gary "wire tapping" cases were dismissed in the city court by Judge Dunn upon motion by the prosecutor and J. C. Colton, address unknown, and George Brinkman of Chicago were granted their freedom. Both men were arrested October 5 in connection with an alleged attempt to defraud I. H. Hindrickson, a farmer of Lincoln, Ill., out of $10,000. Whether Hindrickson was the real victim the police do not know and he did not appear in court, it being said his presence was unnecessary.

Elkhart.—Fred Seillon, fifty-two, a lineman, is dead of a fractured skull suffered when he fell from a pole after being shocked by high-voltage wires. His widow and several children survive.

Shelbyville.—A suit filed in the Shelbyville circuit court more than a year ago by William H. DePrez and Mrs. Maggie Stroup of this city against William E. Longley, state fire marshal, in which an order of court to prohibit the fire marshal from wrecking a condemned business building here was sought, has been dismissed, the fire marshal's order having been revoked.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

"LIQUID BREAD."

This true story about the "harmlessness" of beer is told by the Temperance society of the Methodist Episcopal church:

"Some time ago an advertisement asserting that 'beer is liquid bread' and a 'temperance drink' fell under the eye of a man who had never taken a drink in his life. He was a mechanic, making good wages. He had a wife and two children, owned his home, and was in every sense of the word a man of strong character and of worth to his country.

"The 'liquid bread,' 'temperance drink' converted him to the use of beer. In time he introduced it into his home.

"Some months later he returned home after an absence of three days. When he entered the house he was 'beer-drunk'—soggy, stupid, brutal with the brutality that delights in perverted forms of cruelty.

"When he entered the living room something angered him. It may have been the reproach he read in his wife's face. He knocked her down, went on into the bed room where he found his two children asleep, cut their throats, and when his wife, having recovered, entered the door and screamed, knocked her down again and crushed her skull, literally kicking out her brains.

"This man declared that he had never tasted anything but beer in his life. There is no reason to disbelieve him."

NOT A SQUARE DEAL.

A retired farmer of southern Nebraska moved into a village to spend the latter days of his life. Soon after he was solicited to sign a petition for a man who wanted to open a saloon. He refused to sign, and, when asked for his reason replied that the town did not treat the saloonkeeper fairly.

The applicant for a license had heard many other reasons, but never having heard that one, he asked the man to explain.

The explanation was like this: "You want to start your saloon for the benefit of the town, don't you?" "Yes," replied the would-be saloonkeeper. "You think it will bring trade to the town and improve business, don't you?" "Yes," said the man who wanted the license. "Well," said the farmer, "if your saloon will help the town, draw trade, and improve business, they ought to give you a bounty instead of making you pay a high price for the privilege of starting a saloon."

LISTEN TO COMMON SENSE.

Does not common sense show you that you would be better off to buy the liquor and not drink it, than you would to buy the liquor and drink it? If you buy the liquor and don't drink it, the liquor man has the money, and you pay the license just the same and you have lost nothing except the money you have paid out for the liquor. It is true the money is gone and the liquor is gone; but if you buy the liquor and drink it, the money is gone, the liquor is gone, and the man is gone; hence, common sense says the liquor traffic doesn't pay anybody except a few men who sell it. But how long shall thousands of people be made enormously poor in order that a small preferred class, who are doing absolutely nothing for the welfare of humanity, may be made enormously rich?—Mary Harris Armor.

TRAINING AND DRINKING.

Can we imagine any sane present-day trainer telling his team or crew that they need not bother their heads about the amount of beer or wine they take during training? With most of them it is a case of the less the better, and none best of all. If this is true of physical energy which, after all, is the crudest form of energy, what train of reasoning leads us to ignore the effect that alcohol, in its various vehicles, has on the intellectual and psycho-physical powers of the man in our midst, who is training for the great game, or battle of life, in which he shortly is bound to engage?—Prof. G. Sims Woodhead.

CAN'T BUY A LINE.

"The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen is unequivocally and uncompromisingly a temperance organization," says The Fireman and Enginemen's Magazine.

"So closely does the organization adhere to this principle that all the breweries and distilleries of the continent combined have not enough money to buy one line of advertising space in its official publication, The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen's Magazine, for the purpose of advertising their intoxicating products."

UNFAIR TO FARMER.

"My ideas on the tax question have changed," says a prominent farmer. "I used to think saloons paid taxes. They simply collect them, and give worse than nothing in return. The license money that some nearsighted folks think is such a big thing, comes out of their customers, every dollar of it. And then we sober, hard-working farmers have to pay more taxes to keep up expenses of courts, prisons, asylums, poor houses and jails than all the other taxpayers of the country put together."

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

SYNOPSIS.

Young Hugh Whitaker's doctors tell him he has but a few months to live, and his sweetheart jilts him. His friend, Peter Stark, finds him disconsolate and proposes a sea voyage.

Can you imagine a more tragic figure than a young girl deserted in a ratty hotel by the man with whom she eloped, and given notice that her people have cast her out of their lives and she must shift for herself? One little maiden in such a plight thought there were but two courses ahead for her. One was dishonorable. So she emptied a little black bottle into a glass of water and—well what happens is told in this installment with dramatic effect.

CHAPTER II

"Mrs. Morten."

It was three in the morning before Peter Stark, having to the best of his endurance and judgment tired Whitaker out with talking, took his hat and his departure from Whitaker's bachelor rooms. Whitaker shut the hall door and turned back wearily into his living-room. It was three in the morning; his body ached with fatigue, yet he made no move toward his bedchamber.

Picking his way across a floor littered with atlases, charts, maps and guide-books, he went to the bathroom and took a bottle of chloral from the medicine closet.

What he took brought him three hours of oblivion. He rose at eight, ordered his breakfast up by telephone, bathed and dressed. When the tray came up, his mail came with it. Among others there was one letter in which he read:

> Dear Hugh: I can call you that, now, because you're Peter's dearest friend and therefore mine, and the proof of that is that I'm telling you first of all of our great happiness. Peter and I found out that we loved one another only yesterday, so we're going to be married the first of June and . . ."

Whitaker read no more. He could guess the rest, and for the moment he felt too sick a man to go through to the end. Indeed, the words were blurring and running together beneath his gaze.

After a long time he put the letter aside, absent-mindedly swallowed a cup of lukewarm coffee and rose from an otherwise untasted meal.

"That settles that, of course," he said quietly. "And it means I've got to hustle to get ahead of Peter."

Whitaker packed a hand-bag with a few essentials, not forgetting the bottle of chloral. He was not yet quite sure what he meant to do after he had definitely put himself out of Peter Stark's sphere of influence, but he hadn't much doubt that the drug was destined to play a most important part in the ultimate solution, and would as readily have thought of leaving it behind as of going without a toothbrush or railway fare.

Leaving the bag in the parcels-room at the Grand Central Station, he went down-town to his office. Happily his partner, Drummond, was out of town for the day. He worked expeditiously, having no callers until just before he was ready to leave. Then he was obliged to admit one who desired to make a settlement. He took Whitaker's receipt for the payment in cash, leaving behind him fifteen one-hundred-dollar notes. Whitaker drew his personal check for the right amount and left it with a memorandum under the paper-weight on Drummond's desk; put a match to a shredded pile of personal correspondence in the fireplace; and caught a train at the Grand Central at one-three.

Not until the cars were in motion did he experience any sense of security from Peter Stark. He had been apprehensive until that moment of some unforeseen move on the part of his friend; Peter was capable of wide but sure casts of intuition on occasion, especially where his affections were touched. But now Whitaker felt free, free to abandon himself to meditative despair. Cold horror crawled in his brain like a delirium—horror of himself, of his morbid flesh, of that moribund body unfit to sheathe the clean fire of life.

At about four o'clock the train stopped to drop the dining-car. Wholly swayed by blind impulse, Whitaker got up, took his hand-bag and left the car.

On the station platform he found himself pelted by a pouring rain. He imprisoned himself in the body of an aged and decrepit four-wheeler, and as they rocked and crawled away, the blind windows wept unceasingly, and unceasingly the rain drummed the long roll on the roof.

In time they stopped before a rambling structure whose weather-boarded facade, white with flaking paint, bore the legend: "Commercial House." Whitaker carried his hand-bag up the steps and across the rain-swept veranda into a dim, cavernous hall. A cubicle fenced off in one corner formed the office proper. Whitaker waited by the desk, a gaunt, weary man, hagridden by fear. There was in his mind a desolate picture of the room up-stairs when he—his soul: the imperishable essence of himself—should have finished with it. . . .

At his elbow lay the hotel register, open at a page neatly headed with a date in red ink. Whitaker registered; but two-thirds of his name was all he entered; when it came to "Whitaker," his pen paused and passed on to write "Philadelphia" in the residence column.

The thought came to him that he must be careful to obliterate all laundry marks on his clothing.

In his own good time the clerk appeared. His welcome was an indifferent nod and a glance at the register which seemed unaccountably to moderate his apathy.

"Mr. Morton—uh?" he inquired.

Whitaker nodded without words.

The youth shrugged and scrawled a hieroglyph after the name. "Here, Sammy," he said to the boy—"Forty-three." To Whitaker he addressed the further remark: "Trunks?"

"No."

The youth seemed about to expostulate, but checked when Whitaker placed one of his hundred-dollar notes on the counter.

"I think that'll cover my liability," he said with a significance misinterpreted by the other.

"I ain't got enough change—"

"That's all right; I'm in no hurry."

The eyes of the lout followed him as he ascended the stairs. On the second floor as Whitaker came into view, the boy thrust open the door, disappeared for an instant, and came out minus the bag. Whitaker gave him a coin in passing—an attention which he acknowledged by pulling the door to with a bang the moment the guest had entered the room. At the same time Whitaker became aware of a contretemps.

The room was of fair size, and it was tenanted by a woman in street dress. She stood by the washstand, with her back to the light, her attitude one of tense expectancy; hardly more than a silhouette of a figure moderately tall and very slight, almost angular in its slenderness. She had been holding a tumbler in one hand, but as Whitaker appeared this slipped from her fingers; there followed a thud and a sound of spilt liquid at her feet. She moved forward a pace or two, her hands fluttering out toward him, then stopped as though halted by a force implacable and overpowering.

"I thought," she quavered in a stricken voice—"I thought. . . you . . . my husband . . . Mr. Morton . . . the boy said . . ."

Then her knees buckled under her, and she plunged forward and fell with a thump that shook the walls.

"I'm sorry—I beg pardon," Whitaker stammered stupidly to ears that couldn't hear. He swore softly with exasperation, threw his hat to a chair and dropped to his knees beside the woman. It seemed as if the high gods were hardly playing fair, to throw a fainting woman on his hands just then, at a time when he was all preoccupied with his own absorbing tragedy.

Even while this thought was running through his mind, he was gathering the slight young body into his arms; and he found it really astonishingly easy to rise and bear her to the bed. Then turning to his hand-bag, he opened it and produced a small, leather-bound flask of brandy; a little of which would go far toward shattering her syncope, he fancied.

It did, in fact; a few drops between her half-parted lips, and she came to with disconcerting rapidity, opening dazed eyes in the middle of a spasm of coughing. He stepped back, stoppering the flask.

"That's better," he said pleasantly. "Now lie still while I fetch you a drink of water."

As he turned to the washstand his foot struck the tumbler she had dropped. He stopped short, frowning down at the great, staring, wet, yellow stain on the dingy and threadbare carpet. Together with this discovery he got a whiff of an acrid-sweet effluvium that spelled "Oxalic Acid—Poison" as unmistakably as did the druggist's label on the empty packet on the washstand.

In another moment he was back at the bedside with a clean glass of water, which he offered to the girl's lips, passing his arm beneath her shoulders and lifting her head so that she might drink.

She emptied the glass thirstily.

"Look here," he said almost roughly under the lash of this new fear—"you didn't really drink any of that stuff, did you?"

Her eyes met his with a look of negation clouded by fear and bewilderment. Then she turned her head away. Dragging a pillow beneath it, he let her down again.

"Good," he said in accents meant to be enheartening; "you'll be all right in a moment or two."

Her colorless lips moved in a whisper he had to bend close to distinguish.

"Please . . ."

"Yes?"

"Please don't . . . call anybody. ."

"I won't. Don't worry."

The lids quivered down over her eyes, and her mouth was wrung with anguish. He stared, perplexed. He wanted to go away quickly, but couldn't gain his own consent to do so. She was in no condition to be left alone, this delicate and fragile child, defenceless and beset. A strange girl, to find in a plight like hers, he thought: not pretty, but quite unusual; delicate, sensitive, high-strung, bred to the finer things of life—this last was self-evident in the fine simplicity of her severely plain attire.

A variety of impressions crowded upon his perceptions in little more than a glance. For suddenly Nature took her in hand; she twisted upon her side, as if to escape his regard, and covered her face, her palms muffling deep tearing sobs while waves of pent-up misery racked her slender little body.

Whitaker moved softly away. . . .

Once, pausing by the centre-table, he happened to look down. He saw a little heap of the hotel writing-paper, together with envelopes, a pen, a bottle of ink. Three of the envelopes were sealed and superscribed, and two were stamped. The unstamped letter was addressed to the Proprietor of the Commercial house.

Of the others, one was directed to a Mr. C. W. Morton in care of another person at a number on lower Sixth Avenue, New York; and from this Whitaker began to understand the singular manner of his introduction to the wrong room; there's no great difference between Morton and Morten, especially when written carelessly.

But the third letter caused his eyes to widen considerably. It bore the name of Thurlow Ladislas, Esq., and a Wall Street address.

Whitaker's mouth shaped a still-born whistle. He was re-calling with surprising distinctness the fragment of dialogue he had overheard at his club the previous afternoon.

CHAPTER III.

Mrs. Whitaker.

He lived through a long, bad quarter hour, his own tensed nerves twanging in sympathy with the girl's sobbing—like telegraph wires singing in a gale—his mind busy with many thoughts, strangely new and compelling, wearing a fresh complexion that lacked altogether the coloring of self-interest.

He mixed a weak draught of brandy and water and returned to the bedside. She made an effort to rise. The effect was quickly apparent in the color that came into her cheeks, faint but warm. After a moment she asked:

"Please—who are you?"

"My name is Whitaker," he said—"Hugh Morten Whitaker. I didn't want to be known, so registered as Hugh Morten. They mistook me for your husband."

The girl swung to her feet.

"I want to tell you something." She faced him bravely, though he refused the challenge of her tormented eyes. "Won't you listen?"

He crossed to a window, where he stood staring out. "I'd rather not," he said softly, "but if you prefer—"

"I do prefer," said the voice behind him. "I—I'm Mary Ladislas."

"Yes," said Whitaker.

"I . . . I ran away from home last week—five days ago—to get married to our chauffeur, Charles Morton . . ."

She stammered.

"Please don't go on, if it hurts," he begged without looking around.

"I've got to—I've got to get it over with. . . . We were at Southampton, at my father's summer home—I mean, that's where I ran away from. He—Charley—drove me over to Greenport and I took the ferry there and came here to wait for him. He went to New York in the car, promising to join me here as soon as possible. . . ."

"And he didn't come," Whitaker wound up for her, when she faltered. "How much money of yours did he take with him?"

There was a brief pause of astonishment. "What do you know about that?" she demanded.

"I know a good deal about that type of man," he said grimly.

What will Whitaker do with this frail girl on his hands? What would you do in such circumstances?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

There Was a Reason.

Bridges—I wonder how Henpeck came to buy an auto. Do you know?

Rivers—Yes. He said he thought maybe his wife wouldn't be so free to find fault with him after she saw how much trouble he was having with his car.—Judge.

Fernando El Clano, of Santa Rosa, Cal., claims to be 115 years old.

WONDERFUL EUGENIE

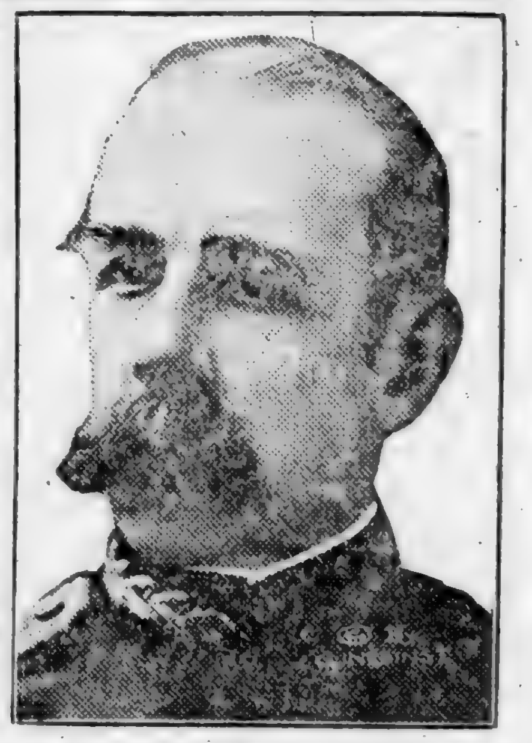
Eugenie, former empress of France, who was once the most beautiful woman in France, is today the most wonderful old lady in the world. Not long since she celebrated her ninetieth birthday. She was born in 1826, 11 years before Queen Victoria came to the throne. Quite recently she made two appearances in London, when many saw her for the first time since her arrival in England as a fugitive from France 46 years ago.

At the age of fourscore years and ten the vitality of the Empress Eugenie is extraordinary. Since the war began she has, of course, discontinued her travels, but up to her eighty-seventh year she took an annual trip in her yacht or on a steamer.

Her majesty must always be occupied. She has the royal mania for building and has wrought great changes at her lovely Hampshire home, Farnborough. If she did not assiduously watch the building works which she orders to be carried out they would not interest her. Nothing is left to chance.

She detests fuss, and overzealous people weary her. She does not want anyone to carry her cloak or her sunshade, being quite persuaded that a lady of ninety can very well do these things herself. At the age she has reached, far from seeking to use up the energies of friends or attendants, she prefers to rely on her own powers. She is the most independent lady of ninety in Europe. Her eye is keen and clear, her voice vibrates, her pen is driven by a steady hand. She astonishes everyone who approaches her. She has a determined and determinate thoroughness for all under her roof, and her servants hold the empress in affection.

NEW QUARTERMASTER GENERAL



Gen. Henry G. Sharpe, who has just been appointed quartermaster general, has had a long and distinguished career.

A native of New York, he was born in Kingston, on April 30, 1858. His family is one of the oldest in the state, having lived there for generations. His father was Gen. George H. Sharpe, a veteran of the Civil war, who was a friend and favorite of General Grant and one of the political leaders of the Empire state.

Under the army bill, which became a law early in 1901, General Sharpe reached the grade of colonel, and upon the promotion of Commissary General John F. Weston in the fall of 1915, succeeded to the chiefship of the subsistence department. Two years afterward he made an extended tour abroad to study the supply systems of the English, French and German armies, where every facility was afforded and every courtesy shown him by the officials of the various countries.

General Sharpe has devoted his life to a study and mastery of the problems of supply, and has been active both as an author and administrator.

DR. JOHN R. MOTT

Three presidents of the United States have honored Dr. John R. Mott of New York, now serving as a member of the Mexican arbitration commission. "One of the greatest men of our generation," ex-President Taft once called him. Colonel Roosevelt, during his administration, publicly expressed his admiration for the work Doctor Mott was accomplishing.

President Wilson, at the beginning of his administration, asked him to accept the post of minister to China, and, when he declined, held the post open for a time and asked friends of Doctor Mott to urge him to accept.

Doctor Mott was born in western New York state fifty-one years ago, was graduated from Cornell in 1888 and immediately gave himself to the student volunteer (missionary) movement. He later became general secretary of the World's Student Christian federation and a year ago general secretary of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian association.

He has traveled around the world in the interest of Christian missions a score of times, and is known as a powerful speaker in the universities of a dozen countries.

Dying By Inches.

It is not an uncommon sight to see people who are dying by inches. The glands of the body are not working properly, poisonous matter accumulates and health declines. The circulation becomes sluggish, the blood impure, and a general nervous or debilitated condition exists. Day by day the liver and kidneys become less active, leaving the poisonous matter within the body. This poisonous accumulation causes the sallow complexion, and a tired, achy or run down feeling which, if neglected, may result in jaundice, typhoid fever or serious liver and kidney trouble. Glando, the great gland tonic, is especially prepared to relieve glandular disorders, throw off the poisonous accumulations and build up the system. Glando, the great gland tonic is the only treatment of its kind upon the market. Its superior qualities are due to the fact that it contains three separate treatments, each treatment having a special part to perform in effecting a cure. For sale by all Dealers.

Rural Church Conference

Comes to St. Joe this Year on November 14-15—The Second meeting Held in this Congressional District.

St. Joe will again have the opportunity of setting forth her best in entertaining the Rural Church Worker's Conference of the 12th. congressional district, of this state, under the direction of Purdue University, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 14—15th., including all the churches of Allen, Whitley, DeKalb, Steuben and Lagrange County. This is the second meeting ever held of this nature in the district, and in fact only one other part of the state has had a meeting under the direction of Purdue. The object of the meeting is to solve the great church problems of to-day that confront so many of the smaller churches. Purdue is doing all that they can to assist the agricultural profession of our state and they have realized that the church and the community are so related that one can not be successful without the other, so they are going to work for the advancement of both.

It is not a denominational affair, but all churches will have representatives here in attendance, which will mean a large crowd in St. Joe for those two days. Rev. J. C. Coons is district chairman of the meeting and he desires that every citizen lend their time and influence in entertaining the visitors at this great meeting. All homes will be expected to assist in lodging the delegates over night and no doubt meals will be provided by some society for the two days. Committees on entertainment, finance, and place have been appointed.

Overcoats, gloves, furs and ear tabs, were made good use of last Friday as we had a real touch of winter weather. Snow flurries all day and a strong wind put one in mind of March weather.

Milo Provines and sister, Miss Neva Provines, were Sunday guests in the S. D. Gee home. The former's wife who has been here visiting her parents for several days returned home with them.

The October Meeting of the W. C. T. U., will be held on Friday afternoon, Oct. 27th., with Mrs. Sylvia Ginther, as hostess. The topic will be "Echoes from the State Convention" by the delegates, Mrs. Anna Tustison and Mrs. Chloe Hart. Will each lady who has the yellow ribbon badges with "St. Joe" on, kindly bring them to the meeting and give them to the treasurer. A good attendance is desired.

Charles H. Bleeks, 28, farmer, DeKalb county, and Ruth Ines Myers, 18, Concord. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. William Bleeks and the bride a daughter of Mrs. Lankey Morr. The wedding took place at the M. P. parsonage at St. Joe, on Saturday evening, Oct. 14, Rev. J. C. Coons officiating. The young couple will live on the Bleeks farm, where a new house has been built for them. Congratulations.

Mrs. R. H. Weamer, of West 5th. Street, Auburn, visited in the home of W. E. Peterson and wife, of this place, from Friday until Monday. Mrs. Weamer is almost as near to Mr. Peterson as his mother, due to the fact that in his young life he was left and he made his home with Mrs. Weamer and her husband, at Auburn. Mr. Weamer was at that time editor of the "Republican" of this county and Mr. Peterson was working on this paper. Mrs. Weamer enjoyed her visit here.

Mrs. Anna Dilley is visiting her son, John Dilley and family, near Waterloo.

Don't forget the Funny Guy, Hallowe'en night; Charley Chaplin at the Movies.

Charles Koch, wife and son Joseph, Joseph Koch, Sr, and Mrs. Anna Baker, all motored to Churubusco, Sunday, and visited R. Koch and wife.

J. Glen Miller and family, of Auburn, spent Sunday visiting relatives at this place and at Newville, before leaving for their new home in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Geo. Morr Killed by Train

On Grade Crossing at Gypsy Hill, 3 Miles East of Butler-- Auto a Complete Wreck—Morr Well Known Here.

George Morr, who is well and favorably known about St. Joe, having been born near Concord, met his death last Thursday evening, about 5 o'clock on the grade crossing at Gypsy Hill, 3 miles east of Butler, while returning with his son from Toledo, where they had gone the day before to take a load of goods from Auburn. The conditions of the crossing here are known to almost all auto drivers, and Mr. Morr and soon took precaution before crossing, stopping at the foot of the hill and listened, hearing no train they proceeded to cross. When they were on the track a fast train struck the car, and Mr. Morr jumped, while the son Ross, who was driving, remained at the wheel.

The boy was knocked senseless and the cries of his father, who was thrown just a few feet from the crossing along side of the track, asking if the youth was killed, aroused Ross, who went to his father's side.

The father was in great pain and kept saying he was dying. Hurriedly, Ross went to a farm house nearby and had the people phone to Butler-for a doctor. A physician arrived about forty minutes after the accident, and Mr. Morr expired shortly after the Butler doctor reached the scene of the accident.

Mr. Morr had his left leg crushed and his hip caved in and he was injured internally. Aside from an ugly bruise on Ross's lower lip and some scratches on top of his head, he had no further injury. It seems a miracle that he escaped. Dr. Farnum, of this place, who had been at Edgerton, was returning home and he came along shortly after the accident. He brought Ross home with him and dressed his wounds and the boy went home on the B. & O. train No. 3, arriving at Auburn Junction at 9:30.

There seems to be some blame attached to the engineer as he never whistled and when he struck the car, he went on through and never stopped. That the parties were careful drivers will not be doubted as their actions upon approaching the track is evidence.

Mr. Morr has lived at Auburn for the past 35 years, running a dray line a long time, and later years he run a store at the Junction and did trucking. The funeral was held Monday.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given, that there will be a meeting of the Quarterly Conference of the St. Joe Circuit Indiana Conference, Methodist Protestant Church, held at the Fairview Church, of said Circuit, on Saturday afternoon, November 4, at 2 o'clock, at which time there will be elected one parsonage trustee for a term of three years in the place of Charles W. Widney, deceased.

News of the Week Cut Down for Busy Readers

European War News

The armed British transports Crosshill and Sedek were sunk in the Mediterranean by German submarines, says an official statement issued by the German admiralty at Berlin.

The Serbians are making a furious drive upon Monastir. After the capture of Brod, says a dispatch to London, the Serbians began moving northward along the left bank of the Tcherne, driving the Bulgarians before them. A battle was fought on Volesselo plateau, in which the Bulgarians were defeated with heavy losses.

A Reuter dispatch to London from Petrograd says that the budget of 1917 submitted to the duma and council of the empire has been framed in view of the probability of the war lasting for the whole financial year. Revenue and expenditure balance at a total of $2,030,000,000.

Extremely turbulent conditions are reported in a dispatch to London from Reuter's correspondent at the Greek capital. Greek reservists have taken the law into their own hands despite the presence of strong entente detachments of French marines.

The largest part of the German trenches west of the road of Eaucourt l'Abbaye-le-Marque, lost to the British on October 18, were recaptured, the German war office announced at Berlin. Three British "tanks" were destroyed by artillery.

That the Roumanians have cut off and destroyed the Teutonic column which, a few days ago, invaded the domain of King Ferdinand by way of the Gyemes Pass, and reached Agas, ten miles within the frontier, is indicated by an announcement from Bucharest.

The Cunard liner Alaunia, bound from New York to Falmouth and London, was sunk by a mine in the English channel. All of the 243 passengers on the liner were landed at Falmouth before the vessel struck the mine, according to officials of the Cunard line at New York. Four of the members of the crew were lost.

German troops took the offensive in Volhynia and captured Russian trenches on the west bank of the Stokhod, it was announced officially at Berlin. Russian attacks near Rubno were repulsed with heavy losses.

On the Somme front the French are again driving toward Peronne. Progress in that section was made by the French and now they are only about a half a mile from this German stronghold, says the official report issued at Paris.

The sinking by a German submarine without previous examination of the Norwegian steamship Sten, is reported to London by Reuter's Copenhagen correspondent. The 16 members of the crew were landed at Christiansand.

The Volks Zeitung of Cologne says: "German submarines will operate in the future in the western Atlantic. They will visit the well-known shipping routes around the eastern point of Nantucket island and will sink British merchantmen after giving the crews opportunity to save themselves.

The Greek provisional government has opened negotiations with the United States, says a dispatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph company at London to secure freedom of action in recruiting Greeks in America.

The official statement issued at Paris says: "North of the Somme we completed the conquest of Sailly-Saillisel and are driving the enemy northwest and northeast of the village."

Domestic

The Ashland limited train on the Northwestern, running from Chicago to Ashland, was wrecked at Manitowoc, Wis. Engineer Robert Fitzgerald was killed and Albert Duchaise, fireman, was hurt. Several persons were hurt. The wreck was caused by someone throwing a switch.

Arion, one-time champion trotter of the world, has been given to Lister Winterspoon of Versailles, Ky., by holders of the estate of the late M. W. Savage, it was announced at Savage, Minn. At one time Arion, now twenty-seven years old, was sold for $125,000.

Wheat continues to go skyward on the board of trade at Chicago and it is freely predicted on the flood that before the month is ended the top notch figures reached during the Leiter year —1898—will be broken. December wheat sold up to $1.69⅜.

The South was rocked by earthquake and swept by storm at the same time. While a tropical hurricane was flaying the gulf coast, earth tremors overturned chimneys and frightened many people from their homes in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. The earthquake did little damage, but a 100-mile wind lifted roofs from houses at Pensacola, Fla. The property loss was estimated at $1,000,000.

UTILITIES COMPANY FILES ITS REPORT

INTERSTATE PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY GIVES NET INCOME AS $123,541.

TOTAL ASSETS $9,762,292.42

Gross Income of Properties, Exclusive of Railways, Was $485,732.57, and the Total Deductions Therefrom Amounted to $362,191.57.

Indianapolis.—The Interstate Public Service company, with headquarters in Indianapolis, and owned by the Insull public utility interests, has filed its annual report with the public service commission of Indiana. The figures relating to its interurban properties form the basis of the report and the total figures for the remainder of its gas, water, heating and electric utilities throughout the state are lumped in the asset columns of the report. The reports for these latter utilities are filed separately.

The company of which Chester P. Wilson is the president, and Bernard Korbly, Democratic state chairman, is counsel, shows total assets of $9,762,292.42 in the report.

Against this book value stands $5,288,000 outstanding capital stock and a total of long-term debts of $4,215,162.63. The authorized capital stock of the company is $8,000,000, according to the report.

The book value of the electric railroads and equipment owned by the company is given as $3,097,139.65, and the miscellaneous physical property other than the railroads (including the many other gas, electric, water and heating properties), amounted to $4,883,628.11. The company owns properties at Shelbyville, New Albany, Seymour, Lebanon, Franklin and other cities and towns, besides its interurban systems.

The company showed a total corporate surplus of $35,023.08. The operating revenues from the railway properties for the year ending June 30, 1916 (the date the report closed), were $446,694.45, and the operating expenses amounted to $244,583.96. Taxes amounted to $15,117.82 for the railway properties and the operating income was $186,992.67. Nonoperating income, in which was included the revenues from the other utility properties owned by the company, amounted to $298,739.90.

The gross income of all the utility properties, exclusive of railways, for the year was $485,732.57, and the total deductions therefrom amounted to $362,191.57. The net income balance, as shown in the report, was $123,541.

Pensions, Patents, Trademarks.

Pensions have been granted Indianians as follows: William O. Trammell, Lafayette, $30, special act; Charles O. Workman, Alfordsville, $6; Alonzo Scudder, St. Paul, $17; Mahala Frazier, Indianapolis, Lizzie J. Scott of Oxford, and Paul F. Busch, Hobart, special act, $12 each.

Patents have been granted Indianians as follows: Frank A. Fahle, Indianapolis, box-blank machine; Joseph J. Giese, Ambia, spike; Marvin W. Holbin, Gary, windmill; William B. Howford, assignor to Dodge Manufacturing company, Mishawaka, conveyor; Frank Kizer, North Terre Haute, can-closure; Charles J. McHugh, assignor to the H. K. Toy and Novelty company, Indianapolis, power-propelled boat; John P. Smith, assignor to Sidway Mercantile company, Elkhart, front axle spring suspension for perambulators; Dennis B. Snyder, Anderson, spring-seat; Joseph Thompson, Hammond, brakerod jaw; Joseph W. Thorp, West Terre Haute, hay retainer; George L. Wiser, assignor to Sidway Mercantile company, Elkhart, side frame of collapsible go-carts, single-motion collapsible go-carts and seat suspension for collapsible go-carts.

Trade marks have been granted: Alonzo Cook, Greencastle, for bottled film cement, to mend moving-picture films; the Mayflower Mills of Fort Wayne, for wheat flour; Sherman White & Co. of For Wayne, for dressed poultry and eggs, and Dudley H. Wiggins of Indianapolis, for war games.

Insanity on Increase.

Delegates to a conference on mental defectives, were confronted with the statement of Dr. J. N. Hurty, state health commissioner, that insanity is on the increase in Indiana. Living under a constant nervous tension and the use of alcohol were named as the two chief causes of insanity. The conference listened to speeches by many prominent speakers. Information given at the conference will be used by a commission appointed by Governor Ralston to prepare legislation for submission to the next legislature.

New Incorporations.

Cutter-Amos company, Indianapolis, has dissolved.

The Century Biscuit company, Indianapolis, has increased its capital stock from $75,000 to $125,000.

The Troy Chair company, Troy, has increased its capital from $12,000 to $24,000.

South Bend Sanitary Milk company, South Bend, has increased its capital stock from $20,000 to $35,000.

National Carbon company, New York, has designated Ralph K. Kane, Indianapolis, as its agent in Indiana.

Indiana Crop Summary.

Conditions throughout the month have been favorable and considerable plowing and fall seeding have been done, although the ground was exceedingly dry in some localities. Indications point to an average acreage of wheat and rye.

The corn crop was slightly damaged by the frost, but considerable of it is badly "down," and the dry weather, together with the high winds, have broken many blades off the stalks, which makes the ensilage somewhat short.

Extreme heat at the filling time injured the oats, and the crop as a whole is extremely light, but of good color. Late returns show a lighter crop than was anticipated.

An excellent season developed a full acreage and a splendid stand of tobacco, and most of the crop was cut under very favorable conditions. A light frost about the middle of September did some damage, but as the greater part of the crop had been cut at that time this was not extensive.

The late potato crop is practically a failure in some sections of the state. Insects and frosts being the principal damaging factors, although the potatoes are unusually small and few in a hill.

The hay crop this year was one of the largest in several years, and it was harvested under the most favorable conditions.

Commercial orchards in all sections of the state will produce a fairly good apple crop this year, while the ordinary farm orchards are practically a failure.

In some sections of the state clover seed is a very good crop, while in others it is nearly a failure. Big English and Mammoth seem to be better than the Little Red, which constitutes a majority of the acreage.

Indianapolis as It Was.

An Indiana Journal of 1828, to be found in the city library, gives an interesting glimpse of Indianapolis in its infancy. It appears that a "visiting committee" of the Union Sabbath school made what we would now call a "survey" of the little capital in the woods. The industrious committee did its work well, and these were its findings:

The population of the town was 1,120, consisting of 570 white males, 511 white females, 19 colored males and 20 colored females. There were 203 families. The vocations of the men were quite diverse. Carpenters led the list as to numbers, there being 20 of these. Then came farmers, 16; laborers, 14; merchants, 9; lawyers, 9; physicians, 8; grocers, 8; shoemakers, 6; bricklayers, 6; wagoners, 6; blacksmiths, 5; tavern keepers, 5; tailors, 4; plasterers, 4; cabinet makers, 3; milliners, 3; hatters, 3; wheelwrights, 3; brickmakers, 3; wagon-makers, 3; ministers, 3; judges, 3; teachers, 3; clerks of courts, 3; justices, 3; saddlers, 3; printers, 2; tanners, 2; millwrights, 2; coopers, 2; barbers, 2; constables, 2; bookbinder, 1; painter, 1; tinner, 1; drover, 1; farrier, 1; weaver, 1; ferryman, 1; watch-maker, 1; artist, 1; governor, 1; secretary of state, 1; treasurer of state, 1; auditor of state, 1; receiver public moneys, 1; register, 1; agent of town, 1; sheriff, 1.

The importations by merchants for the year ending October, 1827, were: Seventy-six kegs of tobacco, 213 barrels of whisky, 200 barrels of flour, 100 kegs of powder and 4,500 pounds of spun cotton. The cost of these was estimated at $5,000 and the cost of private importations as equal to that. The merchants' importation, as thus given, were undoubtedly incomplete, as they carried in stock many articles not included in the list. The disproportionate quantity of whisky and the inclusion of an "artist" call for special note.

Education Committee Reports.

After a survey of many cities in the state, a special vocational education committee, with the approval of the state board of education, has recommended that compulsory education in Indiana be extended to include jurisdiction over every boy and girl until the age of eighteen years is reached. The original compulsory education law of Indiana compelled attendance until the age of fourteen. Three years ago the law was amended to require permission from school authorities for a child to quit school under the age of sixteen. Now the committee recommends that at least five hours' attendance a week in a vocational class be required of every boy or girl up to the age of eighteen. The committee also recommends that schools to prepare children directly for their life work be established in all towns of 5,000 or over.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS.

Indianapolis.—Slowly being choked to death by a grain of corn, five-year-old Sammy Martindale was rushed 53 miles in an automobile to a hospital here. Surgeons removed the grain of corn just in time to save his life.

Peru.—The body of Park Hessong was buried near Bunker Hill, it having been brought from St. Joseph, Mich., where it was found in a canal. It is believed he was murdered by robbers.

Portland.—James P. Goodrich, Republican nominee for governor, spoke here at the corner-stone laying for the new United Brethren church on "The Worth of a Church to a Community."

Jeffersonville.—Through the transfer of 32 inmates to the state prison and the release of others on parole, the number of inmates of the Indiana reformatory has been reduced from 1,350 to 1,265.

Indiana Brevities

Shelbyville.—John Wilder, fifty-five, of Waldron, was covered by earth when a gravel pit near Waldron caved in.

Rushville.—Mrs. James Bebout of Manilla, when visiting Mayor C. L. Bebout, her son, fell downstairs and was hurt seriously.

Newcastle.—Robert Bogue, four, son of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Bogue, was injured severely when a taxicab struck an automobile in which the boy was riding.

Muncie.—Charles Smith, a painter, and his wife, Eva, are under arrest on "blind tiger" charges. It is alleged that they conducted a "kitchen bar" in their home.

Logansport.—Physicians hope to save the life of Glenn Rance, age twelve, whose skull was fractured when the hammer of an overloaded rifle blew off and struck him.

Clinton.—Winfield Rarnall of Cayuga was fined $50 and costs and sentenced to 30 days on the state farm when a jury found him guilty of running a "blind tiger" in Cayuga.

Rushville.—Mrs. Beulah Staples Stevens was admitted to the Rush county bar. She has been deputy county clerk for four years, and she is the first woman to become a lawyer in this city.

Indianapolis.—The state executive committee of the Y. M. C. A. announced that it would keep A. K. Davis, director, at the border with the Indiana National Guard until the guardsmen are sent home.

Muncie.—John Yingling and Howard Richey, riding a motorcycle, were struck by an automobile driven by Lloyd Yount, and both young men were thrown about 40 feet. Their injuries probably are not serious.

Connersville.—Seven Connersville firemen boarded a 100-horse power motor fire truck, made a flying trip ten miles in the country, and arrived in time to save a large barn, house and other buildings from destruction after one small building had burned. City councilmen took steps to give the fire department authority to fight fires in the country districts.

Goshen.—Mrs. H. L. Freiburg of Chicago, who was matron of Goshen hospital, was taken into custody by the sheriff and is being held at the Elkhart county jail here, apparently insane. Mrs. Freiburg visited several Goshen residences and her actions indicated she is mentally unbalanced. Mrs. Laura Fall White of Chicago is now in charge of the institution.

Muncie.—Edward Burt of Eaton, George Fisher, a farmer, and John Moore, among others, reported that a band of gypsies had stolen money aggregating about $50, and about 50 persons near Eaton overtook the band near Mt. Carmel. The gypsies were forced to give up the stolen money and were ordered to leave the community. No arrests were made.

Shelbyville.—Another Hoosier murderer began a life sentence in prison for his crime. Thomas Shaw, forty-four, was found guilty of second-degree murder by a jury here after the jury had voted four times on the question of his sanity and had taken 17 ballots on the question of his guilt. Shaw killed Mrs. Dora Marlin, with whom he was infatuated, and attempted at the time to end his own life.

Hammond.—A government quarantine was slapped on the Calumet Park stockyards in West Hammond and shipment of horses to the allies has been stopped owing to the discovery of a new infectious disease. It is a mouth disease, but not the hoof-and-mouth ailment that terrified stock raisers a year ago. Three hundred and fifty or 400 horses of 4,000 head at the Calumet Park yards are said to be affected with the disease.

Laporte.—A gang of boy bandits, which for months has eluded the authorities of Lake and Berrien counties, has been broken up, according to the police, with the arrest of Joe Vitzler, son of a prominent New Buffalo family. He is said to have involved four other boys and additional arrests are expected. According to the police, the boys have buried two wagonloads of "loot" from private residences and stores in the sand dunes near New Buffalo.

Indianapolis.—The segregation of mentally deficient children in the public schools was urged here at the Indiana conference on mental defectives. Prof. R. R. Johnston said that a test in an Indiana county had shown that nine out of every thousand schoolchildren are mentally defective. No amount of special coaching can keep the mentally deficient child up with his class and he robs the normal child of the teacher's time and reaps no benefit, he said. As a result of the conference a new society known as the State Society for Mental Hygiene will devote its time in the future to the solution of the problem of the mental defective.

Montpelier.—An investigation convinced authorities that the failure of Henry Saunders to understand the crossing signal caused him to drive his automobile directly in front of a Lake Erie freight train, resulting in his wife being ground to death and four other persons being badly injured.

Shelby.—The bodies of W. B. Hincher and his wife of Chicago were found underneath their automobile in a ditch a few miles from this place. The car had turned turtle when the steering gear broke. Death apparently had been instantaneous. The couple had started to Indianapolis from Chicago.

Temperance

WISE WORDS.

"No temperance advocate in the world has spoken wiser words than those uttered by the German emperor to the naval cadets," said Secretary of the Navy Daniels, speaking before the national convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence union. The words referred to, spoken November 21, 1910, at the dedication of the new naval academy at Murvik, are in the light of the events of the past two years most significant. We quote part of the address:

"As you will observe in the course of your time on board, the service in my navy has reached a degree of strain which can hardly be surpassed. To be able to endure this enormous pressure in time of peace without wearing out, so that you may be fresh when a serious call comes, is your duty. The next war, the next naval encounter, will require of you sound nerves. These are undermined by alcohol, endangered from youth up, by its use. You will later have opportunity to see the marine targets and the action of modern guns on ships, and will be able, therefore, to infer the conditions in battle. You will see horrible devastation and all kinds of pictures. Then the word will be strong nerves and cool heads. The nation which drinks the least alcohol will be the winner!"

RUSSIA'S PEASANT BANKS.

"In 18 months of 'water-wagon' life there have been founded 18,000 peasant co-operative banks and 1,000 peasant co-operative supply stations or stores," says Ivan Narodny, secretary of the Russian-American-Asiatic corporation, in the New York Tribune "These peasant banks are just now forming a central administration, a bank of banks, in Moscow, composed of delegates from provincial banks The government has not yet been able to grasp the whole extent of these peculiar institutions of the people, both sporadically and suddenly looming up as something gigantic in national economic life. The cash capital of these peasant banks amounts to 500,000,000 rubles, while the value of their accessories, real estate, securities, etc. reaches 1,000,000,000."

Most of the hatred against the Russian Jew, he tells us, originated in the lending of money by Jews to peasants The peasant banks abolish automatically all Russian Jewish troubles.

"If the czar had done nothing but abolish alcohol," says the secretary, "he would loom up in history as one of the great reformers."

A COMPARISON.

In discussion of a report on alcoholism before the Academy of Science in Paris it was stated that after two generations the posterity of alcoholics becomes extinguished. Statistics were given of 24 families chosen at random, 12 temperate and 12 alcoholic as follows:

	Alcoholic.	Temperate.
Died in infancy	12	5
Deaf and dumb	2	0
Idiots	8	2
Affected by St. Vitus dance	2	0
Epileptics	13	0
Deformed	3	2
Dwarfs	5	0
Hereditary drunkards	5	0
Healthy	9	50

PROVING GOLD BRICKS.

It is authoritatively stated that beer has fallen to fifth or sixth place among the products of the city of Milwaukee. One of the largest breweries in the city has been offered for sale several times in recent years, with no bidders. Another brewery has sold all its stock to holders in England and Germany. The buyers thought they bought a gold mine, whereas they bought a gold brick. The prohibition sentiment which has been sweeping the West has made itself felt even in Milwaukee. It is a fact not generally known that one of the largest breweries in that city is using an assumed name. The real owner doesn't want his own name connected with the business.

CURSE FIRST BREWER.

Who first brewed beer prepared a pest for Germans. I have prayed to God that he would destroy the whole brewing industry. I have often pronounced a curse on the first brewer. All Germany could live on the barley that is spoiled by the brewers. Germany would be much richer than she is if so much beer were not drunk.—Martin Luther.

MUST HAVE BOYS.

A saloon can no more be run without using up boys than a flouring mill without wheat, or a sawmill without logs. The only question is, whose boys—your boy or mine—our boys or our neighbors'.

POWERFUL ARGUMENT.

In all discussions of the liquor question there is one powerful argument on the side of those who favor the prohibition of the liquor traffic, whether the prohibition is applied to a large area or a small one, namely, that the man who opposes the sale of liquor is asking nothing for himself except relief from injury at the hands of the others, while the man who insists upon the sale of liquor is asking something for himself which cannot be granted without injury to others.—Kentucky White-Ribbon.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

SYNOPSIS.

—3—

Young Hugh Whitaker's doctors tell him he has but a few months to live, and his sweetheart jilts him. His friend, Peter Stark, finds him disconsolate and proposes a sea voyage. Whitaker runs away to a strange town and finds young Mary Ladislas, deserted by the man with whom she eloped, about to commit suicide.

> One about to die surely must feel more at ease about his future if he is conscious of having really done some good in the world. And in the scheme of things beyond our understanding perhaps a single big unselfish act—one that saves another from a grievous deed—will balance our million mean little transgressions and leave us with credit on the Big Book. In the installment given here there's a mighty fine story involving just this point.

"I didn't have any money to speak of, but I had some jewelry—my mother's—and he was to take that and pawn it for money to get married with."

"I see."

The girl in her turn went to one of the windows, standing with her back to the room. Whitaker drew a chair for her and took a seat a little distance away, with a keen glance appraising the change in her condition. She seemed measurably more composed and mistress of her emotions, though he had to judge mostly by her voice and manner, so dark was the room.

"Don't!" she cried sharply. "Please don't look at me so—"

"I beg your pardon. I didn't mean to—"

"It's only—only that you make me think of what you must be thinking about me—"

"You've had a narrow but a wonderfully lucky escape."

"Oh! . . . But I'm not glad . . . I was desperate—"

"I mean," he interrupted coolly, "from Mr. Morton. The silver lining is, you're not married to a blackguard."

"Oh, yes, yes!" she agreed passionately.

"And you have youth, health, years of life before you!"

He sighed inaudibly . . .

"You wouldn't say that, if you understood."

"Have you thought of going home? Have you written to your father—explained?"

"I sent him a special delivery three days ago, and—and yesterday a telegram. I knew it wouldn't do any good, but I . . . I told him everything. He didn't answer. He won't, ever."

She bent forward, elbows on knees, head and shoulders cringing.

"It hurts so!" she wailed . . . "what people will think . . . the shame, the bitter, bitter shame of this! I've earned my punishment."

"Oh, I say—"

"But I have, because—because I didn't love him. I didn't love him at all, and I knew it, even though I meant to marry him. . . ."

"But, why—in Heaven's name?"

"Because I was so lonely and . . . misunderstood and unhappy at home. No mother, never daring to see my sister (she ran away, too) . . . my friendships at school discouraged nothing in life but my father to bully me and make cruel fun of me because I'm not pretty. . . . That's why I ran away with a man I didn't love—because I wanted freedom and a little happiness."

"Good Lord!" he murmured beneath his breath, awed by the pitiful, childish simplicity of her confession and the deep damnation that had waited upon her.

"So it's over!" she cried—"over, and I've learned my lesson, and I'm disgraced forever, and friendless and—"

"Stop right there!" he checked her roughly. "You're not friendless yet, and that nullifies all the rest. Be glad you've had your romance and learned your lesson—"

"Please don't think I'm not grateful for your kindness," she interrupted. "But the disgrace—that can't be blotted out!"

"Oh, yes, it can," he insisted bluntly. "There's a way I know—"

A glimmering of that way had only that instant let a little light in upon the darkness of his solicitous distress for her. He rose and began to walk and think, hands clasped behind him, trying to make what he had in mind seem right and reasonable.

"You mean beg my father to take me back. I'll die first!"

"There mustn't be any more talk, or even any thought, of anything like that. I understand too well to ask the impossible of you. But there is one way out—a perfectly right way—if you're willing and brave enough to take a chance—a long chance."

Somehow she seemed to gain hope of his tone. She sat up, following him with eyes that sought incredulously to believe.

"Have I any choice?" she asked. "I'm desperate enough . . ."

"God knows," he said, "you'll have to be!"

"Try me."

He paused, standing over her.

"Desperate enough to marry a man who's bound to die within six months and leave you free? I'm that man: the doctors give me six months more of life. Will you take my name to free yourself? Heaven my witness, you're welcome to it."

"Oh," she breathed, aghast, "what are you saying?"

"I'm proposing marriage," he said, with his quaint, one-sided smile. "Please listen: I came to this place to make a quick end to my troubles—but I've changed my mind about that, now. What's happened in this room has made me see that nobody has any right to—hasten things. But I mean to leave the country—immediately—and let death find me where it will. I shall leave behind me a name and a little money, neither of any conceivable use to me. Will you take them, employ them to make your life what it was meant to be? It's a little thing, but it will make me feel a lot more fit to go out of this world—to know I've left at least one decent act to mark my memory. There's only this far-fetched chance—I may live. It's a million-to-one shot, but you've got to bear it in mind. But really you can't lose—"

"Oh, stop, stop!" she implored him, half hysterical. "To think of marrying to benefit by the death of a man like you—!"

"You've no right to look at it that way." He had a wry, secret smile for his specious sophistry. "You're being asked to confer, not to accept, a favor. It's just an act of kindness to a hopeless man. I'd go mad if I didn't know you were safe from a recurrence of the folly of this afternoon."

"Don't!" she cried—"don't tempt me. You've no right . . . You don't know how frantic I am. . . ."

"I do," he countered frankly. "I'm depending on just that to swing you to my point of view. You've got to come to it. I mean you shall marry me."

She stared up at him, spellbound, insensibly yielding to the domination of his will. It was inevitable. He was scarcely less desperate than she—and no less overwrought and unstrung; and he was the stronger; in the natural course of things his will could not but prevail.

The last trace of evening light had faded out of the world before they were agreed. Darkness wrapped them in its folds; they were but as voices warring in a black and boundless void.

Whitaker struck a match and applied it to the solitary gas-jet. A thin, blue, sputtering tongue of flame revealed them to one another. The girl still crouched in her armchair, weary and spent, her powers of contention all vitiated by the losing struggle. Whitaker was trembling with nervous fatigue.

"Well?" he demanded.

"Oh, have your own way," she said drearily. "If it must be . . ."

"It's for the best," he insisted obstinately. "You'll never regret it."

"One of us will—either you or I," she said quietly. "It's too one-sided. You want to give all and ask nothing in return. It's a fool's bargain."

He hesitated, stammering with surprise. She had a habit of saying the unexpected. "A fool's bargain"—the wisdom of the sage from the lips of a child. . . .

"Then it's settled," he said, businesslike, offering his hand. "Fool's bargain or not—it's a bargain."

She rose unassisted, then trusted her slender fingers to his palm. She said nothing. The steady gaze of her extraordinary eyes abashed him.

They left the hotel together. Whitaker got his change of a hundred dollars at the desk—"Mrs. Morten's" bill, of course, included with his—and bribed the bell-boy to take the suitcase to the railway station and leave it there, together with his own handbag. Since he had unaccountably conceived a determination to continue living for a time, he meant to seek out more pleasant accommodations for the night.

The rain had ceased, leaving a ragged sky of clouds and stars in patches. The air was warm and heavy with wetness. Sidewalks glistened like black watered silk; street lights mirrored themselves in fugitive puddles in the roadways; limbs of trees overhanging the sidewalks shivered now and again in a half-hearted breeze, pelting the wayfarers with miniature showers of lukewarm, scented drops.

Whitaker, taking his heart and his fate in his hands, accosted a venerable gentleman whom they encountered as he was on the point of turning off the sidewalk to private grounds.

"I beg your pardon," he began.

The man paused and turned upon them a saintly countenance framed in hair like snow.

"There is something I can do for you?" he inquired with punctilious courtesy.

"If you will be kind enough to direct me to a minister . . ."

"I am one."

"I thought so," said Whitaker. "We wish to get married."

The gentleman looked from his face to the girl's, then moved aside from the gate. "This is my home," he explained. "Will you be good enough to come in?"

Conducting them to his private study, he subjected them to a kindly catechism. The girl said little, Whitaker taking upon himself the brunt of the examination. Absolutely straightforward and intensely sincere, he came through the ordeal well, without being obliged to disclose what he preferred to keep secret. The minister, satisfied, at length called in the town clerk by telephone; who issued the license, pocketed his fee, and in company with the minister's wife, acted as witness. . . .

Whitaker found himself on his feet beside Mary Ladislas. They were being married. He seemed to hear the droning of the loom of the Fates. . . .

And they were man and wife. The door had closed, the gate-latch clicked behind them. They were walking quietly side by side through the scented night, they whom God had joined together. Neither found anything to say. At the station, Whitaker bought his wife a ticket to New York and secured for her solitary use a drawing-room in the sleeper. Whitaker possessed himself of his wife's hand-bag long enough to furnish it with a sum of money and an old envelope bearing the name and address of his law partner. He explained that Drummond would issue her an adequate monthly allowance and advise her when she should have become her own mistress once more; in a word, a widow.

She thanked him briefly, quietly, with a constraint he understood too well to resent.

Both, perhaps, were sensible of some relief when at length the train thundered in from the East, breathing smoke and flame. Whitaker helped his wife aboard and interviewed the porter in her behalf. Then they had a moment or two alone in the drawing-room, in what was meant to be their first and last parting.

She caught him suddenly by the shoulders with both her hands. Her eyes sought his with a wistful courage he could not but admire.

"You know I'm grateful . . ."

"Don't think of it that way—though I'm glad you are."

"You're a good man," she said brokenly.

He knew himself too well to be able to reply.

"You mustn't worry about me, now. You've made things easy for me. I can take care of myself, and . . . I shan't forget whose name I bear."

He muttered something to the effect that he was sure of that.

She released his shoulders and stood back, searching his face with tormented eyes. Abruptly she offered him her hand.

"Good-by," she said, her lips quivering—"Good-by, good friend!"

He caught the hand, wrung it clumsily and painfully and . . . realized that the train was in motion. He had barely time to get away . . .

He found himself on the station platform, stupidly watching the rear lights dwindle down the tracks and wondering whether or not hallucinations were a phase of his malady. A sick man often dreams strange dreams. . . .

A voice behind him, cool with a trace of irony, observed:

"I'd give a good deal to know just what particular brand of foolishness you've been indulging in, this time."

He whirled around to face Peter Stark—Peter quietly amused and very much the master of the situation.

"You needn't think," said he, "that you have any chance on earth of escaping my fond attentions, Hugh. I've fixed it up with Nelly to wait until I bring you home, a well man, before we get married; and if you refuse to be my best man—well, there won't be any party. You can make up your mind to that."

CHAPTER IV.

Willful Missing.

It was one o'clock in the morning before Whitaker allowed himself to be persuaded; fatigue re-enforced every stubborn argument of Peter Stark's to overcome his resistance. "Oh, have your own way," he said at length, unconsciously iterating the words that had won him a bride. "If it must be . . ."

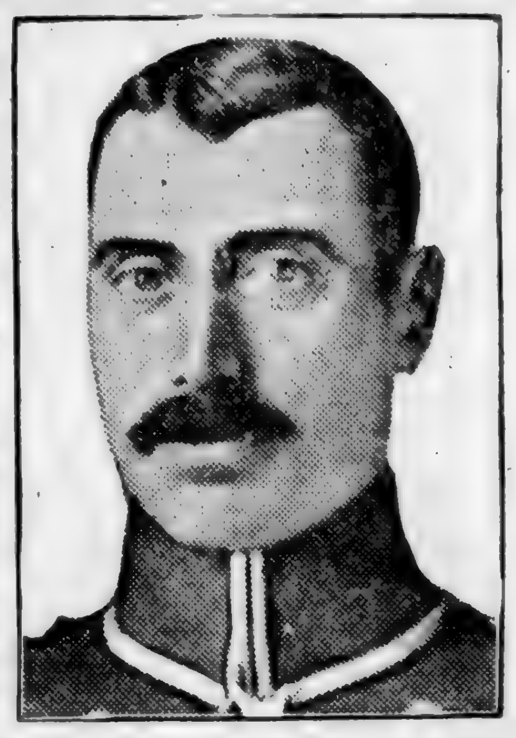
> Whitaker has consented to go seafaring. But his mind is on the girl he has just married. What do you think he will do now?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Excess of Speed.

The motor car shot down the hill at the speed of an express train, and then overturned, pinning the driver beneath it. The village policeman approached pompously. "It's no use your hiding under there," he said sternly, to the half-smothered driver. "You were exceeding the speed limit, and I must have your name and address."

EUROPE'S JOLLIEST KING



The jolliest king in all Europe is Christian X of Denmark. He is far removed from the Hamlet immortalized by Shakespeare. Hamlet was a morose sort of person who lost himself in philosophy. Christian, with the lungs of a giant, can bawl out a music-hall ditty with all the lustiness of a Copenhagen stevedore.

Christian can pull an oar, swing a racket, jump a hurdle, sail a boat, ride a horse, empty a bottle, and make a speech. He is the most popular man in Denmark.

The king is a giant in stature. There is a joke in Copenhagen, first cracked by a jovial Dane, that when the king gets cold feet in December, he doesn't begin to sneeze till May.

In his youth, the present king of Denmark spent some time in a Jutland garrison, and made himself extremely popular with the civil and military functionaries by his politeness to their wives and his friendliness to their sons and daughters. He was—as he still is—a fine dancer, and many stories are still current in Jutland of the democratic manner in which he tripped the light fantastic with pretty peasant girls on Midsummer's eve. He is a little more sedate, now that he is king.

TINKHAM'S SIGNATURE

George Holden Tinkham is a bachelor congressman from Boston, noted for having the most horrible signature in congress.

When he signs his name it suggests the signature of a careless hen dashed off hastily in a radish bed. Only once in his life has Tinkham written his name in a way that made it even half legible. That was when he prepared a sample signature for the purpose of having a facsimile made to go on his official envelope. Tinkham worked for more than an hour on that. And when he got through it was no more like his regular handwriting than if he had hired a stranger to do it for him.

Aside from his chirography, Tinkham seems to be all right. There are persons who claim to be able to read character from handwriting. Such a person would put Tinkham down for a dissipated yeggman. But he would do the man a grave injustice. The reason Tinkham writes the way he does is because he is eager to get at something else. He is a brisk chap; always in a hurry. Nothing distresses him so much as a slow train, or, in fact, any slow means of transportation.

Tinkham's habit of doing things at high speed includes getting dressed in the morning. He dresses in such haste that he never knows just what he has on until hours later. As a rule, though, his sartorial layout includes a red necktie. He will wear a red necktie every day for two or three months and then suddenly he will appear in one that is bright green simply because he found the green one first.

WILL DRIFT TOWARD POLE

© CLINEDINST

Capt. Robert A. Bartlett, companion of Peary on the trip when the latter, with a negro, reached the North pole, announced he has pledges of $85,000 for a new project in the arctic regions. He proposes to let a ship be frozen up in the arctic region and then drift toward the pole across a part of the earth never before explored.

"I desire to superintend the construction of a wooden vessel of about 350 tons, especially for arctic work," he said. "We would start in May, 1918, northward through Bering strait; go eastward off the northern coast of Alaska to about 130 west longitude, and latitude 74 or 75, or even farther north; let the vessel freeze up and go with the ice drift through the great unexplored arctic regions. There are more than 1,000,000 square miles of unexplored territory in the Arctic ocean. I would take only eight men with me on the trip, preferably young college men. While we drifted we would take soundings and use a deep-sea dredge to gather the flora and fauna from the floor of the ocean. Instead of regular steam engines and boilers, requiring the consumption of coal, I will install a Bollinger crude-oil engine, thus doing away with the necessity of engineers and firemen.

"From my knowledge of the arctic regions and the currents of general drift of the ice, I should say that we would drift for about five years before reaching civilization again, but we might do it in three years."

A Descriptive Letter

Of Trip Through Pennsylvania Taking in the Many Great Sights

Lynnport, Pa., 10-19-'16.

Dear Editor of The News:—

Mrs. Sechler has given you a description of our trip so I will give a little miscellaneous description of what we have seen since our arrival.

We were out to the slate quarry and saw them take out great slabs of slate and elevate it into a building where they split it into thin pieces and then passed it through another machine that finished it for roofing. There is ano her factory here in Lynnport we want to see where they make fancy things from slate and veneer it something that makes it look like marble. We also visited a shoe factory and a large knitting mill where they run eighteen knitting machines at one time, everything done by electricity even cut the garments, twenty-five thicknesses at a time which means twenty-five garments. The work in the shoe factory was done by electricity also, nothing slow. Lots of business in the towns down here there are so many different kinds of factories and mills, some towns have two or more silk mills, some are very large ones.

This country is a very good place to dispose of farm products at high prices. Over in Skuylhill county where we spent about two weeks the farmers nearly all have market wagons and take their farm products to the mining towns where they get high prices for everything. The soil seems to be very productive, corn crop is good in most places. There is an abundance of apples and I never saw so many pear trees just loaded, the fruit is of very good flavor. The farmers here in Lehigh county are great potatoe raisers, one place we visited they had twenty-five hundred bushels ann ever so many places they have over a thousand bushels. When they first began shipping potatoes sold at 90 cents a bushel but now they are $1.27, and they are not very anxious to sell as they are holding for better prices.

We are having a fine time and seeing something new to us nearly every day. The mountain scenery is beautiful, beyond description, with various tints of autumn leaves among the evergreen trees that cover the mountains. The largest mountain we have crossed was six miles, when we reached the top it looked like a large scope of nice level land and was covered with huckleberry bushes, our friends that took us across said it was a huckleberry farm and the berries were shipped from there by the car load. We crossed the mountain in an automobile. There was a state road built across the mountain which was as nice a road as I ever rode over, I don't know how long it is but we rode over it for several miles on either side of the mountain. All the main traveled roads are good wherever we have been. We have been in Birks, Skuylkill, Carbon and Lehigh counties, and from here we expect to go westword to Washington, D. C, and then home.

Respectfully Yours,
Mrs. Byron Widney.

"TIZ" FOR ACHING, SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

Goods on Approval

By DR. SAMUEL G. DIXON
Commissioner of Health of Pennsylvania

It is the custom with many firms to send certain classes of goods to their customers' homes on approval. If they are not satisfactory the prospective purchaser has the privilege of exchanging them. Obviously it is impossible for the salesman to know what conditions are in the house where such goods go, who handles them and how they are tried or examined. The possibility of spreading communicable disease is very real.

When new things go into a home, curiosity and interest is naturally aroused in all the members of the family. Children and adults join in the examination.

Of course where there are cases of communicable disease which have been reported and quarantined no goods are delivered on approval. There are often cases of disease, however, in the early stages unrecognized or so mild in form as to make it seem unnecessary to call a physician. Into these homes merchandise is delivered without question.

Modern salesmanship is far removed from the sharp barter of earlier days and fair dealing and honest representation are recognized as necessary foundations for success. Sending goods on approval however, is carrying things so far that it may result in harm to the purchaser.

Snails Are Easy to Raise And Make Nutritious Food, States a British Authority

"All snails are edible and nutritious," said Canon Hersley in a book on British land and fresh water molluscs, just published. He goes on to say that even the common garden snail, though insipid, is as nourishing as calf's foot jelly.

There is a large white-shelled snail called Helix pomatia that is commonly eaten by connoisseurs in the south of England, while all over France, Italy and Spain several species are used as food. In France there are many small snail farms which yield a good profit to their owners. In the French and Italian quarters of New York snails may be bought, either alive or cooked, and at most of the French restaurants they are served "escargots farcis" being the most usual form of the dish.

Snails are easy to raise in large quantities. They need lime for making their shells, but they do not have to be fed, as they can find their own food, which is the leaves of many plants. They eat nothing else.

In Society

The R. H. C. of Coburntown entertained the C. C. Club of Spencerville, at the pleasant country home of B. E. Widney and wife, on last Thursday. In spite of the bad weather 23 of the Spencerville ladies were present and in all over 40 were present. The dinner was a pot luck and a great variety of good things were placed upon the tables. Mrs. Cannon gave a short reading at this time telling the guests just how they would be able to find their chair at the table. The house was very tastefully decorated with autumn leaves and the club colors. A portiere of apples added considerable to the decorations, which were afterwards found to be placed there for a part in the entertainment. Games of different sort had been prepared for the entertainment. The apples were used as follows:—The rule of the contest was that no person was allowed to touch the apples with their hands, and the tall person was to try and bite the low apples and the short person the h gh apples. This of course was amusing and at one time it looked as though someone had committed suicide. During the laughter and excitement, one of the contestants lost her false teeth on the string, and then there was no chance for the captain to control the crowd. Other contests were given. Mrs. O. L. Widney, of Hicksville, was a guest.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have bladder trouble—Take glass of Salts.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Result of Straw Vote

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Patterson were very pleasantly and completely surprised Tuesday night when the Lutheran Sunday School Class, of which they are both members, met with them and gave them a farewell reception before they left on their visit to their daughter, Mrs. Helen Hull, at Colorado Springs, Colo. The class met at Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bowman's before going to the Patterson residence excepting Mesdames C. R. Price and C. T. Bayman, who went on ahead to see that Mr. and Mrs. Patterson did not get away from home. After all had gathered a program was given as follows: Piano solo, Miss Ina Shorden; Talk by J P. Buckingham; Vocal solo, Mrs. Frank Bowman; Reading, "An Old Man's Story" Mrs. C. R. Price. Mrs. Frank Tustison conducted an interesting Bible game but perhaps that which caused the most amusement was the straw vote taken; the result being out of 19 votes cast were: Wilson 5; Hughes, 6; and Hanley, 8. A fine pot luck supper was served, and at a late hour the company left for their various homes wishing Mr. and Mrs. Patterson a safe and enjoyable journey. Those present were:—Ray Reasoner and wife, Clare Hull and wife, John Ulm, wife and son, C. T. Bayman and wife, Frank Tustison and wife, Frank Bowman, wife and daughter Eloise, Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price, Miss Ina Shorden, J. P. Buckingham and S. W. Tustison.

BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin inside bathing. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your pharmacist a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach disorder should begin this inside bathing before breakfast. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

It's Grandmother's Recipe to keep her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Another Letter.

Ray Zimmerman, of Spencerville, writes his parents a few lines, of which we reproduce for the benefit of his friends:

ElPaso, Texas, Oct 15.

Dear Parents:—

I received your letter this a. m., and was sure glad to hear from you. We arrived back in camp Friday morning, all are O. K., and feeling fine. To-day we got another supply of clothes, consisting of shirts, leggins, pants, overcoats and hats. We are expecting a call at any time to move home. The Captain said, that we would be in Ohio in two weeks. This certainly sounds good, although we are getting so we like it down here now. The climate is fine, and we all are getting fat. I remain,

Your son Ray.

Child Dies In West

Theron Foltz received the sad news of the death of his neice, Geraldine Foltz, the 18 month old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Foltz, formerly of the County Line but now of Texas, near Logan, Okla., of cutting teeth followed by spasms, on Oct. 12. She leaves to mourn her departure the parents, two brothers and many relatives. On account of the distance the little one was laid to rest on Texas soil. The family left last fall to spend a year in that locality and will return home before long.

NEW INFERNAL MACHINE

This is a new infernal machine, for use in warfare, invented by a street car man of San Francisco. The cylinder contains poison gas and 100,000 rounds of shrapnel. It is said a number of foreign governments are bidding for the device.

Explosive Property of Dust.

The inflammability or expensive property of the dust is a matter of degree, depending on purity, fineness, dryness, quantity, volume of air and many other conditions. Coal dust increases the violence of an explosion when present with a small percentage of firedamp, and under certain conditions it is capable of initiating and extending an explosion by itself. In the opinion of A. M. Henshaw, as given in royal commission evidence, coal-dust explosions are generally the result of irregularity or carelessness in the use of explosives or safety lamps. If the ignition of firedamp thus caused can be prevented he thinks the dangers of coal-dust will be minimized.

Strength of Paper.

From an examination of various papers prepared with different proportions of rags, sizing and loading, it appears that the mechanical properties are improved by increasing the proportion of rags. Resin sizing diminishes the strength, while animal sizing increases it. An increase in the proportion of rags, also sizing of any kind, enables a larger proportion of loading material to be retained by the paper. Loading decreases the strength of all papers, the percentage of loss approximating 2.2 times the percentage of loading material.

GARAGE MADE PART OF HOUSE

Many Reasons Why That Plan Is Becoming Popular With Builders.

MAKES FOR GREATER SAFETY

Little Danger That Expensive Machine Will Be Stolen While It Is, So to Speak, Under Owner's Eye.

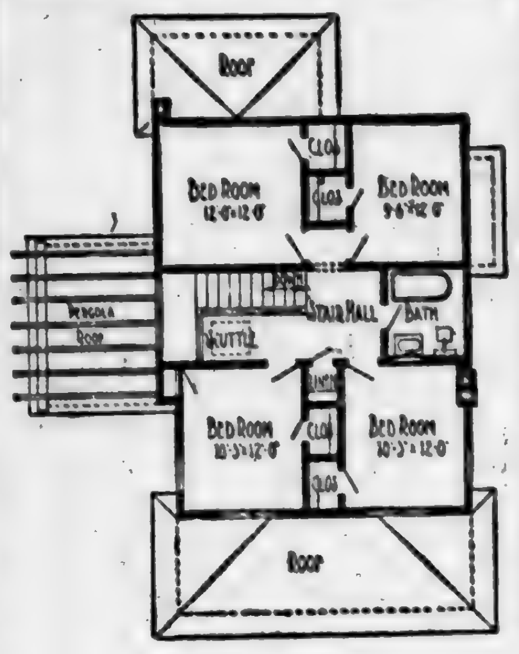
By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Now that the automobile is becoming more and more a necessity rather than a luxury, the question of providing a garage is receiving more attention than it was given during the early days of the "horseless carriage." The man who has spent a considerable amount of money on an automobile does not feel satisfied with placing it in an old barn or shed. If the lot on which his house is built will allow enough space it is easy to build a garage which will harmonize with the design of the house. The man who uses the automobile usually has his architect include a garage design in the plans for his new home.

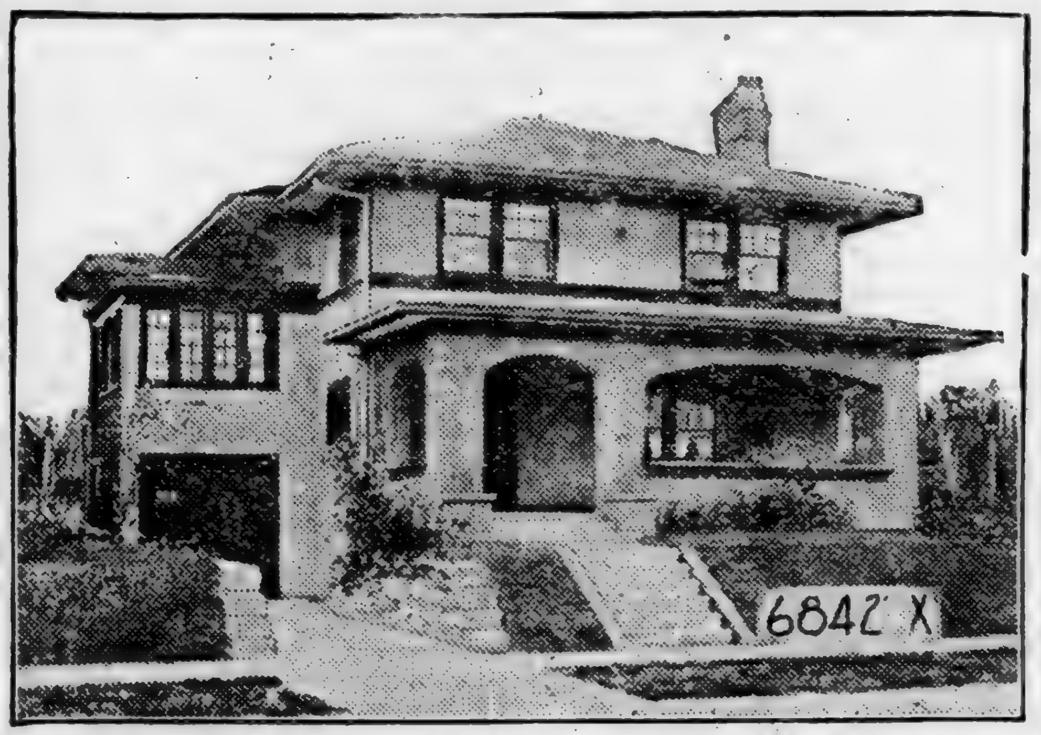
Although the detached garage has many advantages, there are also several reasons why a garage which is built as a part of the house may have special advantages in some cases. Since such a garage may be entered from the house it is a very handy place to have the automobile located. This feature is of special importance during rainy or cold weather, when the car is dry and warm when it is needed. There is greater safety in keeping this expensive machine in a part of the house than can be had if it is housed in a detached building. If an electric vehicle is used and the garage contains battery recharging equipment, it is much easier to keep the batteries in good condition at all times, if it is not necessary to go out of the house to attend to it. The added equipment is also property which should be given protection from theft. It might be imagined that a garage built as a part of the house would greatly increase the fire risk. There is undoubtedly a possibility of fire around highly combustible material such as is used as fuel for the gasoline or steam car and the electric wiring required for the electric vehicle sometimes is responsible for fires. Most fires caused from these sources may be traced directly to carelessness and there are numerous ways of safeguarding the building. Gasoline stored in an underground tank cannot cause a fire, and this method of storing the fuel is the most sensible from every viewpoint. Carefully installed electric wiring, safeguarded by fuses against excess current and insulated physically and electrically from the building cannot cause a fire. The garage may, in addition, be made fire-resisting by carrying up the walls in concrete and covering all woodwork with cement plaster. The garage, properly built, is really no more to be dreaded than the kitchen.

It is usually a rather difficult problem to design a house with a garage attached which will have a satisfactory appearance. Since the garage does not require a great deal of headroom and yet it must be placed at least down to the grade line, it is necessary to build some part of the house above it. The question becomes centered in what part of the house may be built above the garage without causing a disturbance in the room arrangement. A separate room is usually the best solution since the floor level does not coincide with either the first or second floor of the main structure, as a rule. This fact is usually taken advantage of and the staircase is built to connect with the room above the garage, eliminating a landing between the first and second floors and saving a great deal of space in the stairway. The use to which the room may be put is more or less limited by its peculiar position, but there are enough uses for the space to warrant its being made a part of the house. The space is peculiarly adapted to a sun parlor, sewing room or den.



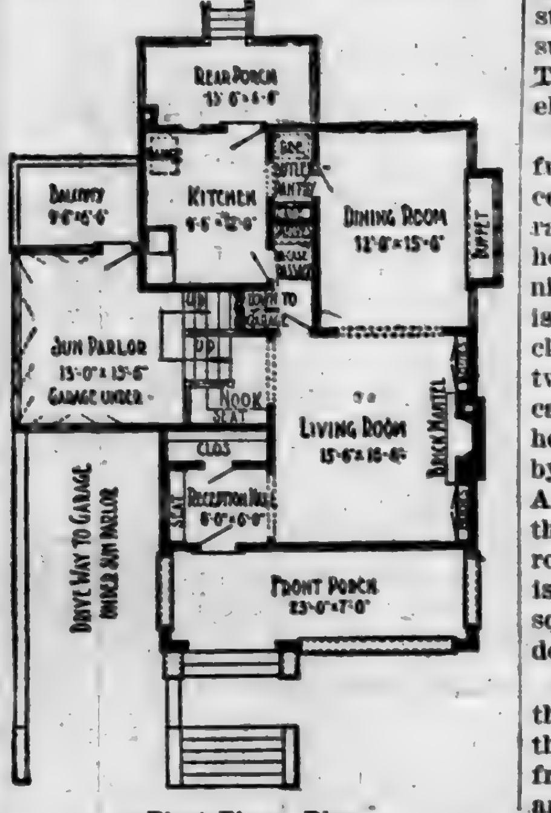
Second-Floor Plan.

In the illustrations a design is shown which makes the garage a part of the house and utilizes the space above the garage for a sun parlor. The house is built upon a terrace and the driveway, leading to the garage, is brought straight in at the sidewalk level, allowing only enough slope to provide good drainage.



The entire house and garage are finished in stucco with dark wood trim. Low arch type construction is used in the porch and all roofs are built as flat as is consistent with good construction. A pergola roof above the sun parlor adds a note of distinction. The entire exterior is impressive and elegant.

The details of interior finish are fully in keeping with the general excellence of the design, and the room arrangement is all that the particular home-builder could ask for in convenience and elegance. The reception hall is fitted with a seat and has a wide closet handily located. The opening between this hall and the living room is cased. The entire side wall of the house in the living room is occupied by the fireplace and two bookcases. A wide cased opening at the rear of the living room leads to the dining room. The Buffet in the latter room is built below four windows, in a square bay. There are five other windows in the room.



First-Floor Plan.

The sun parlor is five steps above the living room and the seat built into the nook just inside the cased opening from the living room is a very pleasant detail. The garage is entered from a passage between the living room and the kitchen. Between the kitchen and the dining room is the butler's pantry. The opening on the kitchen side is cased and on the dining room side there is a double-acting door.

The stair from the sun parlor leads to a stair hall on the second floor. All rooms on this floor open from the hall. There are four bedrooms, all provided with generous closet space, and a bath. All rooms on this floor are well lighted and full height. The house is intended for a rather large family or it may be used to a very good advantage by people who are in the habit of inviting guests for extended visits. There is an abundance of room on each floor and the many special features which have been incorporated into the design are sure to leave a good impression with anyone who might have the opportunity to examine the house carefully. The design is an excellent example of one method by which the garage may be made a part of an attractive house without taking anything from its attractiveness.

Want Hens in English Parks.

In the hope of saving a large part of the $40,000,000 spent every year for foreign eggs, an agitation is on foot to throw open London parks for poultry breeding. The scheme is receiving serious consideration from the authorities because it is one of the latest wartime economies suggested on a large scale. The promoters of the idea have asked for part of one park to start with. The plan provides for a site of about three acres and accommodation for 600 hens. The leading poultry breeders of the country will be invited to send six selected fowls of the same breed and strain. Scientific feeding tests are to be made. All the eggs will go to the wounded soldiers, and prizes will be awarded to the owners of the hens laying the most eggs.

WHY STRIVE TO KILL TIME?

If Annihilation Were Possible the World Would Remain Just Exactly as It Is Today.

There are so many gentle proverbs devoted to the praise of Time, that it is wonderful to think how, in our day, that comely Titan has come to be regarded by the most of us as our worst enemy.

We are forever scheming how to forereach him, to get the better of him, even—in the extravagant phrase of the speed-at-any-price maniacs—to annihilate him.

Those, to be sure, fail to see how the consummation of their ideal would leave them exactly at the point from which they started.

Even the forty minutes girdle round about the each, if achieved, would soon exhaust the excursive potentialities of existence; and, unless science is prepared to deal triumphantly with the problem of pentrating and breathing atmosphereless space, one fails to see what the world would gain through a perfected system of aeroplanes but the taedium vitae in its final and quite incurable form.

Oldtime Musical Watch.

An extraordinary timepiece has come into the possession of a jeweler living at Chillicothe, O., who is said to have got it on a recent visit to London. It is a watch of the antique class, made in Paris 125 years ago at a time when musical watches were much in vogue among the well-to-do classes. It is a fine specimen of the handmade article, and besides playing beautiful melodies strikes the hours and quarters. The dial is noteworthy on account of its hare and exquisite enamel work on beautifully chased gold. It is looked upon as a curio of great value.

Parson—Good morning, Mr. Skinner. I was pleased to see you contribute to the missionary collection this morning.

Skinner—Yes, I gave a nickel.

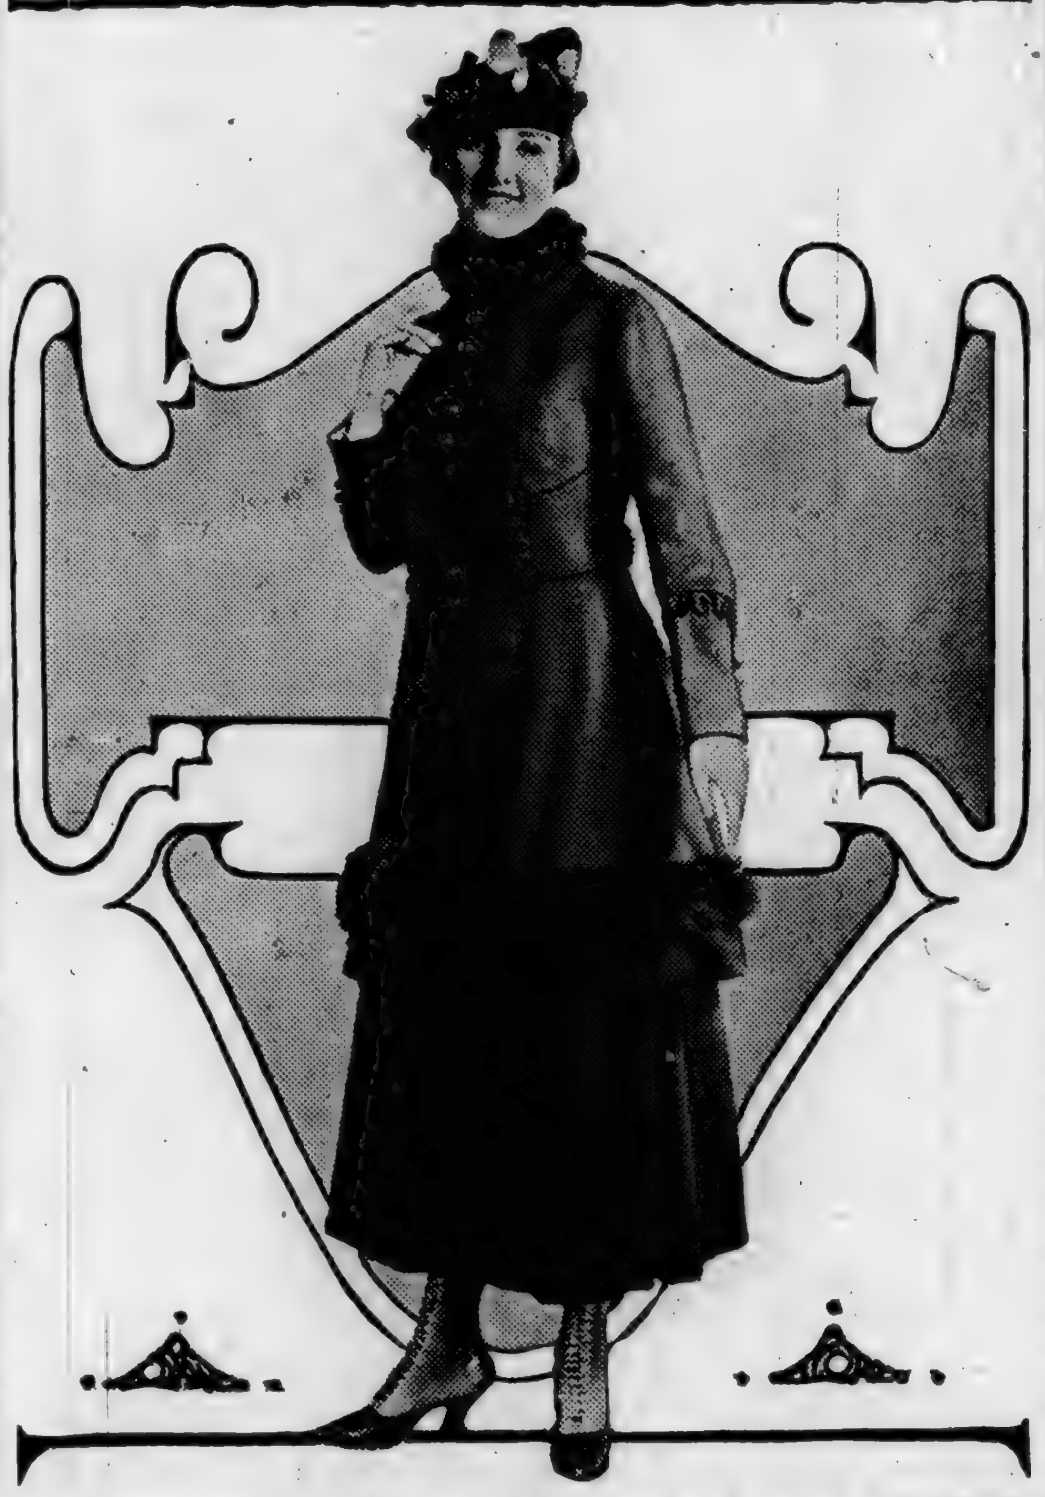
"There's a Reason"

Attractive Fur-Trimmed Suit



The combination of cloth and fur in suits never grows tiresome, and this accounts for the fact, in part, that furs are soaring in price. Certainly they are much higher than they were, and furriers appear to enjoy imparting to us the bitter truth, when they assure us that they will never be cheaper. If you are going to consider fur as a trimming you must reconcile yourself to paying a stiff price.

But it is not so difficult to pay the price for a suit as attractive as that shown in the picture. Besides, the skunk fur used on it is one of those which furriers describe as "hard" and is very durable. It will outlast several seasons' wear, and the likelihood is that each year it will be worth more than it was the year before.

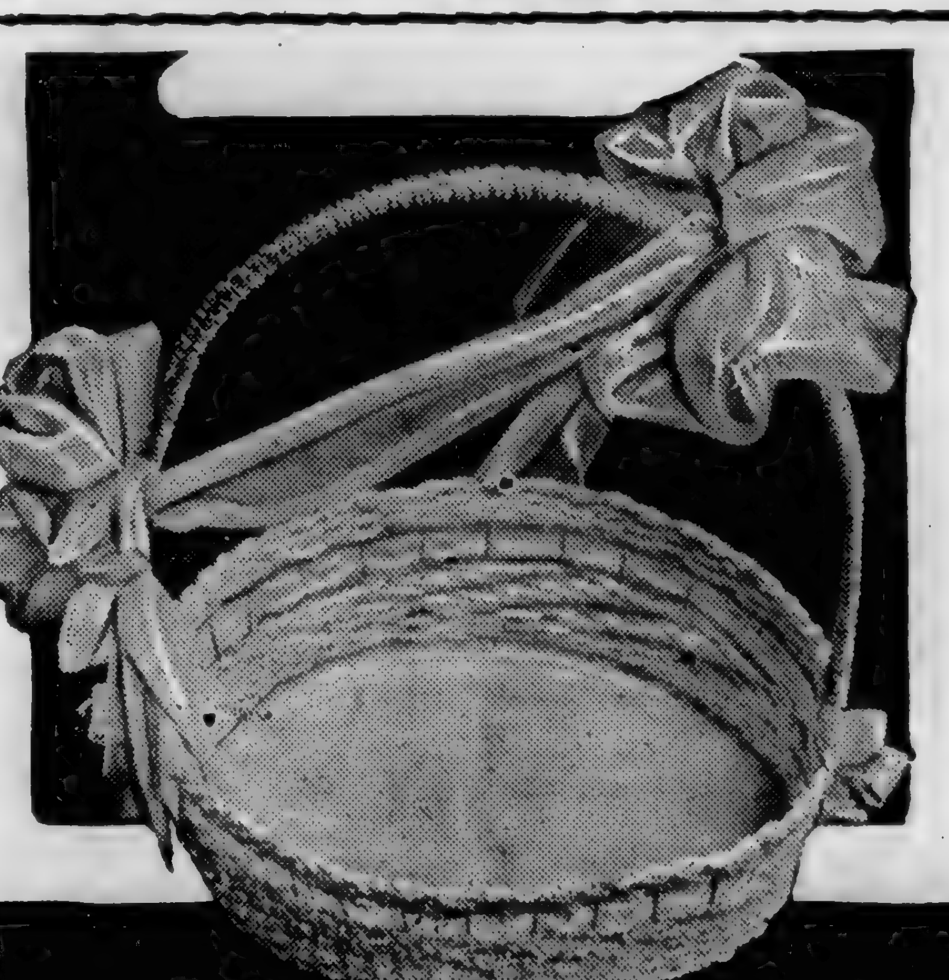
The suit pictured is of wool velours in a dark green, and the skunk banding is almost black. The coat is a beautiful model semifitted and cleverly cut. There are small, shaped emplacements of the material at each side of the front, set on at the waistline. They are machine-stitched to place, with two rows of stitching, and finished with silk braid made into two round ornaments at the end of a short spiral design.

A similar design in braid appears at the top of the deep cuffs. The buttons are set in groups of three down the front and on each cuff there are three in a smaller size. There are two large fur-covered buttons at the back.

The ever present turnover collar for once is lacking in this model. A standing collar of velvet is banded with fur a little below the top edge and the fur band about the coat follows its example by finding its place away from the bottom edge. It is set above the hem.

Dark skunk fur looks well with all colors and every material used for the suits of the present season.

Basket Made of Paper Rope



Women are just learning how many pretty things for the house can be made of paper rope. They are weaving baskets and trays, vases, lamps and lamp shades, jardeniers, and other things of this easily handled and inexpensive material. It is sold at the paper dealers and is nearly always chosen in brown or green or white. The white can be painted any color to match decorations or woodwork.

All these things that are fashioned from paper rope are made over wire foundations. After a basket or any other object has been finished, it is varnished with shellac. This gives it a good finish and adds to its durability.

The basket for toilette articles (which might be used for almost any other purpose) which is shown in the picture, is made of white paper rope and is woven with a proper space on the foundation left uncovered.

This space is meant to accommodate the narrow satin ribbon in rose color that is strung through it. After the weaving of the basket is finished it is painted with white paint, or white and another color. When the paint is dry the whole surface is varnished with shellac.

When the ribbon has been strung in it is tied in a full bow at the base of each handle. Just to add to its ornamentation, the handles of the basket provide support for two full rosettes of gauze ribbon with a length of ribbon extending between them. Such a dainty and refreshing object might be used for serving cakes at five-o'clock tea.

The bottom of the basket is a circular piece of thin wood and is covered with colored milk. A doily is to be placed over the silk if the basket is to be used for serving cake wafers, etc.

Julia Bottomley

Crepe de Chine Negligee.

If you are accustomed to receiving your family and girl friends in your bedroom, you will want a dainty negligee. The handsomest of these are expensive when bought ready-made, but you can make one of these for a few dollars and in a few hours from crepe de chine, china silk, flowered silk, mulle, albatross or cashmere. You can make it empire in style, with a bolero made of the same material or of lace. A slightly large armhole adds to the comfort. A negligee requires about five yards of material and a little more than a yard of lace.

Pockets continue in vogue, and many of them are embroidered with colored woods or beads.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 29

THE VOYAGE.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 27:1-38.

GOLDEN TEXT—Commit thy way unto Jehovah; trust also in him, and he will bring it to pass.—Ps. 37:5.

Paul sailed from Caesarea August, A. D. 59 (Ramsey), a few days after his address before Agrippa. He reached Malta about November 15. Paul knew how to meet mobs, but none of his adventures are more outstanding than the one we are studying today. Luke, his physician, was a companion, and the historian, Josephus, states that on board the ship there were more than 600 people traveling with Paul. Paul was a man of distinction, a Roman citizen. He had his own hired house in Rome. Aristarchus may possibly have been his servant to furnish comfort for the journey. Ramsey believes Paul had received hereditary property, thus making him a Roman citizen of rank, of learning and of standing financially.

I. Fair Weather and Contrary Winds (vv. 1-12). Sidon was about 70 miles north of Caesarea on the coast of Palestine. Here Paul received liberty to go ashore and visit his Christian friends. Myra is in Asia Minor. It requires 14 days to reach this point from Sidon, a distance of about 400 miles. Here, instead of going up the Aegean sea route, often used in going to Rome, the centurion found a grain ship bound from Alexandria to Italy, and put his prisoners on board. September 1 they started for Italy. The direct course would have been westward, but the wind was contrary, and the progress was slow. On the 23d they were opposite Cnidus, the southwest point of Asia Minor, 130 miles from Myra. September 25 they entered the harbor of Fair Haven, near the middle of the south shore of the island of Crete. The fast day, October 5, the day of the great atonement, was observed in this place. The question of going farther was a debatable one, yet the commander persisted, and about the 10th of October they sailed for Fair Haven.

II. The Hurricane (vv. 13-20). Taking advantage of a gentle wind they put out of Fair Haven, and almost immediately encountered the hurricane. It was perhaps hard for Paul during those 14 days to discern the wise, gentle hand of God. (Jonah 1-4). God's most faithful servants do not always find smooth sailing. (Phil. 4:6, 7; Isaiah 26:3; John 16:33), but they may, no matter how fiercely tempest tossed, know that God has not ceased to look upon them with favor. Sometimes the best thing for us to do, when thus tempest tossed, is "to lighten the ship" (v. 18).

III. The Message of Cheer: "I Believe God" (vv. 23-26). Neither sun nor stars having shone for many days, and all hope that any should be saved seemingly taken away, yet God is able to save in the darkness as well as in the sunshine, in the tempest as well as in the calm, and there was in that boat one man at least whose hope was not gone, for God had said to him, "Thou must bear witness at Rome also" (23:11). Paul's message of cheer in the midst of this despair and after they had been so long without food, immediately stamped him as a leader of wisdom and power.

Paul could make this promise because "an angel of God whose I am and whom I serve" had come to him and assured him that God would redeem the promise made two years before. This implies that Paul had given himself to prayer. Observe how one godly man can save many ungodly men (Gen. 18:22-33). God's vision came to Paul, but Paul used it for the comfort and cheer of the whole ship's company (II Cor. 1-4). A modern illustration of a similar experience was that of Mr. Moody and General Howard, returning from Europe on the steamship Spree in 1892.

General Howard relates that Mr. Moody did a great deal to cheer the passengers, by both his words and his actions, during those days of stress and storm. The darker and stormier the night, the more likely are the angels of God to appear if we are in deed his (v. 23: Cf. Ch. 18:9-23:11).

Sometimes these angels stand beside us and we do not see them, we are taken up with the darkness and the howling of the storm. It is a great thing to be able to look up to the infinite God and say, "I am his." To make this statement intelligently, and with a deep realisation of its meaning will give significance and solemnity to all.

IV. Paul, the Life Saver (vv. 27-37). Paul did not stop with simply saying that God was his, but went on to say, "Whom also I serve." Many say they are God's but do not prove it by their lives of service. Paul loved to think and speak of himself as the servant of God (Rom. 1:9; II Tim. 1:3; Titus 1:1). Some of the sailors thought to launch the boat, leaving the passengers to their fate.

All the hurricanes that ever struck the sea or the ships of the sea could not prevent the fulfillment of God's promises, and Paul fully accepted the significance of God's word "fear not."

English Learning Other Languages.

The English have never been distinguished in the past as linguists, their own mother tongue answering their requirements, commercially, intellectually and otherwise. Their insularity in this respect is disappearing, however, and two anonymous donors have each given $5,000 to Leeds university, one gift being for the development of the Russian language and literature, and the other as an initial endowment to found a chair of Spanish.

Cardui Wins Suit.

After a trial in the United States District Court of Chicago, before Judge Carpenter and a federal jury, the jury found the American Medical Association guilty of libeling Cardui, the woman's tonic, which they had denounced as a "nostrum."

This is a vindication of the medicine and a proof that it has merit, which was recognized by a jury after a trial of three months, one of the longest civil cases on record.

Many doctors and chemists testified on both sides and the evidence totaled nearly four million words.

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND DON'T KNOW IT

Weak and unhealthy kidneys cause so much sickness and suffering and when through neglect or other causes, kidney trouble is permitted to continue, serious results may be expected.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys should have attention first because their work is most important.

If you feel that your kidneys are the cause of your sickness or run down condition commence taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because if it proves to be the remedy you need and your kidneys begin to improve they will help all the other organs to health.

Prevalency of Kidney Disease.

Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalency of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are among the most common diseases that prevail, they are almost the last recognized by patients, who usually content themselves with doctoring the effects, while the original disease constantly undermines the system.

A Trial Will Convince Anyone.

Thousands of people have testified that the mild and immediate effect of Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized and that it stands the highest for its remarkable results in the most distressing cases.

Symptoms of Kidney Trouble.

Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you suffer from annoying bladder troubles, frequently passing water night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment, headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, poor digestion, sleeplessness, nervousness, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood, neuralgia, rheumatism, lumbago, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, may be loss of flesh or sallow complexion, kidney trouble in its worst form may be stealing upon you.

Swamp-Root is Pleasant to Take.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at all drug stores.

SPECIAL NOTE—You may obtain a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root by enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. This gives you the opportunity to prove the remarkable merit of this medicine. They will also send you a book of valuable information, containing many of the thousands of grateful letters received from men and women who say they found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed in kidney, liver and bladder troubles. The value and success of Swamp-Root are so well known that our readers are advised to send for a sample size bottle. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

Dying By Inches.

It is not an uncommon sight to see people who are dying by inches. The glands of the body are not working properly, poisonous matter accumulates and health declines. The circulation becomes sluggish, the blood impure, and a general nervous or debilitated condition exists. Day by day the liver and kidneys become less active, leaving the poisonous matter within the body. This poisonous accumulation causes the sallow complexion, and a tired, achy or run down feeling which, if neglected, may result in jaundice, typhoid fever or serious liver and kidney trouble. Glando, the great gland tonic, is especially prepared to relieve glandular disorders, throw off the poisonous accumulations and build up the system. Glando, the great gland tonic is the only treatment of its kind upon the market. Its superior qualities are due to the fact that it contains three separate treatments, each treatment having a special part to perform in effecting a cure. For sale by all Dealers.

VOL. XXX ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY NOV. 2 1916 NO. 45

Purdue has Big Program

In Its Efforts to Better the Rural Conditions of Indiana Would Re-habilitate the Country Church.

In the last decade there has been a great rural awakening which, we trust for shadows a better day for the country church and a better adaptability of its activities to the needs of the people. It would not be fair to close our eyes to the problems confronting the rural church and we cannot hope to succeed in helping it unless we are awake to its difficulties but what we need now most of all is a larger vision of its opportunities. It has many splendid possibilities which only need developing to make the country church one of the strongest factors in the progress and development of our social unit.

After years of faithful toil for the improvement of rural conditions in our great state of Indiana, Purdue University has come to see that the rural church is an important factor through which they must work. The country church is vitally linked to the progressive welfare of the rural centers.

In view of this fact the rural pastors of the state were invited to meet at the university one year ago last May and again last May, to consider their many problems. At each of these meetings a large number of ministers were present and these conferences proved to be very suggestive and helpful. But that the benefit of these conferences might be brought more directly to the people another plan was developed. Last December, under the direction of Purdue University, a Rural Church Workers Conference comprised of all the churches of the Twelfth Congressional District of Indiana was held in Auburn.

This Conference was so successful and so helpful to those who attended that it seemed to be the unanimous desire to have another such conference this fall. A part of the report of the Committee on Resolutions which was carried by an enthusiastic vote was as follows: "Realizing the importance of constructive welfare work in the rural communities. Be it resolved, That we the representatives of the rural communities of the Twelfth Congressional District now in session, mark with satisfaction the policy of Purdue University in seeking to re-habilitate the country parish and express our appreciation for the workers assigned to this Conference and plans for success. Resolved, That a time and place be decided upon for a second conference and that a committee of three be appointed to have the matter in charge.

Rev. John C. Coons, of St. Joe; Rev. W. S. Oberholtzer, of Harlan, and Rev. Henry Janes, of Orland, was named as said committee.

Esteeming the fact that their work is being appreciated Purdue is again giving its hearty support and another conference is being arranged for to be held in St. Joe, DeKalb County. The University is furnishing the speakers and a strong program is being arrange.

The rural churches of this district are to be congratulated that they will have this help from this great institution and that this conference will be held in their midst so that they can attend it with so little expense to themselves. This is a work in which every one should be interested and all the rural churches should co-operate by electing delegates and the rural pastors by bringing the matter before their people and planning to attend themselves.

FRANK BALTZ, CANDIDATE FOR SHERIFF ON DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

In order that the voter may know something about the candidates for whom he wishes to vote the following is offered for your consideration:

Frank Baltz was born south of Spencerville, 36 years ago, and practically all of his life has been spent around Spencerville and St. Joe. That part of the county always was and has been his home until he came to Auburn three and one-half years ago to assume the duties of deputy sheriff.

In starting out in life it was his ambition to be a teacher in the public schools of the county and to gratify his desire and qualify himself to fill this position he acquired a good education and for twelve years taught school in the townships of Keyser, Concord, Spencer and Newville.

During his term as Deputy Sheriff he has had full charge of the clerical department of the sheriff's office and the examination of books by the state board of accounts, has shown every penny properly accounted for and the important work of the office without error, being capable in this particular, he has always shown himself efficient and ready to the call of duty outside of the office and has proven himself such an officer of the law as the citizens of the county may point to with pride. He is genial and pleasant in his disposition, but firm in the discharge of his official duties and has made friends by the score in every nook and corner of DeKalb county.

FRANK BALTZ

Mr. Baltz is in the race WITHOUT ANY "POLITICAL STRINGS" TIED TO HIM WHAT-SO-EVER, AND WHEN ELECTED WILL HANDLE THE OFFICE IN THAT MANNER, also he comes to you as just a plain farmer, teacher, and his lofty ideals and character qualifies his independant action in all matters pertaining to the sheriff's office and certainly makes him a safe official to tie to. "IF YOU DON'T HAPPEN TO KNOW FRANK, ASK YOUR NEIGHBOR."

To Have Lecture Course.

As has been our custom in St. Joe for the past few years to have a Lecture Course for the winter, we will not fall short this year, as the High School is taking hold of the proposition and a four number course has been bought. The course ticket will be sold for 80 cents and the money will be used by the school in purchasing equipment which is greatly needed, due to the large number of scholars this year. Every patron of the schools should patronize the enterprise. A complete account will be given as to the nature of each number in THE NEWS as they are about to appear. First attraction Thursday Evening, Nov. 9.

PARCEL SALE.

The Parcel Post Sale given by the Ladies of the Concord Church will be on Thursday evening, Nov. 9, at the church. Everyone is invited to come and make a purchase.

DISAPPEARS FROM INDIANA LANDSCAPE

HOOSIER LOG SCHOOLHOUSE IS NOW A THING OF THE PAST.

SOME DISGUISED BY BOARDS

First Log School Probably Was Opened at Vincennes in 1793—Records Show There Were 1,305 of Them Way Back in 1863.

Indianapolis.—The log schoolhouse has at last disappeared from the Indiana landscape. The centennial year may be taken as marking that exit.

It has disappeared; it has not ceased to exist. The reports from 92 counties two years ago showed the state had four log schoolhouses. The centennial year survey made by Charles A. Greathouse and his assistants in the department of public instruction shows only two buildings under the "log schoolhouse" column.

These two are in Clark county, but they have passed out of the picture, for the logs are hidden by weatherboarding outside and lath and plaster inside. They are decidedly less primitive in appearance than hundreds of other schoolhouses in Indiana. Only the people in the neighborhood would know that within their walls are the relics of education's birth in Indiana. It may be that if some old schoolhouses in Harrison, Dubois and Perry counties which reported log schoolhouses a decade ago, were torn down, another log schoolhouse or two, long since passed from the scene and recollection, would be revealed.

The log schoolhouse was the cradle of education in Indiana. Just when it first rocked no one exactly knows, though the first log school probably was opened in Vincennes in 1793. The teacher was M. Rivet, a refugee from France, who brought out of the turmoil of France of the Louis and Marie period the polish of the polite world to the crude frontier, and in a log setting tried to impart it to the new-world pioneers.

The second school, possibly the first entirely separate from any church influence, was in a log building within a few miles of where the last two hidden log structures are today. The school was opened at Charleston, Clark county, in 1803.

These may not have been the first schools, though a research by H. M. Skinner a decade ago, indicates that they were. It is, however, certain that the log schoolhouse was the birthplace of the common-school system—and, in fact, of all education—in Indiana. The school did not make a formidable appearance until about a century ago. One of the early schools was opened by Mr. and Mrs. John Dumont, at Vevay, in 1812. Possibly the first school in the Whitewater valley was opened in Fayette county in 1821. The first school in northern Indiana probably was the "log school," opened in the stockade at Fort Wayne.

The log schoolhouse held its own pretty well through the forties and the fifties. In 1863 there were more than 1,300 log schoolhouses. Then it began to droop.

The following tabulation brings the record up to 1900:

Year.	Stone.	Brick.	Frame.	Log.
1863	64	510	5,699	1,305
1868	74	592	6,906	834
1872	88	877	7,568	547
1875	92	1,235	7,753	227
1880	85	2,189	7,298	73
1885	82	3,988	6,663	48
1890	83	6,114	3,693	14
1899	82	4,711	5,184	6

These are the totals of state recapitulations. Obviously they are somewhat defective, but they indicate the rapid road to oblivion that the log school traveled when the sawmills and brick factories opened and were properly manned after the war.

Century's School Work.

Charles A. Greathouse, state superintendent of public instruction, has made public a centennial statement summing up the educational advancement in Indiana for 100 years. Mr. Greathouse's statement, in part, follows:

"The school year of 1916-1917 marks the close of the first century of education in Indiana, and the opening of a second century.

"The last century has witnessed the extension of a common school education from the select few to the masses. It has seen the rise of the free public elementary schools, the replacing of the seminary and academy by the high school, the organization and development of all these schools through carefully worked-out courses of study, improved school buildings and better trained teachers.

"No longer is the course of study confined to the teaching of the three R's alone, but these fundamental subjects have been intensified and vitalizer and the horizon of the child's education enlarged by the introduction of such subjects as music, drawing, physical training and practical arts.

"Health is a most important asset in a successful life, and the public schools have become, with the homes, guardians of the children's health, and provision has been made for medical and dental inspection, for the erection of school buildings with light, heat and ventilation properly furnished. Periods of recreation, satisfactorily equipped playgrounds and other regulations for promoting the health and physical development of children have been made a part of the school system.

"The higher state institutions of learning, whose place in a successful scheme of education was recognized at the writing of our first constitution, now rank among the best in the country, while many private colleges and universities are doing excellent work in the development of higher education and in the training of teachers.

"When we regard the simple crude beginnings of the public schools in the state of Indiana 100 years ago, and consider the great work in education that is now being carried on in the state, the program of a century seems phenomenal.

"The weeks that mark the close of the first century of Indiana as a state in the Union have been scenes of interesting and beautiful pageants. The people of today have been living in the past and have had vivid pictures of how our schools were founded and developed and how they are serving the people at the present time.

"But with all the things that the educational past has accomplished and that the educational present is bringing about, we have a great work that the early years of the new century must inaugurate, if the public schools of Indiana give the largest service to the people, the taxpayers, of the state.

"We have not been able to hold in our elementary schools all boys and girls until the course was completed. Large numbers have dropped out, unable to adjust themselves to the requirements of the schools and unequipped for any line of efficient work.

"More than 50 per cent do not go beyond the elementary schools, and of those who do, only a small number in many schools complete the high school course.

"Our work for a few years will be a readjustment to these needs, a modification of our schools and outlines of work to meet industrial demands. The teaching of agriculture, manual training and domestic science in the elementary and high schools must be made as effective as the teaching of any other subject. Through these subjects boys and girls will be taught how to do as well as to know. They will begin to see a purpose in life and have occupational interests before they have a chance to drift into lines of work for which they have neither interest nor ability.

"The high school must be made a truly American high school that will offer such profitable study and manual work as will induce every boy and every girl not only to enter but to continue throughout the course. Our colleges and universities will modify their entrance requirements to suit the qualifications of the graduate of the American high school, who can think logically, has habits of industry and can carry a proposed project to completion, even if he has not covered a certain number of pages in a textbook or pussued a particular course of study."

New Incorporations.

Bloomington Home Telephone company, Bloomington, has dissolved.

Knox County Home Telephone company, Vincennes, has dissolved.

Daviess County Home Telephone company, Washington, has dissolved.

Bloomington Country club, Bloomington; social; directors, W. E. Showers, L. B. Rogers, Logan Coombs.

McNally-Peck & Co., North Judson; capital, $10,000; realty; directors R. D. McNally, C. L. Peck, Earl F. Reaman.

Board Favors Change.

J. G. Collicott, superintendent of schools, has received notice from the members of the state board of education assuring him they have approved his recommendation for a change in the Saturday institute law, making attendance at Saturday institutes optional instead of mandatory.

Mr. Collicott explains that the law works hardships on school boards as well as on teachers, who are paid on a contract basis instead of by the day. He says school boards are required to pay as much as $200 for speakers when engaged in advance.

Teachers in the Indianapolis schools are little concerned over the proposed basis of 200 working days, and as the actual teaching days total only 187, the ten institutes they must attend in the school year are regarded as paid for in their contract.

Reports received by Mr. Collicott show that Anderson, Evansville, Laporte, Michigan City and Wabash are the only cities which wish to continue holding institutes. East Chicago, Elkhart, Frankfort, Fort Wayne, Huntington, Inidanapolis, Kokomo, Lafayette, Lebanon, Marion, New Albany, Muncie, South Bend and Terre Haute have expressed a desire to discontine the institutes.

Kokomo and Wabash have shortened their school terms because of institutes, and Wabash has refused to pay high-school teachers for attending institutes. Fort Wayne is the only city in the state which refused to recognize the law.

Leads in Honey Production.

Indiana, in the last few years, has made great strides as a honey-producing state, and, according to reports made to the state entomologist, F. N. Wallace, by the three salaried bee inspectors he employs, this year has been a banner one in the amount and quality of the sweet. The estimates are that about 200,000 colonies of bees are kept in the state. The average yield this year has been 50 pounds of good honey to the colony, making the total amount of honey produced in Indiana approximately 10,000,000 pounds.

Indiana Brevities

Hagerstown.—Mrs. A. C. Walker fell at her home here and suffered a fracture of her right leg near the hip.

Elkhart.—Dorothy, five, daughter of J. J. Collier, died after an operation for the removal of a tin tube three-quarters of an inch in diameter that had lodged in her throat two hours before.

Bedford.—William Reynolds, seventy-five, a farmer, was injured by an enraged bull that attacked him at his home near Fairview. He was thrown into a pile of stone, suffering severe wounds about the head.

Laporte.—The annual conference of the Indiana School Superintendents' association closed here. Paul Van Riper of Laporte was elected president and B. J. Llewellyn of Mount Vernon secretary and treasurer.

Terre Haute.—Henry H. Tunnicliffe and A. Jackson pleaded guilty in the circuit court to the robbery of the Sandison hotel several weeks ago, and were sentenced to from one to eight years each in the Jeffersonville reformatory.

Bloomington.—Mrs. Joseph Finley probably will die from injuries resulting from her attempt to commit suicide. The woman, sixty years old, poured gasoline over her clothes and applied a match. Neighbors saved her from burning to a crisp.

Greencastle.—Robert L. O'Hair, former president of the Indiana Bankers' association, suffered a broken leg and other injuries when his automobile went into the ditch. He was returning from the bankers' banquet at Indianapolis.

Franklin.—The case of Gilbert Peck, colored, of Indianapolis, charged with murder, has been continued. Peck was indicted by a Marion county grand jury, March 25, for the murder of James Gray. The case came here on a change of venue.

Clinton.—Charley Hood of Highland killed Will McCarty of Hillsdale at Hood's home with a shotgun after an argument over politics, it is said. Hood was arrested and taken to Newport. McCarty's widow and a son, his mother, five brothers and four sisters survive.

Princeton.—Mrs. Sarah Youngman celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday anniversary. Mrs. Youngman was born in Princeton and still lives here. She has three children, William Carpenter and Miss Katherine Youngman of Princeton and Mrs. Emma Schmoll of Evansville.

Jeffersonville.—Leroy Holley and Perry Earhart have been returned to the Indiana reformatory from the hospital for the criminal insane at the Indiana state prison. Both were sentenced for petit larceny, Holley from Indianapolis, April 17, 1900, and Earhart from Terre Haute, October 21, 1910.

Evansville.—The eighteenth annual meeting of the Ohio Valley Medical association which was to have been held in Evansville November 15 and 16, has been postponed until November 22 and 23 by George M. Young, president, because the dates conflicted with the convention of the Indiana Real Estate association here.

Shelbyville.—Dr. George B. Grose, president of DePauw university, spoke to the teachers of the Shelbyville public schools. He said he "believes the only cure for the Mexican troubles lies in a thorough education of its 15,000,000 people along lines of democracy." His subject was "The Relation of Schools to Democracy."

Hammond.—Mrs. Alma Smart, manager of a hotel owned by Frank Peyton, a former minister, died at St. Margaret's hospital here. Peyton and the woman had an argument over the administration of hotel affairs and Peyton fired at her five times. One of the bullets struck James Allen, employed at the hotel, and he will also die.

Oxford.—Mr. and Mrs. Conrad H. Zeis celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. They were married in Evansville and moved at once to Lafayette, where Mr. Zeis was in the grocery and bakery business. In 1868 Mr. Zeis moved to Oxford, where he has been in business since, being now the oldest active merchant in that part of the state. Their children, Edward L. Zeis of Oxford, Charles F. Zeis of Greencastle, Mrs. Bloom of Oxford and Mrs. George Morris of Bloomington spent the day with them.

Laporte.—An automobile stolen from John Verrey of Niles, Mich., was recovered here while Clifford Brown, twenty-one, of Medaryville, who ran away with the car, is in jail. Verrey had nearly a thousand dollars in his pocket. He confessed to the police that he had made several attempts to steal cars in Michigan towns and that when he got away with Verrey's car he expected to tour the country and spend his money having a good time. It developed that Brown is the black sheep member of a wealthy family in the Indiana town.

Warsaw.—Fred Hoover and Earl Wakefield, two boys who escaped from the Kosciusko county jail, were captured in a woods near Claypool by Sheriff Jacob D. Huffer and a posse after a long hunt and spectacular chase. Hoover was sentenced to the Boys' school at Plainfield and Wakefield was released.

Logansporrt.—Mrs. Anna Humphrey, twenty-four, wife of Lee Humphrey, died under mysterious circumstances at her home here. She ran from the house screaming for aid, and then ran into the house next door, where she died in convulsions.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

HEAT PROSTRATIONS.

At the request of a well-known medical journal, Dr. Karl Meyer and Dr. Harry Gauss, both of the Cook county hospital, Chicago, made a study of the causes of heat prostration. Their report is based on an examination of 155 cases taken to the hospital during three days of July, and shows that "a case of heat prostration without an alcoholic breath is a rarity."

Doctor Gauss questioned 25 patients suffering from heat stroke. All but two had drunk some alcoholic beverage during the day. The 23 confessed to libations from one bottle to one gallon of beer, besides stronger drinks. Most of the victims admitted the habitual use of intoxicants.

Doctor Meyer's statement, as quoted by the Chicago Tribune, is that "99 per cent of our cases were directly or indirectly due to alcohol. Beer and booze have two effects. They increase the bodily supply of heat and they lower the power of resistance. The heat regulating center in the brain becomes deranged and the almost inevitable result is prostration. If it weren't for alcohol these people probably wouldn't have been here. If alcohol was taken out of the world, I believe the number of cases of all kinds at the county hospital would be reduced by half. After what I've seen in this hospital I don't understand how any doctor can sanction its use."

PROHIBITION HELPS.

T. J. Greer, president of the Louisiana State Federation of Labor, declares that the wages of every craft in Shreveport has steadily increased since the city went dry. "The reason we have been able to organize so successfully here," he says, "is because the liquor interests have been removed from union politics." Senator Richard Jones of Duluth, for 14 years a union labor man, furnishes the following significant data:

In 1908 the city of Shreveport, La., voted dry.

Since Shreveport went dry, the membership in labor unions has increased from 1,800 to 3,700.

Since Shreveport went dry, union labor men owning homes in that city have increased 40 per cent.

Under the wet regime the single brewery in Shreveport employed six nonunion brewery workers.

Under the dry regime that same brewery has been turned into an ice plant and employs 40 union ice makers.

"A LITTLE DRUNK."

The story is told that Kaiser Wilhelm needed a chauffeur and a big, strong young man applied for the position. He passed a rigid mechanical examination. Physically, he appeared perfect.

"Do you drink?" asked the lord chamberlain.

"I take a glass once in a while, your highness," answered the chauffeur.

"You won't do."

"But, my lord, I am no drunkard," remonstrated the chauffeur.

"I understand," said the lord chamberlain, "but you drink a little and the man who drinks a little is a little drunk. He who runs the machine that his majesty, the kaiser, rides in, cannot risk being a little drunk in his hands or in his eyes."

BEER CAUSES IMMORALITY.

Beer is a drug which deadens will power and excites the animal instincts of the young. In plain English, a master who allows his pupils to drink beer, and a parent who sanctions it, says to them: "I give you beer, well knowing that it will blunt your intellect, deaden your conscience and diminish your will power, and at the same time it will excite your animal instincts."—Dr. Clement Dukes, Physician to Rugby School, England.

JAIL EMPTY.

For the first time in 20 years, the Florence county jail is empty. Not a prisoner is housed within its walls. This is a most unusual condition, and Jailer Bryant scarcely knows how to occupy his time. He has taken advantage of this opportunity, however, to have a general cleaning up, and has had every cell scrubbed from ceiling to floor. He says the emptiness of the jail at this time is due largely to the scarcity of liquor.

DECREASE IN CRIME.

The district attorney's office in Denver reports 50 per cent decrease in criminal cases; Pueblo's commissioner of safety, 140 per cent fewer arrests than during the corresponding months of 1915. Both give prohibition the credit.

GRAIN FOR LIQUOR.

Only about two per cent of the five leading grain crops of the country is used for the manufacture of liquor.

Under prohibition the mill will need 100 per cent of all the grain the farmers can raise.

UNEXPECTED GAIN.

The Denver Gas and Electric Light company looked for a loss of about $15,000 a month, due to the loss of saloon trade, but, to its surprise, made a gain of $10,000 in the first dry month.

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

HOW THE STORY GOES

Hugh Whitaker is told, after a diagnosis by eminent surgeons, that he cannot live longer than six months. His sweetheart jilts him. The double blow stuns him. Peter Stark, his friend, proposes a South sea voyage on Stark's yacht. Whitaker consents, but runs away to a country hotel with the intention of committing suicide. He surprises Mary Ladislas, daughter of a rich and hard New Yorker, in the act of drinking poison and stops her. She has been deserted by the man with whom she had planned a clandestine marriage. Whitaker marries the girl to save her good name, gives her money and immediately puts her on a train for home. He turns—and walks into Peter Stark's arms. "No more foolishness," says Stark. "You've got to go sailing with me." The sick man shrugged wearily: "All right," he replies. "Have your own way." What happens next is told in this installment. You'll find it mighty interesting.

Beyond drawing heavily on his bank and sending Drummond a brief note, Whitaker failed to renew communication with his home. He sank into a state of semi-apathetic content. The Adventuress was five months out of port before he began to be conscious that he was truly accursed. There came a gradual thickening of the shadows that threatened to eclipse his existence. And then, one day as they dined with the lonely trader of an isolated station in the D'Entrecasteaux Islands, he fell from his chair as if poleaxed. He regained consciousness only to shiver with the chill of the wind that's fanned by the wings of death. It was impossible to move him. The agonies of the damned were his when, with exquisite gentleness, they lifted him to a bed. . . .

Stark sailed in the Adventuress before sundown of the same day, purposing to fetch a surgeon from Port Moresby. Whitaker said a last farewell to his friend, knowing in his soul that they would never meet again. Then he composed himself to die quietly. But the following morning brought a hapchance trading schooner to the island, and with it, in the estate of supercargo, a crapulous Scotch gentleman who had been a famous specialist of London before drink laid him by the heels. He performed a heroic operation upon Whitaker within an hour, announced by nightfall that the patient would recover, and the next day sailed with his ship to end his days in some abandoned Australian boozingken—as Whitaker learned in Sydney several months later.

In the same place, and at the same time, he received his first authentic news of the fate of the Adventuress. The yacht had struck on an uncharted reef, in heavy weather, and had foundered almost immediately. Of her entire company, a solitary sailor managed to cling to a life-raft until picked up, a week after the wreck, by a tramp steamship on whose decks he gasped out his news and his life in the same breaths.

Whitaker hunted up an account of the disaster in the files of a local newspaper. He read that the owner, Peter Stark, Esq., and his guest, H. M. Whitaker, Esq., both of New York, had gone down with the vessel. There was also a cable dispatch from New York detailing Peter Stark's social and financial prominence—evidence that the news had been cabled home. To all who knew him Whitaker was as dead as Peter Stark.

"There is a world outside the one you know
To which for curiousness 'Ell can't compare;
It is the place where wilful missings go,
As we can testify, for we are there."

Kipling's lines buzzed through his head more than once in the course of the next few years; for he was "there." They were years of such vagabondage as only the South Seas countenance; neither unhappy nor very strenuous, nor yet scarred by the tooth of poverty. Whitaker had between four and five thousand dollars in traveller's checks which he converted into cash while in Sydney. Memory of the wreck of the Adventuress was already fading from the Australian mind; no one dreamed of challenging the signature of a man seven months dead. And as certainly and as quietly as the memory, Whitaker faded away; Hugh Morten took his place, and Sydney knew him no more, nor did any other parts wherein he had answered to his rightful name.

The money stayed by him handsomely. Thanks to a strong constitution in a tough body (now that its malignant demon was exorcised) he found it easy to pick up a living by one means or another. Indeed, he played many parts in as many fields before joining hands with a young Englishman he had grown to like and entering upon what seemed a forlorn bid for fortune. Thereafter he prospered amazingly.

When at length he did make up his mind to go home, he was in Melbourne with Lynch, his partner. Whitaker passed old friends in the street. They were George Presbury and his wife—Anne Forsythe that was—self-evident tourists, looking the town over between steamers. Presbury, with no thought in his bumptious head of meeting Hugh Whitaker before the day of judgment, looked at and through him without a hint of recognition; but his wife was another person altogether. Whitaker could not be blind to the surprise and perlexity that shone in her eyes, even though he pretended to be blind to her uncertain nod; long after his back alone was visible to her he could feel her inquiring stare boring into it.

The incident made him think; and he remembered that he was now a man of independent fortune and of idle hands as well. After prolonged consideration he suddenly decided, told Lynch to look out for his interests and expect him back when he should see him, and booked for London by a Royal Mail boat—all in half a day. From London Mr. Hugh Morten crossed immediately to New York on the Olympic, landing in the month of April—nearly six years to a day from the time he had left his native land.

He put up at the Ritz-Carlton, precisely as any foreigner might be expected to do, and remained Hugh Morten while he prowled around the city and found himself. Now and again in the course of his wanderings he encountered well-remembered faces, but always without eliciting the slightest gleam of recognition; circumstances that only went to prove how thoroughly dead and buried he was in the estimation of his day and generation.

Nothing, indeed, seemed as he remembered it. But his ultimate and utter awakening to the truth that his home had outgrown him fell upon the fourth afternoon following his return, when a total but most affable gentleman presented himself to Whitaker's consideration with a bogus name and a genuine offer to purchase him a drink, and promptly attempted to enmesh him in a confidence game that had degenerated into a vaudeville joke in the days when both of them had worn knickerbockers. Whitaker privately admitted that he was outclassed, that it was time for him to seek the protection of his friends.

He began with Drummond. The latter, of course, had moved his offices. Whitaker found him independently established in an imposing suite in the Woolworth Building—found him an ashenfaced man of thirty-five, who clutched the side of his roll-top desk as if to save himself from falling.

"Whitaker!" he gasped. "My God!"

"Flattered," said Whitaker, "I'm sure.

He derived considerable mischievous amusement from Drummond's patent stupefaction. It was all so right and proper—as it should have been. He considered his a highly satisfactory resurrection. Seldom does a scene pass off as one plans it; but Drummond played up his part in a most public-spirited fashion—gratifying, to say the least.

It took him some minutes to recover, Whitaker standing by and beaming.

He remarked changes, changes as striking as the improvement in Drummond's fortunes. Physically his expartner had gone off a bit; the sedentary life led by the average successful man of business in New York had marked his person unmistakably. Only his face seemed as it had always been—sharply handsome and strong. Whitaker remembered that he had always somewhat meanly envied Drummond his good looks; he himself had been fashioned after the new order of architecture—with a steel frame.

He discovered that they were both talking at once—furiously—and, not without surprise, that he had a great deal more enlightenment to impart to Drummond than he had foreseen.

"You've got an economical streak in you when it comes to correspondence," Drummond commented, offering Whitaker a sheet of paper he had just taken from a tin document-box. That's Exhibit A."

Whitaker read aloud:

> Dear D.: I'm not feeling well, so off for a vacation. Burke has just been in and paid $1,500 in settlement of our claim. I'm enclosing herewith my check for your share. Yours,
> H. M. W.

"Far be it from me to cast up," said Drummond; "but I'd like to know why the deuce you couldn't let a fellow know how ill you were."

"That's so. And you never heard—?"

"Merely a rumor ran round. More than that nothing—until we heard that the Adventuress had been lost, half a year later."

"I'm sorry," said Whitaker contritely. "It was thoughtless . . ."

"But that isn't all," Drummond objected, flourishing another paper. "See here—Exhibit B—came in a day or so later."

"Yes." Whitaker recognized the document. "I remember insisting on writing to you before we turned in that night."

He ran through the following communication:

> Dear Drummond: I married here, tonight, Mary Ladislas. Please look out for her while I'm away. Make her an allowance out of my money—five hundred a month ought to be enough. I shall die intestate, and she'll get everything then, of course. She has your address and will communicate with you as soon as she gets settled down in town. Faithfully,
> Hugh Morten Whitaker.

"If it hadn't been so much in character," commented Drummond, "I'd've thought the thing a forgery—or a poor joke. Knowing you as well as I did, however . . . I just sat back to wait for word from Mrs. Whitaker."

"And you never heard, except that once!" said Whitaker thoughtfully.

"Here's the sole and only evidence I ever got to prove that you had told the truth."

Drummond handed Whitaker a single, folded sheet of note-paper stamped with the name of the Waldorf-Astoria.

> Dear Sir: I inclose herewith a banknote for $500, which you will be kind enough to credit to the estate of your late partner and my late husband, Mr. Hugh Morten Whitaker.
> Very truly yours,
> Mary Ladislas Whitaker.

"Dated, you see, the day after the report of your death was published here."

"But why?" demanded Whitaker, dumfounded. "Why?"

"Mrs. Whitaker may have desired to marry again immediately. If I'm any judge of human nature, she argued that repayment of the loan wiped out every obligation. Feminine logic, perhaps, but—"

Whitaker nodded in somber abstraction.

"You may not," continued Drummond with light malice, "have been so generous, so considerate and chivalric, after all."

"Oh, cut that!" growled Whitaker, unhappily, "I never meant to come back."

"Then why did you?"

"Oh . . . I don't know. Chiefly because I caught Anne Presbury's sharp eyes on me in Melbourne—as I said a while ago. At the worst—if what you suggest has really happened—it's an open-and-shut case; no one's going to blame the woman; and it ought to be easy enough to secure a separation or divorce—"

"You'd consent to that?" inquired Drummond intently.

"It's the only decent thing I can do."

Drummond laughed quietly. "If that's how you feel," he said, "I can only give you one piece of professional advice."

"What's that?"

"Find your wife."

After a moment of puzzled thought Whitaker admitted ruefully: "You're right. There's the rub."

"I'm afraid you won't find it an easy job. I did my best without uncovering a trace of her."

"Did you try old Thurlow?"

"Her father died within eight weeks from the time you ran away. He left everything to charity, by the way. Unforgiving blighter."

"Well, there's her sister, Mrs. Pettit.'

"Address," observed Drummond dryly: "the American Embassy, Berlin. . . . Pettit's got some sort of a minor diplomatic berth over there."

"O the devil! . . . But, anyway, I can write."

He moved to a window and stared rudely at the Post Office Building for a time. "I'm going to find her just the same—if she still lives," he announced, turning back.

And when Whitaker does find her, what do you suppose happens?—considering that she may have remarried.

Nelson Not to Blame.

Once an old lady was being shown over Nelson's ship Victory. As the party approached the spot where Nelson met his death, the attendant pointed to the brass plate fixed in the deck and said:

"That is where Nelson fell."

The old lady was impressed, but not in the right way.

"No wonder!" she said. "I nearly tripped over that thing myself."

NICARAGUA'S NEW PRESIDENT

© HARRIS & EWING

Gen. Emiliano Chamorro, the newly elected president of Nicaragua, formerly was minister to the United States. He was born on a farm in Chontales forty-four years ago. He studied in the college of the city of Granada, and there received the degree of A. B. After his graduation he went into business with his father at Managua, capital of the republic.

On account of the political persecution against the members of his family and of the confiscation of all his father's properties during the administration of President Zelaya, he left his country and settled in Honduras.

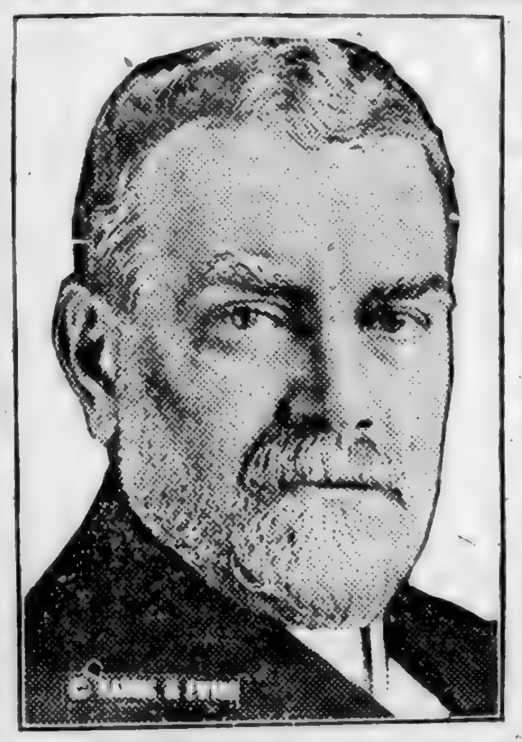
When the opposition to President Zelaya took an aggressive form the conservatives called him back from his exile and appointed him commander of the revolutionary forces. He fought several battles, was successful and finally entered the capital with his victorious troops.

When General Mena, minister of war, rebelled against President Diaz, General Chamorro was again called back from abroad, and was appointed commander in chief of the government forces. He crushed the revolution at Managua and Masaya.

It was then that he was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of his country to the United States. His diplomatic labors extended over a period of three years.

Upon the approach of the new presidential term the conservative party called him back to his country and elected him to the presidency.

MAY HONOR O'GORMAN



When the senate assembles in December and the Democrats in party caucus are called upon to select a successor to the late Senator Clarke of Arkansas as president prot tempore of the senate, Senator O'Gorman of New York will be given serious consideration for that honor, according to opinion expressed at the capitol.

The duties of the president pro tempore consist of presiding in the senate in the absence of the vice president, and it is contended by the supporters of Senator O'Gorman that he would make an ideal presiding officer.

Senator O'Gorman, while he has stood in opposition to the administration on some measures which it has sought to put through congress, is very strong with the members of his party in the senate. He has been a member of the Democratic steering committee ever since the Democrats came into power in the senate in 1913, and this committee has control in large part of the legislative program which the senate is called upon to follow.

The very fact that Senator O'Gorman is going out of office at the close of the present congress may, it is suggested, lead to his selection as a mark of the esteem in which he is held by his colleagues.

CHARLES M. SCHWAB'S CONTRACT

There is only one man in the world who ever tore up a $1,000,000-a-year salary contract.

When the Steel corporation took over the Carnegie company it acquired as one of its liabilities—it really was an asset—a contract to pay Charles M. Schwab that unheard-of sum annually.

J. P. Morgan didn't know what to do about it. The highest salary on record was $100,000. He was in a quandary.

Finally he summoned Schwab, showed him the contract and hesitatingly asked what could be done about it.

"This," said Schwab.

He tore it up.

That contract had netted Schwab $1,300,000 the previous year.

"I didn't care what salary they paid me. I was not animated by money motives. I believed in what I was trying to do and I wanted to see it brought about. I cancelled that contract without a moment's hesitation." Thus did Mr. Schwab explain his acion.

There was a sequel. Morgan later told Carnegie how magnanimously Schwab has acted. Carnegie remarked: "Charlie is the only man I know who would have done that."

And he promptly sent Schwab in bonds the full amount of the contract.

The Hard Times social given by Class No. 6 of Coburntown Sunday School was fun for those present. The men came came dressed in overalls and the ladies wore calico dresses. The menu served was mush and milk, corn bread and pumpkin pie, from which $10 was realized. A program was also given.

Mrs. Robert Ulm and children of Butler, came Thursday for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Scholes. Mr. Ulm came Sunday and spent the day, all returning home on Sunday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dehner and children of Monroeville were also Sunday guests in the Scholes home.

The straw vote that is being taken by 8,000 Rexall drug stores, is attracting much attention at the present time, and will more so as the week ends. Each day at Dunkle's drug store a new vote is received as compiled from the vote taken at the 8,000 stores. The idea is a very novel one and is the biggest thing ever taken by any concern. It is amusing to stand about the Dunkle store and hear the arguments that result from the figures each day. Watch the vote.

Coburn's Corners

Don't forget to hear Rev. Spayd at the Corners, next Sunday evening.

Miss Euda Todd was entertained to dinner Sunday at T. H. Shulls'.

The Misses Rose and Elvy Wilmot, of Springfield Center, spent Saturday and Sunday with their grandparents, Ella Wilmot and wife.

R. F. Place, wife and son Mervin, and O. L. Dermott and wife motored to Indianapolis, Saturday to visit relatives. They returned Monday.

Mesdames C. C. and T. H. Shull and daughters, Nellie and Doris, were guests in the home of Sherm Hart and family, on Thursday of last week.

Mike Morly, John Sullivan and Charley Sillen, came home from Payne with Francis A. Lothamer, last Friday. F. A. Lothamer returned home with them for a week's visit.

Cal Coburn and wife attended Sunday School at this place, Sunday. They have sold their property on the Hicksville and Spencerville road and are moving into Hicksville.

Rheuben Deitrick and wife entertained the following persons, Sunday:—Earl Dornic, wife and daughter, of Ft. Wayne; Henry Dehner, of Decatur; Robert Ulm and family, of Butler; Frank Scholes, of St. Joe; Milo Beams and family, of Springfield Center; and Will Goldsmith and family, of Leo.

Carl Shull certainly put one over on his friends when he met his bride to be Mrs. Blanche Yates, at Hart, Saturday evening, and proceeded to the home of Rev. DeVette, where they were united in the holy bonds of matrimony and no one knew anything about it until Monday morning, but his friends and neighbors got busy right away and that night about 100 gathered at his home for a musical with cow-bells, dinner bells, circular saws and everything else that would make a noise and then we were forced to get on the roof and stamp him out like a rabbit in a brushheap, and after carrying them both around the premises were treated to candy and cigars when all left wishing them many years of wedded life and happiness.—The Hart Journal.

Report from Delegates.

Mrs. Sylvia Ginther was the hostess to the W. C. T. U. Friday afternoon. In the absence of Mrs. Jennie Sechler the new president, Mrs. Lora Leighty, vice-president, presided and called the meeting to order. The opening song "Christ For the World," was sung. The scripture lesson was read from Hebrews, the second chapter, and prayer was offered by Mrs. Addie Patterson. Song, "Stand Up for Prohibition." Mrs. Leighty read a very interesting and instructive leaflet on "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union a World Power and Why?" which while lengthy was listened to very attentively by those present. The delegates, Mrs. Chloe Hart and Mrs. Anna Tustison then gave their reports from the state convention held a short time ago at Huntington. Mrs. Hart read an account of the first day (Friday) from the Huntington Daily, they having missed that session. She also gave convention notes in a very interesting way and gave the following as the "yell" of the Huntington ladies: "I can't vote, neither can Ma; Indiana is wet, blame it on Pa." Mrs. Tustison in her report said there were 603 voting delegates in the convention. St. Joe was one of the eighteen unions in the state who received a red ribbon for having gained between 50 and 100 per cent in membership and the only union in DeKalb county gaining any special mention. After a brief business session, prayer was offered by Mrs. Emma Bishop and was dismissed by singing the temperance doxology. The hostess served delicious fruit salad and wafers.

The poverty social at the Coburntown church last Saturday evening was quite a unique affair. Every one dressed in their poorest garments and this together with the program, furnished much merriment. A supper was served for ten cents, consisting of corn bread and mush and milk.

To Whom It May Concern

A report is being freely circulated in the County that if I am elected County Surveyor, Charles Wagoner is to be my Deputy. This is a "Political Canard" and has no foundation in fact. If I am elected Mr. Wagoner will not be my Deputy.

J. Frank McDowell

Republican Candidate for County Surveyor.

SPENCERVILLE NEWS.

Mrs. Mary Renn left Saturday to spend a few days at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Houghton and family of near Rehobeth.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sechler of St:. Joe were Sunday dinner guests at the home of the former's sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Baltz.

On Sunday, October 29, the Lutheran Sunday school of St. Joe and Spencerville gathered a special offering for the Aremian sufferers resulting as follows: St. Joe, $10; Spencerville $4.80. Individual offering, John Rupert $3, making a total for the day of $17.80.

Miss Grace Cook, a telephone operator at this place, was taken suddenly ill last week and became so much worse that little hope was held for her recovery on Friday night by Dr. Emme. The last reports from her bedside were that she was slightly better.

The St. Joe grammar room basket ball team played the grammar room boys of this place on Thursday afternoon at the basket ball hall on Main street. The home boys winning by a score of 14-11. The high school boys played the Leo high school basket ball team at Leo on Wednesday the score being 18-16 in favor of Leo.

The Girl's "Pansy" club was entertained at the home of Mrs. Jennie Chaney by her niece, Miss Nellie Scott. The girls had as their guests Mrs. Roscoe Walters of LaPorte, and Mrs. John Benninghoff both of whom are very much interested in the girls. The hostess served popcorn, candy and cookies. The next meeting will be held at the home of the Misses Doris and Florence Beams.

The Loyal workers class of the Lutheran Sunday school was entertained by Miss Leone Widdifield on Friday, October 27. The guests outside of the class were Arizona Horn, Roy Chaney, Marjorie Spitler and Harry Hirch. The guests came masked and they had a jolly time guessing who each was. Games were played after which a delicious luncheon was served by the hostess. The guests departed at a late hour saying they had enjoyed a very pleasant evening.

The C. C. club entertained their husbands and a few other guests at a Hallowe'en party on Friday evening at the home of Miss Pearl Goldsmith. Plates were laid for 27 guests and the gentlemen were invited to find their plates which were marked by their wife's picture when they were young. A delightful three course supper was served to 54 guests and members. Mrs. Robert Beams had charge of the entertainment which consisted mostly of contests of which Robert Beams, George Jenkins and Greely Wearly won prizes. Besides the husbands several guests were present as follows: Mrs. Hattie Beams, Mrs. Anise Butler, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pervines, Fred Steward, Dr. Frank Silberg and the children were Forrest, Howard and Garnet Beams, William Little, Doris Rhoades and Glen Beams.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

Sunday, November 12, is appointed as World's Temperance Sunday to be observed by all Sunday schools and churches in Christendom. We can not refrain from wondering why it was not fixed for the first instead of the second Sunday in the month. Why exhort the voters after they have thrown away their votes, instead of instructing them in season, when there is opportunity for them to practice what they learn. How many church members will vote on November 7th in such a way that they will be able to participate in the World's Temperance Sunday exercises with clear consciences? Special services will be held at the M. P. Sunday school at 9 o'clock on this day.

F. P. Lickliter, state organizer of the Anti-Saloon League, will be the principal speaker. Special program is now under way. Union temperance rally of Concord township will be held in the M. P. church in the evening. Morning subject "The Hour Has Struck," and evening subject, "The King's Business Requires Haste." A great day is being planned and all the folks of the vicinity are asked to co-operate in making this a successful meeting.

The meeting was called to order by the vice president, Mrs. Minta Rhoades, after which a delightful program was rendered, after which a short business meeting was held. Lunch was served to about 45 guests and members.

Accident at Coburntown.

Many from this place attended the hard time social that was given by one of the S. S. classes at Coburntown on Saturday evening. The social was a decided success and just as the crowd was leaving for their many homes an automobile came dashing through the crowd, hitting a buggy containing Ray Wasson and Miss Gladys Watson, throwing both out. Miss Watson received a cut over the eys and injury to her back and limbs. While Mr. Wasson was well bruised nearly all over. The horse was badly cut up while the buggy was entirely demolished. The car contained two women and two men, the men being under the influence of liquor and driving at a high rate of speed with only a lighted lantern. It is not known just how bad any of them were injured. The number of the car was secured and they were said to be from Fort Wayne.

NEWVILLE NEWS.

Ira Mendenhall, wife and little son, Harold, and Mrs. Etta Bowser of north of Artic, were Saturday night and Sunday guests of John Miller and family.

Levi Griest and Frank Greist and family of Hicksville, were the Sunday guests of David Griest and wife.

Clyde Dean of Auburn, was a Newville visitor Saturday.

Dean Bechtol and a friend both of Garrett, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Whitehearst and family.

Sunday evening, October 22, while returning from church, Mrs. Minnie Tarney stepped in a post hole and falling nearly broke her right ankle. She has been a cripple in this limb ever since a little child and the accident makes it quite severe for her. Up to this writing Mrs. Tarney has not put her foot to the floor. The accident occurred near William Miller's home. Mr. Miller had dug the hole preparatory to putting up a new fence but had not yet set the posts in. Mr. Miller helped the daughter, Miss Fern Tarney, to get her mother home.

Sam Stafford and wife received the sad news last week that their thirteen-year-old grand daughter, Ruth, had fallen from the hay mow and was seriously injured. The unfortunate girl is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Berry, south of Auburn. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford went to the Berry home Sunday and they found the girl resting quite well for one in her condition.

The little son of Grant Ames and wife and the little daughter of Mac Richmond and wife were quite ill a part of last week. Both are better at this writing.

Better Return That Dog.

Last Saturday evening Albert Ginther's dog came up missing and upon investigation he has been located and if it is not returned in short order there no doubt will be someone make the gentleman a call and it won't be a friendly one either. The party is known positively. Say fellow you had better take it back now, real quick, because Albert means business.

Are At Auburn.

The Hanly-Landrith prohibition special train has been slated for a twenty-five minute stop in Auburn, and the address will be given in the assembly room of the court house on Saturday, November 4, at 9:25 a. m. For Auburn and surrounding towns this should be the biggest prohibition rally of the entire campaign. Automobile loads from all over this part of the state are planning to attend this rally and every temperance democrat and republican should be in this meeting and hear Hanly and Landrith.

Prize Crew Without Coal.

A somewhat amusing naval incident occurred in Swedish waters recently was that of the Themis, which the Germans were trying to take to a home port in charge of a prize crew when they discovered there was not sufficient coal aboard. They put into a Swedish port on Gothland island and were greatly surprised when the Swedish government agent politely but firmly refused to recognize the Themis as a prize, and unceremoniously hustled the prize crew off.

Low American Death Rate.

The census bureau announces that the death rate for the registration area of the United States in 1915 was the lowest on record; viz., 13.5 per 1,000 estimated population. This rate is based on 909,155 deaths reported from 25 states and the District of Columbia, together with 41 cities in nonregistration states.

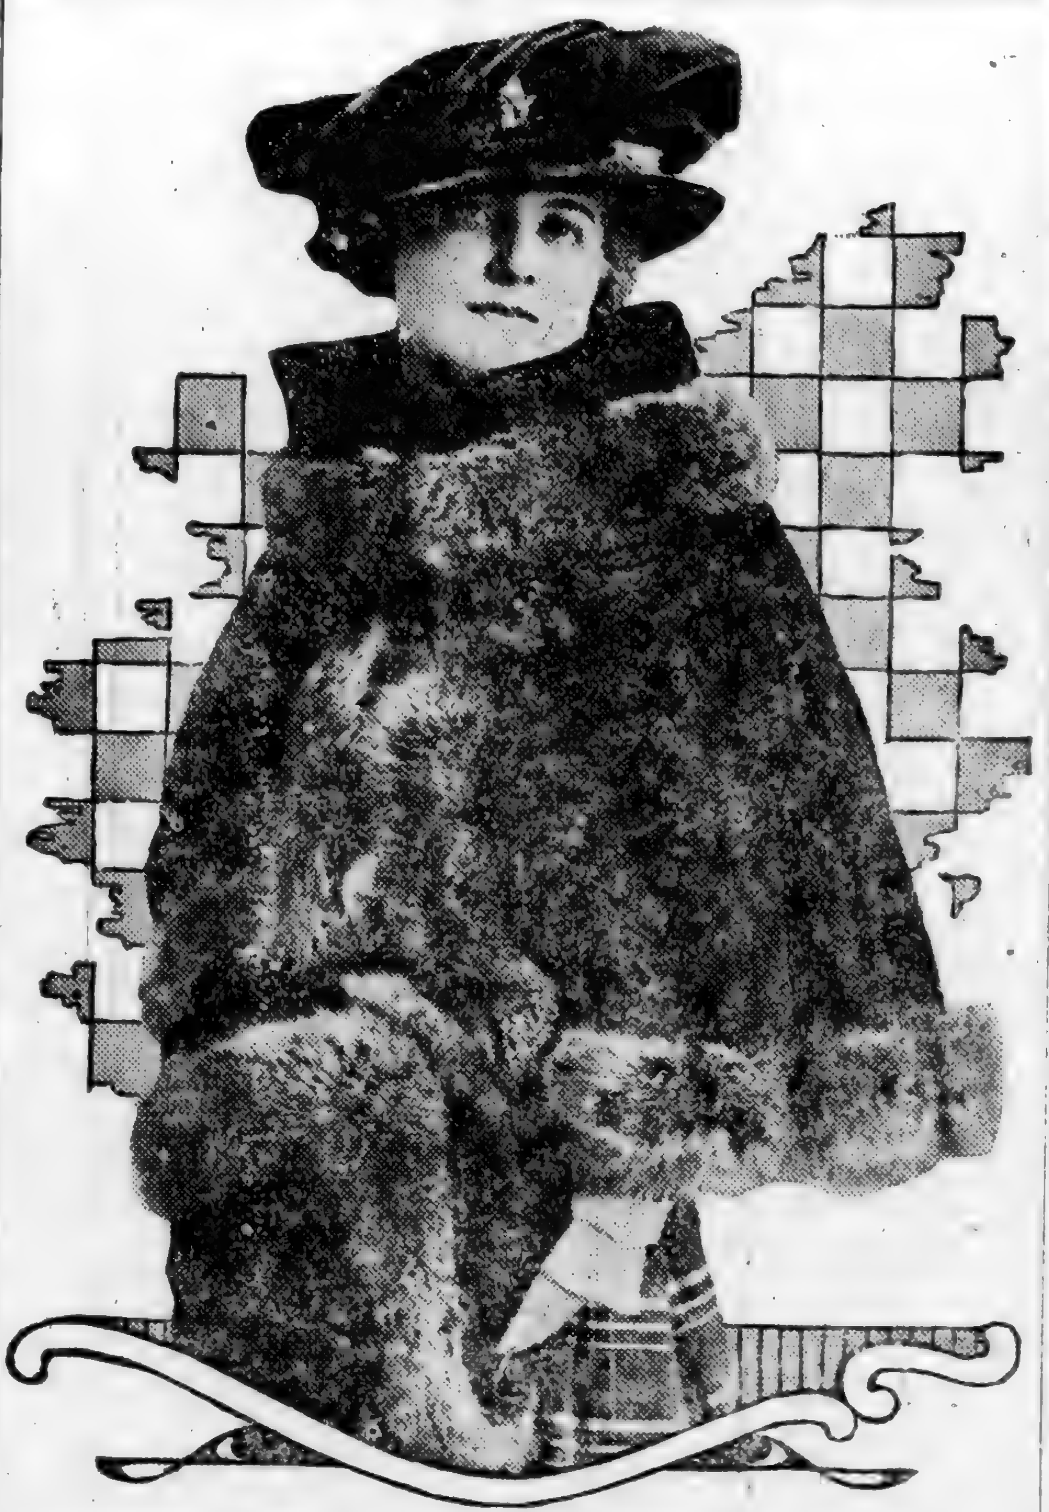
In Dark Velvet With Fur Banding



In a moderate climate or in localities where there is no severely cold weather, a cape with hat and muff to match make a handsome winter outfit. In colder climates such a set is convenient for early winter or between seasons and has the merit of good style to commend it, as well as novelty and usefulness. It is elegant enough, from the nature of these materials used for making it, for dressy wear, and it is quite enough for the street.

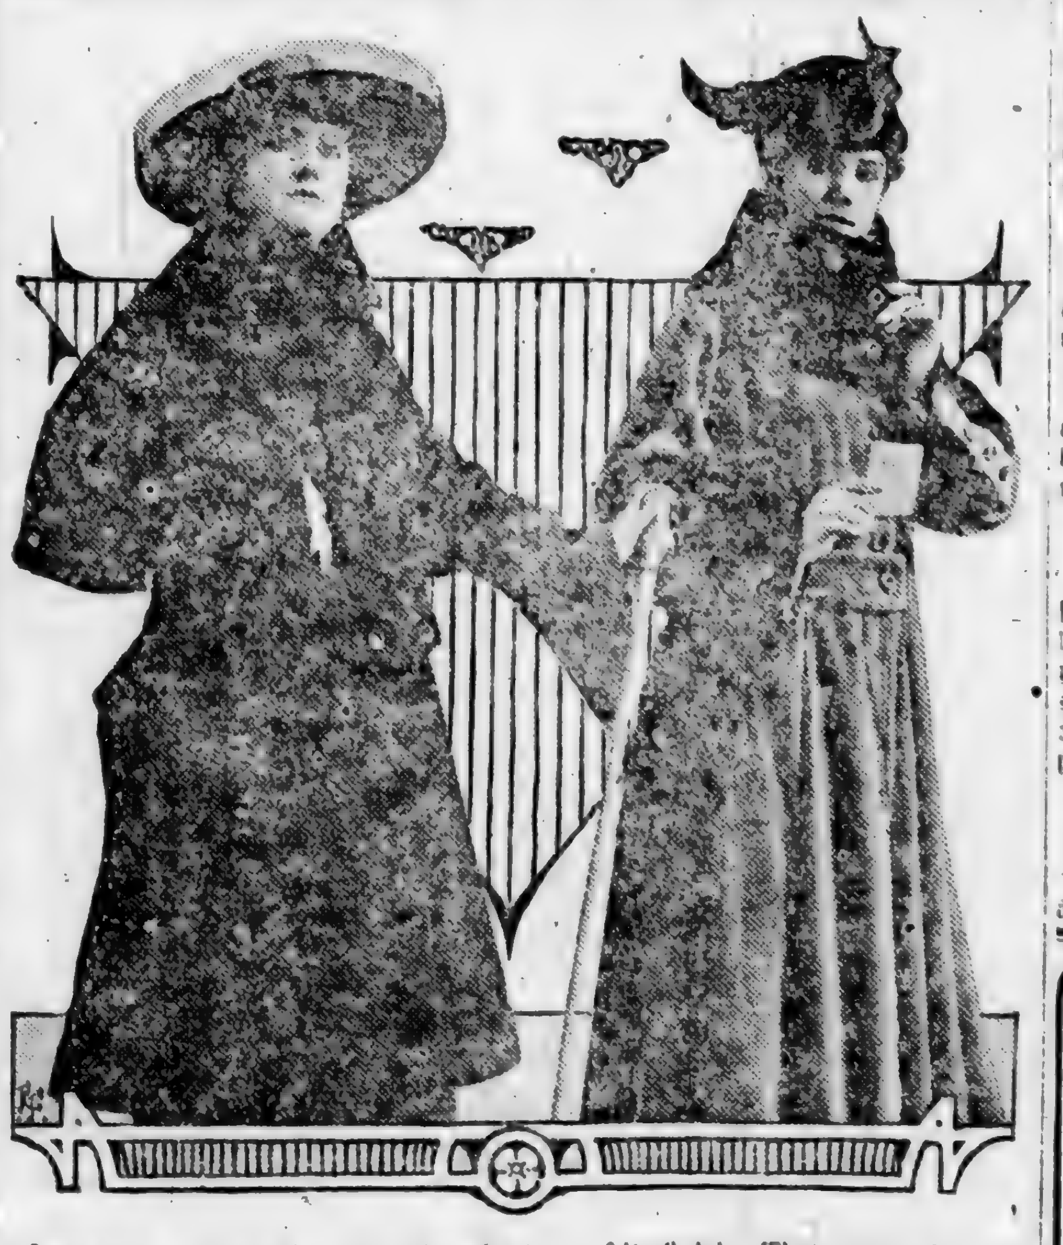
Velvet in any of the dark rich colors that are fashionable, or in black, is used for making the three pieces that compose the set. Taupe gray, very dark brown, and black, present the best three choices in the matter of color for a set that is to do so much service. The plain variety, having an erect pile, is handsomer and gives better wear than other kinds.

Fur banding adds so much to the character of this set that its selection merits considerable thought. In the set illustrated black velvet is trimmed with dyed wolf. Fox, skunk, seal or moleskin banding looks well with almost any color in the velvet and are especially effective on gray and brown.

The cape is cut with one of the most graceful of new collars with a standing wide fold of velvet about the neck and a band of fur where it joins the cape. The fur banding follows the edges of the cape at the front and around the bottom.

The muff is plain and of medium size, with the fur brought up to a point at the top, on both sides. The hat is equally simple, with plain brim and puffed crown of velvet and a narrow band of fur between them. A little cluster of metallic roses at the front, in rose and silver, nestles in the fur.

Thoroughly Comfortable Coats



Designers of coats for this winter's wear seem to have set themselves the task of making the most thoroughly comfortable garments. More than anything else the coats of the present season convey the idea of warmth. The materials used for making them are soft, bulky and loosely woven; they look warm and are warm. Then the ample fullness of the styles adds to the effect of comfort, and wide collars of fur, or of the fabric, that muffle up the neck are the best asset of the designer. They are matched with generous flaring or big straight cuffs.

Two very handsome models in winter coats appear in the illustration given here. In one of them a heavy Bolivia cloth is trimmed with Hudson seal fur. But the introduction of fur of almost any kind adds so much to the price of coats that fur-fabrics are used on similar designs, and the coats do not suffer by this substitution. Fur-fabrics have reached such a degree of excellence that they are as handsome and as rich looking as the skins they imitate.

The coat of Bolivia cloth is a belted model, and buttons make an important item of its finish. They are set in rows at each side and on the back of the sleeves. They fasten the coat above the waistline, and the collar, when brought up about the neck, is held in place by them.

The other coat is a velvet model with a noteworthy cape attachment and several attractive peculiarities of finish that distinguish it. These appear in the wide place of the sleeves at the wrist in the pocket drapery at each side of the skirt, and in the double belt which fastens across the front. The big collar follows the season's vogue and is brought up about the neck like a small turned-over cape.

HELP FOR WORKING WOMEN

Some Have to Keep on Until They Almost Drop. How Mrs. Conley Got Help.

Here is a letter from a woman who had to work, but was too weak and suffered too much to continue. How she regained health:—

Frankfort, Ky.—"I suffered so much with female weakness that I could not do my own work, had to hire it done. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I tried it. I took three bottles and I found it to be all you claim. Now I feel as well as ever I did and am able to do all my own work again. I recommend it to any woman suffering from female weakness. You may publish my letter if you wish."—Mrs. JAMES CONLEY, 516 St. Clair St., Frankfort, Ky.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

All women are invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special advice,—it will be confidential.

Bavarian Colony in Greece.

In Greece there is at least one tiny German oasis as a set-off to the kaiser's 30,000 Greek guests now being fed in Bavaria. A few miles north of Athens is a village with a churchyard upon whose tombstones German names alone appear. The village has been the home for 80 years of a colony of Bavarians brought to Greece by King Otho. The villagers have the fair hair and the blue eyes of Bavaria, and although very few now speak their grandmothers' tongue, service is performed in the old church according to the Roman ritual.

"Did you punish him for that?"

"I certainly did. I told him that I'd never buy him an automobile until he learned to put the bicycle together again."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of Sunday School Course, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 5.

SHIPWRECKED AT MELITA (Malta)

LESSON TEXT—Acts 27:38—28:10.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jehovah redeemeth the soul of his servants; and none of them that take refuge in him shall be condemned.—Ps. 34:22.

Paul was at Malta three months, from the last of November to the last of February, A. D. 59. A bay on the north shore is still called St. Paul's bay. Much help on this lesson can be secured by reading Mr. James Smith's book on the "Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul," Sir William Ramsey's, "St. Paul, the Traveler," and "Everyday Men," by Robert Elliott Thompson.

I. Paul safely ashore (27:38-44). As the day dawned the ship was lightened for a third time to enable them to approach nearer to the shore. This time the main cargo of wheat was thrown out, heretofore having been saved as long as possible. The sailors were familiar with Malta, but not with this part where the ship now lay. Discovering a small creek, they perceived a certain bay with a beach upon which they might run the ship, and hold it without its going to pieces before they could land. It would have been impossible to escape if they ran upon the rocks in a heavy sea. The words "taken up anchor" (v. 40) indicates that the sailors had cast them overboard, but attached to the ship. Now they cut the cables and permitted themselves not to be anchored but to blow with the storm that they might land upon the beach. Approaching the inlet, where the waters of the bay met that of the sea, "where the two seas met," the vessel would not answer to its helm. The ship probably drew about 18 feet of water, and the bottom stuck in the clinging mud and clay, and the forepart began to break away from the rear, due to the violence of the waves. Here Paul had his most narrow escape (v. 42). Not alone was he on the point of losing his life by the sea, but the sword hung over his head, not that of a lawful executioner, but of a selfish murderer.

Before it was danger from the sailors; now it is the soldiers, but the centurion proved true, and all of the prisoners were saved for Paul's sake. It would be interesting speculation as to how many of those saved realized that they were not for Paul's sake, but for the sake of his Savior, and how many of them were duly grateful. On this second stage of the journey, after having left Caesarea with the larger ship, there were probably 276 persons, by God's guaranty was "there shall be no loss of any man's life," and his word is sure.

II. Paul's continued service (28:1-10). This island is today and has been since 1800 under British rule. It was then governed by the Romans. (1) Comfort (vv. 1, 2). The term "barbarian" does not indicate rudeness or uncivilized people, but merely those of non-Greek birth. These people kindled a fire because of the cold and of the rain. They received everyone, prisoners and soldiers like brothers, and, in the persons of Paul and Luke, they certainly entertained angels unawares. (Heb. 13:2). (2) Co-operation (v. 3): The fire would need continual replenishing. Again Paul's energy is conspicuous. Though the greatest of men then living, he was ready to do the humblest duty. Whether counseling about a difficulty or comforting under dangers, he was ready to relieve distress at all times, and thus held up the banner of the cross and proved his Christian spirit.

As Paul gathered the roots and put them upon the fire there came out a viper, probably benumbed by the cold, which fastened itself upon his hand. There are now no venomous serpents in Malta, but this is no reason to believe that in the earlier days, when sparsely inhabited, this common European serpent, known as the viper, or possibly the Egyptian asp, may not have been here. It was natural for superstitious nations to expect that this was the vengeance of a god brought upon Paul because no doubt he was a murderer. Having escaped from the wreck, Paul could not escape from the sword of divine justice, and the goddess of justice, Nemesis, the avenger, suffered him not to live. With perfect composure, doubtless arising from God's promises that Christ had made to his servants (Mark 16:18; Luke 10:19), and also the promises that he should preach the gospel in Rome, Paul shook the viper from his wrist. They then changed their minds, thinking that he must be a god (see Acts 14:8-19).

No reference is made to Paul's preaching, though, of course, that is taken for granted

His words and deeds went along with his preaching.

They honored him with many honors, and loaded them with such things as were necessary, such as clothing and provisions, not of necessity, but out of kindness and love.

Service is one of the ways by which we can show to the world our life of faith.

Note also how these soldiers and sailors also profited by the life of service which Paul rendered.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

JACK FROST'S WORK.

"Well, I must get to work," said Jack Frost as he started off early one Evening.

"Ha, ha," he laughed to himself, "I shall play a good Joke on them all. They didn't think I was going to come a-calling Tonight. Ha, ha, ha," and Jack Frost laughed again.

Then he called his little Helpers to him. "Come my Silver Frost Boys," he said. And along came a great many little Boys with bright Red Cheeks, Silver Suits and Silver Hats. They were very cold looking, but as their Cheeks were Red it showed they were warm themselves. But oh, how Cold they would have made anyone who looked at them.

"Have you the Tools ready?" asked Jack Frost. "I feel just like drawing some beautiful Pictures this Evening on the Window Panes. How about it little Frost boys? Do you feel like doing a good Night's work?"

And the Frost Boys laughed and said, "We're always ready for this sort of work, Jack, it's just like Play for us."

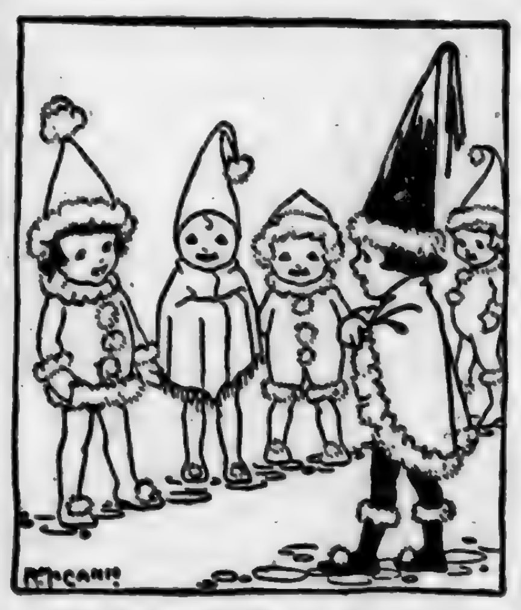
"The naughty Breezes and the old Wind Fathers are all asleep," said Jack Frost. "It's a good Night, my Boys, a good, still Night."

Then Jack Frost and the Frost Boys went along on their Night's adventure.

First they went to an old fashioned Garden in which lovely Flowers were sleeping quietly.

"Hello," said Jack Frost, as he nipped the ear of one Flower.

"Oh Jack Frost," called the Flower, "I want more Summer. I don't want to see the Winter come and the Flowers go. I like the Sun and the South Wind and—and—" But Jack Frost had waved his Silver Shawl over the Flower, and it drooped its Head—for it had been Frost Bitten!



And the Frost Boys Laughed.

"Flowers are so selfish," said Jack Frost. "Here they have a long Summer and Sunshine and warmth and a good time. People give them drinks of Water from Watering Pots when it hasn't Rained in a long time, and when weeds grow up around them, some one comes and digs the weeds up. They're spoiled, that's what's the trouble."

And the Frost Boys said, "That's what's the trouble."

As they said this their voices sounded so Cold that a great many Flowers drooped over with fear. "Oh those Cold, Cold voices," they said as they began to droop and drop their heads.

Then Jack Frost and the Frost Boys waved their Silver Shawls over all the Flowers—except just a few they passed over which wouldn't drop so quickly. "We'll do those another time," said Jack Frost. "There's too much work to be done Tonight." So a few Flowers in the Garden were left untouched.

And then they went to the Window-Panes, and there they made queer shapes and queer objects. They made Castles, and Webs and dancing Figures—all out of Silver—and with their Silver Tools.

All Night long they worked, and oh how much they did! They covered everything with their Silver Frost, and when it was all over Jack Frost and the Frost Boys stood around and admired their own work.

"We'd better be doing something every Evening now," said Jack Frost.

"Yes," said the Frost Boys. "Let's start out every night now for a new place."

"We've fixed up the Gardens just around here pretty well—all except for a few Flowers we've left. We'll come back and do them when we have more time. It's a very surprising thing to me," added Jack Frost, as he took off his Silver Hat, and looked about him, "that People do not appreciate our work more—it's so very, very beautiful!"

"Indeed it is," agreed the Frost Boys.

The next morning when everyone woke up and looked out, the Window-Panes were covered with Frost, and the Flowers had all been Frost-Bitten.

"Oh dear," everyone sighed, "that old Jack Frost has been around."

But when they saw the few Flowers left in every Garden they were very happy. "Summer hasn't quite gone," they said.

"No," said the Flowers, "we're still here."

"And you'll stay there for some time yet," said Mr. Sun, and Mr. South Wind said, "We'll look after you."

And they did, for they asked the Fairy Queen to put old Jack Frost asleep again for a good, long nap.

"Lay Off" Before Sundown.

The man who day after day lets sundown find him digging for dear life, will surely come to a time when sunrise will look in at his window for many a week and find him flat on his back. Before sundown is a good time for every farmer to "lay off."

That Was the Rule.

A veteran car conductor in Boston recently lost his job and was obliged to take the next best thing he could find, the position of sexton in a church.

He presented the collection box to a pillar of the church one Sunday and in fishing out some change from his vest pocket the man brought to light two cigars.

The ex-conductor leaned over him and in the most solemn of tones said:

"Smokin' in the three rear seats only."

Nerves All On Edge?

Just as nerve wear is a cause of kidney weakness, so is kidney trouble a cause of nervousness. Anyone who has backache, nervousness, "blues," headaches, dizzy spells, urinary ills and a tired, worn feeling, would do well to try Doan's Kidney Pills. This safe, reliable remedy is recommended by thousands who have had relief from just such troubles.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. Ida M. Taylor, 316 Ashland Ave., Muncie, Ind., says: "My back was so lame, weak and sore that I could hardly straighten after stooping. I was also bothered by dizzy spells and headaches. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and there were puffy sacs under my eyes. Doan's Kidney Pills have given me great relief from all these ailments."

Fire Insurance 4 Cents on $100

Company Experiences Heavier Losses During Past Fiscal Year Than for Many Years—Total Amount of Insurance Now in Force $8,000,000.00

Auburn Evening Star

That fire loss from lightning when buildings are rodded is greatly reduced is shown in the report of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance company of DeKalb county for the past fiscal year. The assessment for those insured in the rodded class will be 4 cents on each $100 and in the unrodded class the assessment will be 30 cents on the $100.

The report for the fiscal year which ended October 1, has just been compiled by Philip S. Carper, secretary of the company. The farmers' organization now has $8,000,000 insurance in round numbers and is one of the most successful mutual companies in existence. There was a net gain in the year of $380,000 of insurance.

The rate in the unrodded class this year is higher than usual, the company experiencing several very heavy losses. The assessment in the rodded class is only one-tenth and in the unrodded class three-fourths of the cost of insurance in a stock company, so that it may be seen that the DeKalb Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance company saves DeKalb county citizens thousands of dollars every year in insurance.

The amount of loss for the fiscal year ending October 1, was $16,277.09. The amount of loss in the rodded class was only $510.50 while in the unrodded class it reached the figure of $15,766.59. Insurance placed in the rodded class during the year is assessed according to the amount of loss at the time the change was made.

At the present time there is $2,358,480 insurance carried in the rodded class and $5,597,850 in the unrodded section. The showing this year will no doubt have a tendency to induce many farmers to place rods on their buildings and go over into the rodded class as there is a difference of 26 cents on the $100 in insurance.

The losses, some of them very heavy, from October 1 of last year, to the end of the fiscal year this October 1, are as follows:

Losses in 1915.

October 2, Mary E. Metcalf, fire, $640.

October 24, John W. Underwood, fire, $3.50.

October 26, H. H. Squires, fire, $4.

October 29, Ford E. Beard, fire, $467.93.

Harry Shuff Writes.

ElPaso, Texas,
Oct. 13th., '16.

Dear Parents:—

Received your letter and very glad to hear from you. I am feeling fine and dandy. Just got back from a fifteen day march, which is about ninety miles, and took us thirteen days to make it. There were only about ninety men that fell out on the march, and they were brought back to ElPaso. The sand in some places was over my shoes and I thought that I would have to fall out once, but did go through all right. There were about eighteen horses and mules that died on the trip.

LasCruces, New Mexico, is a tipical Spanish town. All the building are one story and made out of mud. Was in the Court House there, it is about the size of the school house; and was all through it. How is everybody around St. Joe? All well, I hope.

The rainy season has just started and it rains every day. There were eighteen thousand men on this hike including Ohio, Massachusetts, Kentucky, South Carolina and North Carolina troops. We have been here a month and it does not seem very long. I hear that we will be starting back to Columbus before long, hope so anyway. Everybody is well in the company and feeling fine.

I weigh 150 lbs. now, and I am tanned almost as black as the Mexicans. Will write more the next time as I have a big washing to do as all of my clothes are dirty. With love to all.

I remain as Ever
Your Son,
Harry Shuff.

The international stock show is set for December 2 to 9 at Chicago, and no doubt St. Joe and country will be represented as usual. It is a show that the farmers should attend by all means as they need the lesson that this exposition teaches. Here you will see exhibited just the proper types of animals that are adapted for certain demands for the market and when we fall short of this the community is losing an enormous sum of money. The short course given farmers here will be of great value to them. Begin to plan now.

Woodrow Wilson

RE-ELECTION OF WILSON AND MARSHALL IS NOW CERTAIN

DOUBTFUL STATES COME IN WITH NECESSARY GAINS.

CLOSEST ELECTION IN YEARS

Incomplete Returns From California and Minnesota Give Wilson Plurality Over Hughes—Official Count May Make Changes.

At a late hour both parties were still claiming the presidential election, but the returns seemed to indicate the success of Wilson. It will take the official result in California and Minnesota to decide the issue and Hughes must win both of these to get across. In both states by latest returns Wilson had a slight lead. The sudden swing from the eastern landslide for Hughes, which made his election seem certain last night, to the western landslide for Wilson, which completely altered the situation, has been without a parallel in American history.

New York, Nov. 8.—President Wilson was making steady gains this afternoon in two states—Minnesota and California—carrying of either one of which will make his election certain.

Regarding these two as doubtful, with New Hampshire, New Mexico and Oregon, returns show Wilson to have already acquired 256 votes in the electorial college; Hughes, 238. The president therefore requires only ten votes for re-election.

At democratic headquarters the president's managers regarding the election as already won, turned attention to celebrating. A band was hired, Secretary McAdoo distributed brand new dimes as souvenirs and an impromptu parade past republican headquarters to jeer at their opponents was carried out gleefully.

At 2 o'clock Senator Hollis, of New Hampshire, informed Chairman McCormick from Burlington that unofficial but complete returns from that state gave it to Wilson by 300 majority.

The republicans were conceding nothing and sticking fast to their claims of Hughes' election.

In the meantime President Wilson and Governor Hughes were receiving returns from their political advisers constantly. Hughes remained closeted in his room at the Astor hotel, in New York, and a continuous stream of telegrams and reports was kept running to him.

President Wilson, at Shadow Lawn, was in communication with Secretary Tumulty during the morning, but in the afternoon, upon reassuring reports from his secretary, the president went out for a game of golf. Mrs. Wilson went with him.

At 2 o'clock Governor Hughes and Mrs. Hughes went for an automobile ride. The candidate was given a rousing cheer as he walked smiling to his machine at the curb.

ALBERT . SLEEPER

St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 8.—At 2 o'clock with 1,439 out of 3,024 precincts in, Wilson leads Hughes in Minnesota by 7,432. The vote was Wilson, 111,173; Hughes, 103,690.

Hughes has made slight gains since noon. An effort to predict is mere guess work. Minnesota is as close as a state can be.

Boston, Mass., Nov 8.—Over the long-distance telephone Hiram Johnson, governor of California, declared that Hughes is leading in California by 7,000.

New York, Nov. 8.—Democratic National Chairman McCormick disputed at 2 o'clock this afternoon the republican claims that Minnesota, West Virginia, New Hampshire and California have gone for Hughes.

He said he had just received a telegram from Democratic Committeeman Fred B. Lynch, of Minnesota, that Minnesota was for Wilson. He also said that a telegram from E. E. Cook, of West Virginia, claimed that state for Wilson.

Another telegram from California stated that while the vote was close Wilson leads.

FLORIDA WILL HAVE INDEPENDENT GOVERNOR.

Early Reports Indicate Catts Will Lead Knott By 10,000 Majority.

Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 8.—Rev. Sidney J. Catts, independent, running on a "dry" platform, apparently will have 10,000 majority over W. V. Knott, by 6,000 out of 36,000. Allen, republican, is polling a small vote.

Governors Elected.

New York—Charles S. Whitman re-elected), republican.

Massachusetts—Samuel M. McCall (re-elected), republican.

Washington—Ernest Lister (re elected), democrat.

Ohio—James M. Cox, democrat.

Missouri—Henry Lamm, republican.

New Jersey—Walter E. Edge, republican.

Illinois—Frank O. Lowden, republican.

Connecticut—Marcus M. Holcomb (re-elected), republican.

North Carolina—Thomas W. Bickett, democrat.

South Carolina—Richard I. Manning (re-elected), democrat.

Rhode Island—R. Livingstone Beckman (re-elected), republican.

Tennessee—Tom C. Rye (re-elected), democrat.

Texas—James E. Ferguson (re-elected), democrat.

Minnesota—James A. A. Burnquist, (re-elected), republican.

Florida—W. A. Knott, democrat

Georgia—Hugh Dorsey, democrat.

Delaware—John G. Townsend, republican.

West Virginia—John J. Cornwell, democrat.

Michigan—Albert E. Sleeper, republican.

New Hampshire—Harry W. Keyes, republican.

Vermont—Horace F. Graham, republican.

Colorado—Julius C. Gunter, democrat.

Iowa—W. L. Harding republican.

KANSAS.

Topeka, Kas., Nov. 8.—Kansas has given Woodrow Wilson 10,000 to 15,000 plurality over Hughes, possibly more. It has chosen four democratic and four republican congressmen, gave a republican governor the largest plurality any candidate has ever received, elected a republican legislature and then picked democratic and republican local officials indiscriminately.

The worst split ticket Kansas has ever known became apparent with more complete returns today. Counties counted solidly republican went to Wilson and democratic counties went to Hughes.

Governor Capper apparently has a plurality exceeding 125,000 in the same state, with the republican state ticket running 50,000 to 60,000 over the democratic ticket.

MISSOURI.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 8.—President Wilson, at noon today, had a lead of more than 16,000 in Missouri on returns from approximately two-thirds of the state. Republican nominee for governor, on returns from the same precincts, had a lead of 3,400. United States Senator Reed, democrat, had a lead of more than 13 000 over Walter S. Dickey, republican nominee.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—With Illinois in the republican column by a plurality of more than 150,000, election officials today resumer the tremendous task of tabulating what was believed might prove the biggest vote ever cast by any state.

ODAHO.

Boise, Idaho, Nov. 8.—Returns today from nearly half of the state give Wilson, 28,104, Hughes, 22,508.

Boise, Idaho, Nov. 8.—In Idaho 288 precincts out of 734 give Wilson, 24,467; Hughes, 18,486.

JAMES M. COX

THOMAS MARSHALL

INDIANA CHOOSES JAMES P. GOODRICH BY 10,000 MAJORITY

HARRY S. NEW AND JAMES E. WATSON ELECTED TO U. S. SENATE.

HUGHES LEADS BY 9,000

Congressional Delegation Will Be Composed of Six Democrats and Seven Republicans—State Now Has Eleven Democrats and Two Republicans in Congress.

JAMES P. GOODRICH

Indianapolis, Nov. 8.—With 1 994 precincts out of the 3,142 in Indiana tabulated Hughes has 232,996; Wilson, 223,924. Returns from 1,315 precincts for United States senator gave Harry S. New, 169,327; John W. Kern, 159,358; James E. Watson, 166,929; Thomas Taggart, 160,852.

Goodrich, republican candidate for governor, was leading Adair, democrat, by 10,064 votes.

The Indiana congressional delegation will be composed of six democrats and seven republicans, according to indications. Indiana now has eleven democrats and two republicans in congress.

Although reports on the congressional contests were still scattering today, the following were elected, according to forecasts of early returns: First, S. Wallace Cook, republican; Second, William A. Cullop, democrat incumbent re-elected; Third, William E. Cox, democrat incumbent; Fourth, Lincoln Dixon, democrat incumbent; Seventh, Merrill Moores, republican incumbent; Eighth, Albert H. Vestall, republican; Ninth, Fred S. Purnell, republican; Tenth, William R. Wood, republican; Eleventh, Milton Kraus, republican; Twelfth, L. W. Fairfield, republican; Thirteenth Henry A. Barnhart, democrat, re-elected.

MICHIGAN GOES DRY LATE FIGURES SHOW

Prohibition Amendment Goes Through With a Whoop.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8.—Although returns from Michigan's larger cities indicated the defeat of the prohibition amendment, the situation was changed as the country counties began to make their returns. From the lates figures, it is estimated that the amendment for state wide prohibition carries by a substantial plurality.

The home rule amendment, a county local option, which was urged by the wets, has been defeated.

WILSON CARRIES OHIO BY LARGE MAJORITY.

James Cox, Elected Governor and Atlee Pomerene, United States Senator.

Columbus, O., Nov. 8.—Woodrow Wilson carried Ohio in a landslide, according to predictions early today, based on 3,492 precincts from eighty-six counties, giving him the state by 50,000. His lead over Charles Evans Hughes in those precincts is 45,746.

Carried along with the landslide were James Cox for governor and Atlee Poferene for United Statts senator, who furnished a surprise by beating Governor Willis and Myrom T. Herrick by pluralities estimated at from 20,000 to 30,000.

OREGON.

Portland, Ore., Nov. 8.—Wilson is leading in Portland and Multnomath county, the largest county in Oregon, according to official and complete returns from 171 out of 326 precincts. These returns gave Wilson, 6,851; Hughes, 5,874.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Bismarck, N. D., Nov. 8.—North Dakota is still doubtful as to the presidential election, returns from 670 precincts, representative of one-third of the state, showed today. These gave Wilson, 23,362; Hughes, 23,058.

MASSACHUSETTS

Boston, Mass., Nov. 8.—Hughes has carried Massachusetts by slightly more than 20,000 votes from 1,145 precincts out of 1,166 in the state.

NEVADA.

Reno Nev., Nov. 8.—With incomplete returns received from less than half the 290 precincts in Nevada, the totals give Wilson, 3,167; Hughes, 2,403.

EXPECT GOETHALS TO GET WAR POST

Politicians Pick Panama Canal Builder for Cabinet.

MAY NOT NAME ROOSEVELT

Hughes Will Not Offer Progressive Leader Place, It Is Believed, but Will Give Recognition to Party.

Washington, Nov. 8.—Speculation already is rife in political circles here as to the probable composition of the cabinet which will be named by Mr. Hughes when he becomes president on the fourth of March.

The general belief is that the Progressive vote will be given recognition but well-informed leaders among the Republicans today regarded it as unlikely that Colonel Roosevelt will be offered a cabinet post by Mr. Hughes. The fact that it has been charged that Roosevelt will be the prevailing force behind the Hughes administration might make it inadvisable to have the former president in the cabinet, old-time Republican leaders are inclined to believe. Again, Mr. Roosevelt has held the highest office in the land and might hesitate to play second fiddle, it is believed.

As secretary of state two men have been suggested. One is Elihu Root, whose capability is recognized. But it is urged against Mr. Root that his years would unfit him. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge has been talked of. The impression is that Mr. Hughes would rather have Senator Lodge continue as a power in the senate. A likely candidate is believed to be John Bassett Moore. He is regarded as the foremost international lawyer in the world. He was counsellor for the state department under President Wilson for a time.

Goethals for War Post.

The war portfolio is the next most important post. One name has outshadowed all other possibilities—that of Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, the builder of the Panama canal. He is an army officer and in private life is a Republican.

For the secretaryship of the navy the names mentioned most often are those of Representative Julius Kahn of California and Senator John Weeks of Massachusetts. George von L. Meyer, the former secretary, also has been mentioned.

It is regarded as most probable that the post master generalship will go to William R. Willcox, Hughes' campaign manager.

Two Progressives, Oscar Straus and George W. Perkins, have been mentioned as possible secretaries of the treasury., It is said, however, that this time the G. O. P. wishes to put a middle West man in the treasury. George M. Reynolds of Chicago, president of the Continental and Commercial National bank, has a good chance, it is rumored.

Another Chicago man, but this time a Progressive, is likely to be appointed secretary of labor, it is believed. This is Raymond Robins, who has been identified for years with sociological work.

Sutherland for Attorney General.

The place of attorney general must be filled by a good lawyer. Mr. Hughes, it is thought, wants a man of his own "judicial" frame of mind. Senator George Sutherland of Utah is mentioned as a possibility. He is known as an attorney of great merit. His appointment would be a recognition of the West.

There are three other portfolios—commerce, agriculture and the interior. Republicans here close to Mr. Hughes are already urging him to appoint one of the most prominent Americans as secretary of commerce—Elbert H. Gary, head of the United States steel trust. Whether Judge Gary would accept the appointment is a question.

Secretary Wesley Jones of Washington has been mentioned as a possible secretary of the interior. Senator P. J. McCumber of North Dakota and Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas are spoken of as possibilities for the secretaryship of agriculture.

DR. DUMBA PASSES AWAY

Former Austrian Ambassador to the United States Succumbs at Vienna—Was Recalled.

Geneva, Nov. 8.—Dr. Constantin Dumba, former Austrian ambassador to the United tSates, is dead, says a dispatch from Vienna.

Dr. Constantin Dumba was appointed as Austrian ambassador to the United States in January, 1913. He was fifty-six years old and had served in the diplomatic service of his country for many years.

In September, 1915, Ambassador Dumba was recalled by his government at the request of the state department of the United States. He left the United States on October 3, last year.

The resignation of Doctor Dumba from the Austro-Hungarian diplomatic service was announced only last Saturday.

102 Years Old Walks to Polls.

Oswego, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Henry Hill Watson, one hundred and two years old, walked from his home in Edward street to the polling place, several blocks distant, to vote for Hughes.

DELAWARE.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 8.—Returns at 11 o'clock showed that Hughes carried Delaware by about 800.

Senator DuPont was defeated by Josiah O. Wolcott, democrat, by 900 to 1,000.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 8.—Democratic headquarters this morning claimed a majority of 25,000 for President Wilson while republican headquarters conceded his majority in the state would reach at least 10,000.

The latest available returns were incomplete from the more remote mountain sections. Nine democratic and two republican congressment were elected.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 8.—Republicans swept Iowa practically clean, turning in pluralities of 60,000 for Hughes, 120,000 for W. L Harding for governor, electing the entire state ticket and re-electing the ten republican congressmen. T. J. Steele, democratic congressman from the Eleventh district, is running a close race for re-election.

WISCONSIN.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 8.—At noon today Charles E. Hughes was leading President Wilson in Wisconsin by more than 18 000. At that time 1,787 out of 2,250 precincts in the state gave Wilson 156,867 and Hughes 174,931.

Senator LaFollette has the greatest plurality of any of the candidates, his lead over Wolfe with 853 precincts unreported being 59,349.

MARYLAND.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8.—President Wilson carried Maryland in yesterday's election by a plurality estimated at 16,510, but Congressman David J. Lewis, "father of the parcel post," was defeated in the contest for the United States senatorship by Dr. Joseph I. France. Four democratic and two republican congressmen were elected.

WYOMING.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Nov. 8.—A statement issued by T. B. Kennedy, secretary of the state republican committee, at 10 o'clock said: "The returns indicate that Wilson and Kendrick have carried Wyoming."

VON MACKENSEN IS DRIVEN BACK

Bucharest States Teutons Are Retiring in Dobrudja.

FOUR VILLAGES ARE BURNED

Official Statement From Petrograd Admits Enemy Made Further Progress in Vicinity of Predeal.

Bucharest, Nov. 8.—The war office announces that Roumanian forces in Dobrudja have compelled the retirement of Teutonic troops, which in their retreat set fire to several villages. The villages burned were Daeni and Garlici, on the Danube, 12 miles north of Hirsova, and Rosman and Baidar, 18 miles northeast of Hirsova, about forty miles north of the Constanza-Tchernavoda railroad line. The official statement follows:

"Southern front—All along the Danube there has been artillery activity.

"Dobruja—Our advance detachments forced the enemy to retire. During his retreat he set fire to the villages of Daeni, Garlici, Rosman and Baidar.

"Northern and northwestern frontiers—On the frontier of West Moldavia the situation is unchanged.

"In the Prahova valley we repulsed enemy attacks from Rijes toward our center and our left wing.

"On the right bank of the Alt violent fighting continues in the region of the Racovitza-Titesti.

"In the Jiul valley the enemy received re-enforcements and we discontinued our pursuit."

Petrograd, Nov. 8.—Roumanian troops in the vicinity of Predeal were compelled to retire before the invading Austrians and Germans, the war office announced.

Berlin, Nov. 8, by wireless to Sayville.—In Roumania, southwest of Predeal, the invading Austro-German forces captured Laomu height, it is announced officially. Further progress was made southeast of Rothenthurm pass. Roumanian attacks in the region of the Szurduk pass were repulsed. The statement follows:

"Front of Archduke Charles Francis—Engagements in the Tulghes sector and between Altschanz and the Booza pass road proceeded without change in the situation.

"Southwest of Predeal we captured Laomu height and made further progress southeast of Rothenthurm pass.

"On both sides of the Szurduk pass road Roumanian attacks were repulsed.

FRENCH MAKE NEW GAINS.

Berlin Declares Fierce Attack Was Repulsed.

Paris, via London, Nov. 8.—Additional progress was made during Monday by the French troops operating in the northern part of the St. Pierre-Vaast wood and more prisoners also have been taken by them, according to the official communication.

Berlin, Nov. 8.—A severe defeat of the Franco-British forces on the Somme by troops from all parts of Germany during the last 24 hours was anounced by the war office. The allies, the statement said, launched an attack of fierce violence against the front held by General von Buelow's army after an artillery preparation by "their whole firing capacity." The attackers were thrown back everywhere.

The allied attack was launched on a front of 12 miles. The attackers suffered "the heaviest sanguinary losses," the statement said, "and accomplished nothing but a local gain in the northern part of the St. Pierre-Vaast woods."

The officers and 380 men and 11 machine guns were captured.

RESTORE POLISH SELF-RULE.

Proclamation Indorsed by Kaiser and Austrian Ruler Read in Cities.

Berlin (via Sayville, L. I.), Nov. 7.—Poland, rich in romance, of storied interest almost unparalleled in fascination, was recreated on Sunday. Proclamations re-establishing the right of the Polish nation to control its own destinies were read at Warsaw and at Lublin. General von Beseler officiated at Warsaw and General Kuk at Lublin. The event, marking one of the greatest moments in the history of Europe, was the consummation of joint action of the German emperor and the emperor of Austria. The form of government established by the proclamation is described as an autonomous hereditary monarchy. In effect, it extends to the Polish provinces occupied by the central powers, with respect to city administration, rights of self-government similar to those enjoyed by the city of Warsaw since early in the war. A Polish army is to be created.

Australia Polls Record Vote.

Melbourne, Nov. 8.—A record number of votes was polled on the conscription referendum, but the figures are still incomplete. Out of a total of 2,087,000 votes counted the majority against conscription is 73,000.

Villista Bandits Defeated.

Washington, Nov. 8.—The Mexican embassy announced that official dispatches had been received that the de facto troops had defeated a large number of Villistas in Mioqui, Chihuahua. No details are known.

HENRY P. DAVIDSON

To sit in a French warplane about a mile above the battlefield at Combles during the taking of that town by the allied armies and see the two great fighting machines hurling themselves against each other and then finally to whiz three miles back of the German trenches during the height of the engagement while the enemy tried unsuccessfully to bring the machine to the ground, was the thrilling experience of Henry P. Davidson, vice president of J. P. Morgan & Co., who arrived in this country from England aboard the American liner Philadelphia. The banker's visit to London and Paris was primarily for the purpose of arranging a new $30,000,000 war loan.

NEW YORK SUBWAY GUARD CONFESSES DYNAMITE PLOT

Striker Says He Put Bomb in Tunnel—Five Others Are Implicated.

New York, Nov. 6.—James Merna, a subway guard on strike, confessed to the police on Friday that he set off the bomb that wrecked the Lenox avenue subway station on the morning of October 25.

"I would willingly give up my life," he said, "for the benefit of 11,000 workingmen. No one else is to blame for the plot."

Merna's father is a motorman on strike.

Three associates of Merna have confessed they were implicated in the plot that resulted in the destruction of the Lenox avenue station, and that they plotted to cause explosions in the Times Square subway station and the Fifty-ninth street station at Columbus circle. These exploits were to have been made on Friday, they said.

One of the men confessing to this plot is Michael J. Herlihy, twenty-one years old, an elevated guard and financial secretary of a carmen's local.

In all the confessions the men protested they meant no harm to human life and had set off the dynamite charge to make a "demonstration."

Five of the six men arrested are officials of the Amalgamated Union of Street and Electric Railway Employees. The sixth is a chauffeur. The national association of this union has repudiated the plotters and condemned their work.

After the arrests Captain Tunney of the detective bureau issued this statement:

"We have evidence that the funds financing this explosion, and other contemplated explosions came from the Carmen's union."

SLAVS REPULSE ALL ATTACKS.

Petrograd Says Germans Have Assumed the Offensive.

Petrograd (via London), Nov. 8.—German forces several times assumed the offensive on the Russian western front in the region east of the village of Lipitiza-Dolnaia and west of the village of Silaventin, with the object of capturing the commanding heights occupied by the Russians. All the German attacks, according to an official statement issued on Monday by the Russian war department, were frustrated by a violent Russian artillery and rifle fire. The battle is still going on.

AVIATOR LANDS IN NEW YORK.

Carlstrom Flies From Chicago to Gotham in Record Time.

New York, Nov. 6.—Aviator Carlstrom, flying from Chicago to New York, arrived at Governor's Island at 8:55 a. m. on Friday. He had been in the air 8 hours and 37 minutes, making two stops enroute, one at Erie, Pa., and the other at Hammondsport, N. Y. The distance covered was approximately 975 miles, which gives him an average of 110 miles an hour.

SIX MEN KILLED IN I. W. W. RIOT

Forty Wounded in Battle at Everett, Wash.

WERE BARRED FROM TOWN

"Invaders" Open Fire at Signal and Members of Posse Fall—Militia Called to Arms and Band Is Arrested.

Everett, Wash., Nov. 7.—At least six men were killed and 40 wounded on Sunday in a pitched battle at the Everett city wharf between 250 members of the Industrial Workers of the World, who came here from Seattle on the steamer Verona, and a posse of 150 citizens, headed by Sheriff Don McRea. Sheriff McRea is among the seriously wounded.

After the fight, in which about a thousand shots were exchanged, the Verona turned around and started back to Seattle. Many men were seen to fall on the deck of the steamer during the battle, and others, panic-stricken, jumped overboard. Some were taken from the water, but others disappeared, and it is believed they were drowned.

The Verona reached Everett shortly before 2 p. m. The coming of the party of invaders had been announced in messages sent to Everett from Seattle headquarters.

When the Verona reached the city wharf Sheriff McRea stepped forward and informed the men on the boat that they would not be permitted to land. One of the men, evidently spokesman for the party, began arguing with the sheriff and then made a speech.

Apparently as a signal, the man dropped his head and armed men on the steamer opened fire on the posse assembled on the wharf.

The first man to fall was Sheriff McRae. One man, formerly a lieutenant in the Washington National Guard, was killed instantly, and in a moment the crowd on shore was panic-stricken. Deputy sheriffs on the wharf quickly rallied their forces, however, and returned the fire.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 7.—Gov. Ernst Lister said he would order the National Guard to police Everett.

The Verona returned here with five dead and twenty injured on board. Two of the injured are not expected to recover.

When the Verona pulled into its slip the wharf was surrounded by policemen, some armed with shotguns and others with drawn revolvers, and 30 National Guardsmen, under command of Capt. Paul Edwards. All the Guardsmen stood with fixed bayonet and their belts filled with ball cartridges.

ITALIANS REPULSE 5 ATTACKS.

Rome Statement Says 8,992 Austrians Were Captured in Four Days.

Rome (via London), Nov. 7.—Italian troops fighting on the Austro-Italian front in the last four days have taken prisoner 270 Austro-Hungarian officers and 8,722 men, says the statement issued by the Italian war department. Since the Italian offensive started on the Julian front, August 6, the Italians have captured 40,365 Austro-Hungarians, including 1,008 officers.

In the Travignolo valley, after attempting a demonstrative action on Mont Col Bricon, the Austrians launched five successive attacks against the so-called observatory on the slopes of Cima Boeche, according to the official statement issued here on Sunday. They were all driven off with heavy loss and a counter-attack at the point of the bayonet eventually dispersed the enemy, who left numerous bodies, including those of four officers, on the ground.

CALLS RUSS DRIVE A FAILURE.

Berlin Declares Offensive on Eastern Front Did Not Aid Roumanians.

Berlin, Nov. 6.—No success whatever was obtained by the Russians in their recent determined attack on the eastern front, which apparently was launched with the purpose of helping the Roumanians and may be considered the last of the ramifications of General Brusiloff's great offensive movement, says an Overseas News agency review of the campaign.

Petrograd, Nov. 6.—Infantry fighting continues in Galicia and in Volhynia, with slight successes in both regions for the Russians, according to the official statement issued by the war office on Friday.

RUSSIANS ADMIT LOSS ON THE STOKHOD RIVER

Petrograd Says Teutons Captured Trenches in Volhynia—Berlin Tells of the Victory.

Petrograd, Nov. 4.—German troops captured advanced Russian trenches on the western bank of the Stokhod river, south of Witoniez, in Volhynia, after the Russians had repelled three previous attacks, says the announcement issued by the war office Thursday.

Berlin, Nov. 4.—The capture of Russian positions in Volhynia along with more than 1,500 prisoners by the Germans was reported on Thursday by the war office. The following official report was given out:

"Eastern front—Army group of Prince Leopold—The Westphalian and Frisian troops under Gen. von Linsingen and Maj. Gen. von Ditfurth have captured by storm Russian positions which had been pushed forward on the left bank of the Stokhod river south of Vitoniez. In addition to heavy losses inflicted upon the enemy we captured 22 officers, 1,508 men, ten machine guns and three mine throwers. Our losses were small."

SEVEN ARE KILLED IN WRECK.

Heavy Coal Train Runs Wild in Pennsylvania.

Altoona, Pa., Nov. 8.—Seven are believed to have been killed and another is dying in the Altoona hospital as a result of a wreck at Newportage Junction, five miles south of here, on the Newportage branch of the Pennsylvania railroad, following a thrilling ten-mile dash down the eastern slope of the Allegheny mountains by a heavy coal train. The coal train, running wild, crashed into a light engine at the junction, wrecking 47 of the 60 cars in the train. Four light engines were reduced to scrap and tons of coal piled up caught fire immediately after the crash. The dead: A. L. Riscing, R. C. Schuma, Frank Fry, R. F. Jackson, J. H. Gordon, W. C. Hornor and W. K. Thompson.

GERMAN SHIPS IN SEA RAID.

Small Naval Vessels Capture Two Steamers on Trade Routes.

Berlin, Nov. 6.—A raid was made by German naval small craft on the shipping route between the mouth of the Thames and Holland on Wednesday night, the admiralty announced on Friday.

Several Steamers were stopped and searched and two of them were brought into a German port.

The raiders were fruitlessly shelled by four British cruisers while they were returning.

Health for Sick Women

For Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Been Woman's Most Reliable Medicine —Here is More Proof.

To women who are suffering from some form of woman's special ills, and have a constant fear of breaking down, the three following letters ought to bring hope:—

North Crandon, Wis.—"When I was 16 years old I got married and at 18 years I gave birth to twins and it left me with very poor health. I could not walk across the floor without having to sit down to rest and it was hard for me to keep about and do my work. I went to a doctor and he told me I had a displacement and ulcers, and would have to have an operation. This frightened me so much that I did not know what to do. Having heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I thought I would give it a trial and it made me as well as ever. I cannot say enough in favor of the Pinkham remedies."—Mrs. Mayme Asbach, North Crandon, Wis.

Testimony from Oklahoma.

Lawton, Okla.—"When I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I seemed to be good for nothing. I tired easily and had headaches much of the time and was irregular. I took it again before my little child was born and it did me a wonderful amount of good at that time. I never fail to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to ailing women because it has done so much for me."—Mrs. A. L. McCasland, 509 Have St., Lawton, Okla.

From a Grateful Massachusetts Woman.

Roxbury, Mass.—"I was suffering from inflammation and was examined by a physician who found that my trouble was caused by a displacement. My symptoms were bearing down pains, backache, and sluggish liver. I tried several kinds of medicine; then I was asked to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has cured me and I am pleased to be in my usual good health by using it and highly recommend it."—Mrs. B. M. Osgood, 1 Haynes Park, Roxbury, Mass.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Surely an Antique.

"Now here," said the second-hand dealer, "is a rare bargain in an antique phonograph, which—"

"Whoever heard of a phonograph classed as antique furniture?" broke in the scornful customer.

"Well, believe it or not," returned the dealer, "but the man I bought it from had had it so long it was all paid for."—Kansas City Star.

To Live Long!

A recipe given by a famous physician for long life was: "Keep the kidneys in good order! Try to eliminate through the skin and intestines the poisons that otherwise clog the kidneys. Avoid eating meat as much as possible; avoid too much salt, alcohol, tea. Drink plenty of water."

For those past middle life, for those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation, as backache, scalding "water," or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, "rusty" joints, stiffness, get Anuric at the drug store. This is a wonderful eliminator of uric acid and was discovered by Dr. Pierce of Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. If your druggist does not keep it send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce for trial package and you will know that it is many times more potent than lithia and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

NEWS OF FORT WAYNE

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"I have been made most comfortable by the use of Anuric. When I started to take this medicine my right kidney pained me each time I had a passage, and my back ached all the time and was so stiff I could scarcely get up after lying down. The first bottle I took of Anuric completely cured me of these conditions, and the rheumatism in my shoulders, hands and feet is diminishing so rapidly I can scarcely believe that Anuric has done so much for me in so short a time. I feel extremely grateful for this relief and am only too glad to recommend it."

Every package of Anuric is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Favorite Prescription, the famous friend to ailing women, and Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic.—MRS. S. J. ROBERTS, 917 Cottage Ave.—Adv.

A Young Voter.

Frank, the five year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Engle, presented himself at the East precinct polling place, Tuesday, and asked if "this is the place to vote for Hughes". Men on the outside campaigned him pretty strenuously for Wilson, but the young man could not be changed in his political preferences. He was humored by the election board and left feeling that he had did his duty as an American citizen. If more men were as faithful to live up to their convictions as was this boy, just try to comprehend the good that would result.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't stay Gray! Here's an Old-time Recipe that Anybody can Apply.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

TELLS STORY OF ZEPPELIN ATTACK

Eyewitness Describes a Night Invasion of the British Coast.

FOLLOWS DAY OF PLEASURE

Sudden Rapid-Fire Bombardment First Intimation of Approach of Enemy —Disappears With British Aeroplane in Pursuit.

London.—Not everyone has been fortunate or unfortunate enough to pass through the emotions of a Zeppelin invasion of the British coast. It is an experience different in several ways from an air attack on the "London district."

One night I was in a town—somewhere on the southeast coast of England. Until 11 p. m. hundreds of holiday-makers had strolled about the promenade watching the soldiers taking possession, as usual, in war time, of the approaches down to the beach, and listened to the music in an atmosphere of tallow-chips at the principal cafe on the sea front.

The night was agreeable, and, if moonless, entirely clear. Some subalterns and several other officers of the royal naval air service were in evidence among the patrons of the resort.

At 11 o'clock the ordinary attractions of the promenade came to an end. Visitors returned to their habitations. It was dark, but the stars were bright. The sea was as calm and still as a millpond. I had forgotten the existence of Zeppelins, albeit a Taube had flown over the town the day before—Sunday—in broad daylight. There had been nothing whatever in the locality to suggest airship attacks, however, for many weeks.

Fine and Peaceful Day.

"Somewhere on the southeast coast" had had a particularly fine and peaceful day. There had been plenty of laughing bathers at high-tide before the luncheon hour; a band playing along the sands had reaped a harvest of pennies. In the early evening some soldiers had been busy with a game of cricket on the green; at dusk, there had been a well attended open-air concert; after dark there had been a migration of souls to the cafe of the tallow-dips.

So, at 11 p. m. the evening had closed uneventfully, summer visitors had indulged in all the mild diversions of an English seaside summer resort. The war had slipped into the background. People, indeed, were not thinking about the war at 11 p. m. in that seaside resort. Suddenly there was a rapid heavy-gun bombardment at ear-splitting range.

My first impression was that land batteries were firing on some seacrafts, possibly a marauding destroyer or submarine. The firing lasted for some minutes and then ceased abruptly. I went out into the roadway. From overhead I heard the loud whirring of machinery. It was continuous, sustained, prolonged, unlike the sound of an aeroplane, which comes and goes quickly. Some people had rushed to the doors of the houses in the immediate vicinity. A man was shouting:

"Put out that light over there! We don't want the street blown up!"

Curses followed and the light was extinguished.

"Did you hear it?" asked a figure in pajamas.

"Yes, it is an aeroplane—a Taube, I suppose!" replied an irritated voice.

"No," I interposed, "it's too loud and the speed of the thing is relatively too leisurely. It's a Zeppelin."

Somewhere overhead the unseen craft seemed to progress up the street as unconcernedly as a motor-omnibus in Piccadilly. Everyone could hear; no eyes could detect anything; nothing except a shooting star.

Picked Out by Searchlight.

After what seemed an interminable time, during which the aerial motors maintained their loud, unbroken buzzing, two searchlight rays showed, rising across the sky. In a flash they disclosed the long sausage body of an airship, unmistakably a Zeppelin, which had swung round so it was broadside on to where I was standing.

It paused. Then the antiaircraft guns started a cannonade. The shells began to burst in the sky all around the raider. The mobile searchlights and armored cars had certainly done their work. The Zeppelin was located. The silver-fish effect I had noticed on a previous occasion when an enemy airship had come within the range of the powerful London district searchlights, was absent. This thing in view now looked like light-colored German liver sausage on a fabulous scale.

I examined it critically. I looked away for a moment. When I looked again it was gone, evidently in a direction at right angles to its previous course. As I watched the sky, the ruby light of a British night flyer flashed reassuringly into being, high up, near where I had last seen the Zeppelin.

The Briton was climbing at a great pace; he switched out his light and vanished. The crowd of onlookers grew weary; some shuffled off indoors. I lingered. Presently, I heard the boom of a distant gun. Then another and yet another. But the sound was far, far away. The raid was over in my district.

When You Know What Is Best, Ask for it by Name

By J. R. HAMILTON
Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

If a man has anything he is proud of, he gives it a name whether it be a baby or a pair of boots. And the more he is proud of it, the more he talks about it.

Nameless things are seldom good and never reliable. If you want to cut down your cost of living the very best way to do it is to learn to ask only for standard articles.

When you know the name of a good maker of shirts or shoes, of furniture or pianos, of hardware or underwear, fix that name definitely in your mind and remember it when you come to buy.

Do not allow strange things to come into your home any more than you would allow strange people.

The brand and the trade-mark and the copyright are the letters of introduction from the maker to you. In this way he vouches for their respectability and guarantees their good behavior in your home.

There is a name for every good product that is made. And most of these names are known to every man and woman in America. Manufacturers have spent hundreds of millions of dollars to standardize these names in your mind. From the lining of a dress to a laundry soap; from a cleanser to a baking powder; from a suit of clothes to a kit of tools; you could call every standard article on the market by name if you would only remember to do so when you come to buy.

It is through your carelessness that lies and adulterations creep in. The standard is set by good men, but the standard is only maintained by you.

It is time for you to forget the generic name of every article, and remember only the standard name of its quality.

In the advertising news of this paper today you will find many of these standard names and brands of quality. This article is written for the sole purpose of remainding you to use those names. It is only fair that you should do as much for these good manufacturers as they are doing for you. It is only right that you should help in this great standardization of good products that is going on throughout America.

Begin now to ask by name for everything you buy. And you will find your satisfaction growing greater day by day and your optimism extending even down to your pocketbook.

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

On last Tuesday evening, Oct. 31st., the Misses Mary and Esther Henderson and Gaylon Markle celebrated their birthdays togerher by giving a Hallowe'en Party to about twenty of their friends and schoolmates. Invitations had been sent to their guests inviting them to a Hallowe'en party the only clew they had as to where the party was to be, was for them to hunt for the Jack-o-lantern which was to appear appear in the window at 8 o'clock. The girls thought they would have a little fun with their guests so they took a Jack-o-lantern down and placed it in the window at Miss Margaret Thornburg,s, trying to make them think the party was there but promptly at 8 o'clock the Jack-o-lantery appeared in the right window which proved to be at the home of Miss Gaylon Markle and the guests began to gather at once. The room was decorated in yellow and black chains, ears of corn, pumpkins, old black cats and Jack-o-lanterns, and as the guests came dressed in their Hallowe'en costumes they met with all sorts of ghosts and witches. The evening was spent in music and all sorts of comical games and contests and fortune telling, after which they marched out to the back yard where a bon-fire was built and they enjoyed a weiner roast returning to the house again with their weiners and received the rest of their refreshments which consisted of biscuits and butter, pumpkin pie, cake, pickles and fruit salad. At a late hour the guests departed each with an old witch as a souvenier and each one feeling that they had all enjoyed the evening very much and wishing the girls many more happy birthday's together. Those who enjoyed the occasion were the Misses Lucile, Alien and Lavern Rhodes, Leone Widderfield, Fannie Vallieu, Ilene Allen, Margaret and Ellen Lake, Mary Tyndall, Margaret Thornburg, Mary Pervines, Mae Moody, Minnie Wilmot, Helen Lake, Henry Markle, Mrs Maud Henderson, Mrs. Rose Beams, Mrs. W. BLESSED ABOVE ALL Special Reasons Why Americans Should Be Grateful to God This Year.

IF CUSTOM had not dictated nor time hallowed the setting aside of a day for a national recognition of Divine blessings, the situation in the world today would of itself have instinctively brought about the sentiments in the hearts of Americans suited to the spirit of thankfulness.

Yet there is no occasion to resort to the elements of contrast afforded by the pictures presented here and in other countries at this time. Our people are determined to assert the nation's rights as operative at all times, and desirous of defending them as a part of the heritage received from ancestors who feared God, but had scant respect for persons or nations when these ignored the principles of liberty for which they were unyieldingly set in defense.

It is beyond and outside of the field of contrast that the country bows today in acknowledgment of a Providence that has preserved it from the ravages of war and given it to partake richly of every form of prosperity for which a people might justly yearn. The crops are excellent. Labor in practically every field of endeavor is giving employment to the many. The distribution of material wealth is thus being effected in such manner that plenty abounds, and no table so poor that it cannot present evidences of good cheer on this festive occasion.

Mingled, nevertheless, with the consciousness of our own happy state must be the sobering sentiments that take cognizance of far other conditions elsewhere. For the war-worn nations it is wished that they may soon find an honorable way back to permanent peace. As these sentiments take form and logical order in our own minds, they cannot but suggest our own responsibilities, present and future. And among these the necessity of being prepared to assert and defend the principles for which we stand and to the preservation of which thus far in our political history we are, under the goodness of God, indebted for our present peace and prosperity, must have its recognized place.

SAYS HOT WATER WASHES POISONS FROM THE LIVER

Everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it, before breakfast.

To feel as fine as the proverbial fiddle, we must keep the liver washed clean, almost every morning, to prevent its sponge-like pores from clogging with indigestible material, sour bile and poisonous toxins, says a noted physician.

If you get headaches, it's your liver. If you catch cold easily, it's your liver. If you wake up with a bad taste, furred tongue, nasty breath or stomach becomes rancid, it's your liver. Sallow skin, muddy complexion, watery eyes all denote liver uncleanliness. Your liver is the most important, also the must abused and neglected organ of the body. Few know its function or how to release the dammed-up body waste, bile and toxins. Most folks resort to violent calomel, which is a dangerous, salivating chemical which can only be used occasionally because it accumulates in the tissues, also attacks the bones.

Every man and woman, sick or well, should drink each morning before breakfast, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, to wash from the liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, the poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Limestone phosphate does not restrict the diet like calomel, because it can not salivate, for it is harmless and you can eat anything afterwards. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, and any pharmacist will sell you a quarter pound, which is sufficient for a demonstration of how hot water and limestone phosphate cleans, stimulates and freshens the liver, keeping you feeling fit day in and day out.

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Salts fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

The Destroying Angel

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

AUTHOR OF "THE POOL OF FLAME," "THE BRONZE BELL," "THE BLACK BAG," "THE BRASS BOWL."

COPYRIGHT BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

EMINENT surgeons tell Hugh Whitaker that six months is his life limit. Peter Stark, intimate friend, finds him stunned by the news and arranges to take Whitaker on a long South sea yacht trip. The sick man sneaks off to a country hotel, intending to kill himself, but surprises a young girl in the act of drinking poison. She is Mary Ladislas, love-starved daughter of a New York plutocrat, deserted by the man with whom she planned clandestine marriage. To save her good name, Whitaker marries the girl (knowing that six months is his limit), gives her money and puts her on a train for home. He runs plump into Stark, hunting him. Months later, the yacht burns at sea. All hands die but Whitaker, who is reported lost. A delicate operation restores his health, and after five prosperous years in Australia, he returns to New York—one back from the dead! We find him—in this installment—talking with his old law partner, Drummond, about the prospects of finding that little girl wife. A beautiful actress enters the story.

"Would you know her if you saw her?"

"I don't know." Whitaker frowned with annoyance. "She's six years older—"

"Well, but what was she like?" Drummond pursued curiously.

Whitaker shook his head. "It's not easy to remember. Matter of fact, I don't believe I ever got one good square look at her. It was twilight in the hotel, when I found her; we sat talking in absolute darkness, toward the end; even in the minister's study there was only a green-shaded lamp on the table; and on the train—well, we were both too much worked up, I fancy, to pay much attention to details."

"Blonde or brune?"

"I swear I don't know. She wore one of those funny knitted caps, tight down over her hair, all the time."

Drummond laughed quietly.

"I don't feel in a joking humor," Whitaker said roughly. "It's a serious matter and wants serious treatment . . . What else have we got to mull over?"

Drummond shrugged suavely. "There's enough to keep us busy for several hours," he said. "For instance, there's my stewardship."

"Your which?"

"My care of your property. You left a good deal of money and securities lying round loose, you know; naturally I felt obliged to look after 'em. There was no telling when Widow Whitaker might walk in and demand an accounting. I presume we might as well run over the account—though it is getting late."

"Half-past four," Whitaker informed him, consulting his watch. "Take too long for to-day. Some other time."

Drummond's reply was postponed by the office boy, who popped in on the heels of a light knock.

"Mr. Max's outside," he announced.

"O the deuce!" The exclamation seemed to escape Drummond's lips involuntarily. He tightened them angrily, as though regretting the lapse of self-control, and glanced hurriedly askance to see if Whitaker had noticed. "I'm busy," he added, a trace sullenly. "Tell him I've gone out."

"But he's got 'nappointment," the boy protested. "And besides, I told him you was in."

"You needn't fob him off on my account," Whitaker interposed. "We can finish our confab later—Monday—any time. It's time for me to be getting up-town, anyway."

"It isn't that," Drummond explained doggedly. "Only—the man's a bore, and—"

"It isn't Jules Max?" Whitaker excitedly. "Not little Jules Max, who used to stage manage our amateur shows?"

"That's the man," Drummond admitted with plain reluctance.

"Then have him in, by all means. I want to say howdy to him, if nothing more. And then I'll clear out and leave you to his troubles."

Drummond laughed a trifle sourly. "Max has developed into a heavy-weight entrepreneur, you know."

"Meaning theatrical manager? Then why not say so? But I might've guessed he'd drift into something of the sort."

A moment later Whitaker was vigorously pumping the unresisting—indeed the apparently boneless—hand of Jules Max. The hat that had made Hammerstein famous Max had appropriated—straight crown, flat brim and immaculate gloss—bodily. Beneath it his face was small of feature, and fat. A pince-nez sheltered his near-sighted eyes. His short, round little body was invariably by day dressed in a dark gray morning-coat, white-edged waistcoat, assertively-striped trousers, and patent-leather shoes with white spats. He had a passion for lemon-colored gloves of thinnest kid and slender malacca walking-sticks. His dignity was an awful thing, as ingrained as his strut.

He reasserted the dignity now with a jerk of his maltreated hand, readjusted his glasses, and resumed his stare.

"Either," he observed, "you're Hugh Whitaker come to life or a deuced outrage."

"Both if you like."

"You sound like both," complained the little man. "Anyway, you were drowned in the Philippines or somewhere long ago, and I never waste time on a dead one. . . . Drummond—" He turned to the lawyer with a vastly business-like air.

"No, you don't!" Whitaker insisted, putting himself between the two men. "I admit that you're a great man; you might at least admit that I'm a live one."

A mollified smile moderated the small man's manner. "That's a bargain," he said, extending a pale yellow paw; "I'm glad to see you again, Hugh. When did you recrudesce?"

"An hour ago," Drummond answered for him; "blew in here as large as life and twice as important. He's been running a gold farm out in New Guinea. What do you know about that?"

"It's very interesting," Max conceded. "You've asked him, of course?" he demanded of Drummond, nodding toward Whitaker.

Drummond flushed slightly. "No chance," he said. "I was on the point of doing it when you butted in."

"What's this?" inquired Whitaker.

Max delivered himself of a startling bit of information: "He's going to get married."

Whitaker stared. "Drummond? Not really?"

Drummond acknowledged his guilt brazenly: "Next week, in fact."

"But why didn't you say anything about it?"

"You didn't give me an opening. Besides, to welcome a deserter from the great beyond is enough to drive all other thoughts from a man's mind."

"There's to be a supper in honor of the circumstances, at the Beaux Arts tonight," supplemented Max. "You'll come, of course."

"I'll be there—and furthermore, I'll be waiting at the church a week hence—or whenever it's to come off. And now I want to congratulate you." Whitaker held Drummond's hand in one of those long, hard grips that mean much between men. "But mostly I want to congratulate her. Who is she?"

"Sara Law," said Drummond, with pride in his quick color and the lift of his chin.

"The greatest living actress on the English-speaking stage," Max announced, preening himself importantly. "My own discovery."

"Of course I've heard—but I have been out of touch with such things," Whitaker apologized. "When shall I see her?"

"In honor of her retirement," Max answered, fussing with a gardenia on his lapel. "She retires from the stage finally, and forever—she says—when the curtain falls tonight."

"Then I've got to be in the theater tonight—if that's the case," said Whitaker.

"'Fraid you won't get in, though," Drummond doubted darkly. "Everything in the house for this final week was sold out a month ago. Even the speculators are cleaned out."

"Tut!" the manager reproved him loftily. "Hugh is going to see Sara Law act for the last time from my personal box—aren't you, Hugh?"

"You bet I am!" Whitaker asserted with conviction.

"Then come along." Max caught him by the arm and started for the door. "So long, Drummond . . ."

CHAPTER V.

Curtain.

Nothing would satisfy Max but that Whitaker should dine with him. He consented to drop him at the Ritz-Carlton, in order that he might dress, only on the condition that Whitaker would meet him at seven, in the white room at the Knickerbocker.

"Just mention my name to the head waiter," he said with magnificence; "or if I'm there first, you can't help seeing me. Everybody knows my table—the little one in the southeast corner. . . . Shoot, James!"

The latter phrase was Max's way of ordering the driver to move on. The car snorted resentfully, then pulled smoothly and swiftly away. Max waved a jaunty farewell with a lemon-colored hand, over the back of the tonneau.

Whitaker went up to his room in a reflective mood in which the theatrical man had little place. Since his arrival in New York he had fallen into the habit of seeking the view from his window when in meditative humor. A view of ten thousand roofs, inexpressibly enchanting. . . . Somewhere—perhaps—in that welter of steel and stone, as eternal and as restless as the sea, was the woman Whitaker had married, working out her lonely destiny. A haphazard biscuit tossed from his window might fall upon the very roof that sheltered her; he might search for a hundred years and never cross her path.

He wondered. . . .

The possibility that she might have married a second time did not disturb his pulse by the least fraction of a beat. He even contemplated the chance that she might be dead with normal equanimity. Fortunate, that he didn't love her. More fortunate still, that he loved no one else.

Incontinently he wrote and dispatched a long, extravagant cablegram to Mrs. Pettit in care of the American embassy, little doubting that she would immediately answer.

* * * * * * *

When eventually he strode into the white room, Max was already established at the famous little table in the southeast corner. Whitaker was conscious of turning heads and guarded comment as he took his place opposite the little fat man.

"Make you famous in a night," Max assured him importantly. "Don't happen to need any notoriety, do you?"

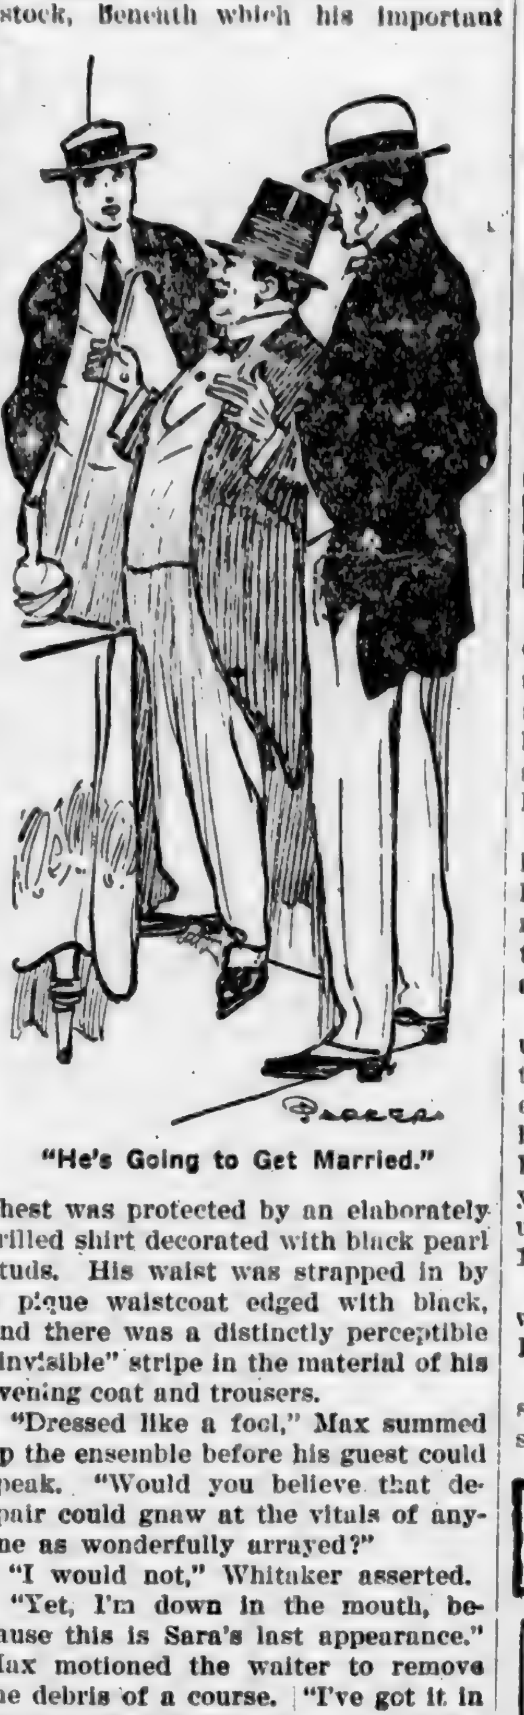
"No, thanks."

"Dine with me here three nights hand-running and they'll let you into the Syndicate by the back door without even asking your name. P. T. A's one grand little motto, my boy."

"P. T. A.?"

"Pays to advertise. Paste that in your hat. Look me over," he requested abruptly, leaning back. "I guess I'm some giddy young buck, what?"

Whitaker reviewed the striking effect Max had created by encasing his brief neck and double chin in an old-fashioned high collar and black silk stock, beneath which his important chest was protected by an elaborately frilled shirt decorated with black pearl studs. His waist was strapped in by a pique waistcoat edged with black, and there was a distinctly perceptible "invisible" stripe in the material of his evening coat and trousers.



"He's Going to Get Married."

"Dressed like a fool," Max summed up the ensemble before his guest could speak. "Would you believe that despair could gnaw at the vitals of any-one as wonderfully arrayed?"

"I would not," Whitaker asserted.

"Yet, I'm down in the mouth, because this is Sara's last appearance." Max motioned the waiter to remove the debris of a course. "I've got it in my knob that she's my mascot. If she leaves me, my luck goes with her. I made her, all right, but she made me, too; and it sprains my sense of good business to break up a paying combination like that."

"Nonsense," Whitaker contended warmly. "If I'm not mistaken, you were telling me this afternoon that you stand next to Belasco as a producing manager. The loss of one star isn't going to rob you of that prestige, is it?"

"You never can tell," the little man contended darkly; "I wouldn't bet thirty cents my next production would turn out a hit. I've had several close calls with Sara—she's threatened to chuck the stage often before this; but every time something happened to make her change her mind. I've got a hunch maybe something will happen this time, too. If it does, I won't want any partners."

How much information do you wager that Max is in a position to give Whitaker if he were of a mind to do so?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

WHO IS WHO NOW

GREAT JUNGLE FIGHTER

A wonderful gift for the particular kind of warfare he is waging against the Germans in East Africa is the characteristic an English writer attributes to General Smuts, the Boer leader, who is pressing the Teutons hard in their sole remaining African colony.

His remarkable enveloping movements invariably achieve their object and one realizes how invaluable in this part of the world is the experience of the Boer cavalry. To his knowledge of local conditions and the way to deal with them he adds absolute secrecy as to his plans. No one but himself knows what he proposes to do until the last moment. Such a general would be the despair of the most skillful espionage system in the world.

General Smuts does not spare himself in the field, and to see him up at the front is to be afforded a revelation of his energy. One would have smiled to see him pushing his motor car whenever it got stuck in the mud or in some morass. Like the troops, he lives on dried meat.

In appearance he is short, thick set, with an imperial beard and shrewd eyes. He suggests the lawyer rather than the field commander, though he is both. One remembers he was attorney general at twenty-eight. Speaking English perfectly, one is only just made aware that he is not an Englishman.

JIMINEZ SEEKS REST

Gen. Juan Isidor Jiminez, who was president of the Dominican republic until May 8, when he resigned under pressure from his congress, after a life of storm and battle, is now seeking peace for his nerves in the mountains near Wernersville, Pa.

General Jiminez was president of Santo Domingo off and on for five years. He administered his office with dignity and effectiveness. He led armies. He defied a congress. He stepped defiantly into a presidential chair made vacant by assassination. More than once he shook his fist in the face of Europe. And now he wishes to bide awhile in the tranquillity that only doctors and trained nurses are able to maintain in a disordered world. Such is life for the adventurers.

Up the hill came the veteran general the other day in a big motor car. On one side of him was his wife, on the other was his youthful daughter, Carmela Jiminez, a girl with the serene voice and face of a nun. The general is an old man now. He is almost seventy. He has the look of a sage. He will not talk Latin-American politics or of anything that has gone on or that still goes on in the small republic.

PUBLIC LAND SPECIALIST

Charles D. Mahaffie of Portland, Ore., has assumed his duties as solicitor of the department of the interior, and has taken up the study of public land cases, in which he is a specialist and which he will be called upon to handle principally in his new position.

He was born in Kansas, but spent his early boyhood in Oklahoma, where he was educated and where he was admitted to the bar. He had been some time in Portland, Ore., practicing law at the time of his appointment.

Mr. Mahaffie received his legal education at Oxford university, receiving the degree of D. C. L. He was awarded a Rhodes scholarship from Oklahoma in 1905, after graduating from Kingfisher college (Okla.) in the same year. He was a member of the faculty of Princeton university during 1908-9 as instructor in jurisprudence.

At the time of his appointment he was secretary of the University club, Portland, Ore., and treasurer of the Oregon Bar association.

Mr. Mahaffie is much interested in the conservation of the natural resources of the country. He was for some years secretary of the Oregon conservation commission. He is a bachelor and a tennis enthusiast.

COUNTESS SAID NOTHING

© CLINEDINST

When the Countess von Bernstorff, wife of the German ambassador to the United States, arrived at New York after a prolonged stay in Europe, the representatives of the press naturally were eager to get from her some statement concerning conditions in Germany, where she had been since the beginning of the great war. The count, however, headed the reporters off and himself went down the bay in a revenue cutter to meet his wife. When he was asked if the countess would say something for publication, about the war or anything else, the ambassador volunteered to act as intermediary between the newspaper men and his wife.

"My dear," he said, "these gentlemen would like to know that you have nothing to say."

Naturally, after that, the countess had nothing to say. All who participated in the incident admitted that the count is a diplomat. Before her marriage the countess was Miss Luckemeyer of New York.

ADVERTISE YOUR CITY.

Apropos of the proposed appointment of a commission for the advertising of Chicago as a commercial and educational center, the Union Signal suggests to that city and to cities generally that there are other methods less expensive which produce greater results. "Have you noticed the free publicity given to Seattle, Portland, Des Moines and Denver?" it says. "The public is interested in these cities now as never before and is watching these 'experiments in decency and morality' with far greater eagerness than it ever evinced when they were only ordinary money-accumulating centers.

"If Kansas were to blot off of her statute books her prohibitory law, she would lose a fine bit of advertising. The attacks of the liquor interests must net that plucky, prosperous, progressive state thousands of dollars every year. Not only do the liquorites publish whole pages of fabricated fairy tales concerning the defamed Sunflower state, but they run their printing presses overtime putting on the market booklets devoted entirely to the 'failure' of prohibition in Kansas.

"This publicity works so well that men come from across the ocean to study the state which is 'failing' at such a rate that it burns its last mortgage bond and finds itself out of debt; that it discovers it has the highest per capita wealth of any state and a tax rate lower than that of any other State except one.

"And because prohibition is making Denver, Portland, Des Moines and Seattle better cities than ever before, the public is talking about them, writing about them, advertising them. They are being used to 'point a moral and adorn a tale' as communities in which crime has decreased and bank deposits increased; in which vice districts have disappeared and legitimate business has prospered. To be sure the criminal element has sent out its warning against them as territory to be avoided, and the white slavers are advertising them as of no use for their vicious purposes, but the patrons of educational institutions are commending them as safe places to send their boys and girls; the owners of large industrial establishments are considering them as locations for their plants where 'safety first' for employees will prevail and home-makers are finding in these cities an ideal place to rear families.

"If you want a real, permanent, satisfactory boom for your city, try the method of Seattle, Denver, Des Moines, Portland and other saloonless centers."

BOOSTERS AND BREWERIES.

While the national Democratic convention was in St Louis an effort was made by the local newspapers to boost the home town. The St. Louis Times issued a special convention supplement in which the industries of that city were advertised. Under the heading, "Facts About St. Louis Worth Knowing," 50 of the most prominent facts were mentioned. Despite the fact that St. Louis is one of two cities in the country most conspicuous for its beer industry, not one word was said about the breweries. Under the heading, "The Exports of St. Louis," beer appears in its alphabetical place. Among exports this product could not be ignored, but the commercial bodies of St. Louis, judging by their display elsewhere, were ashamed to include a reference to beer as one of their chief products.

WHISKY DOES NOT WARM.

Sir Lauder Brunton, in his "Lectures on the Action of Medicines" gives a striking example of the danger of taking alcoholic drinks to "keep warm." A party of engineers were surveying in the Sierra Nevada. They camped at a great height above sea level, where the air was very cold, and they were miserable. Some of them drank a little whisky and felt less uncomfortable. Some of them drank a lot of whisky and went to bed feeling very jolly and comfortable indeed. In the morning men who had not taken any whisky got up all right; those who had taken a little whisky got up feeling very unhappy; the men who had taken a lot of whisky did not get up at all; they were simply frozen to death. "They had warmed," adds the professor, "the surface of their bodies at the expense of their internal organs."

NEVER SOBER.

The so-called moderate drinker, who consumes his bottle of wine as a matter of course each day with his dinner—and who doubtless would declare that he is never under the influence of liquor—is in reality never actually sober from one week's end to another.—Professor Aschaffenburg, Heidelberg University, Germany.

INCREASED DEPOSITS.

"The total amount of deposits in the banks of Little Rock on June 23, 1915, was $11,626,676.21, and the deposits on June 30, 1916, were $15,294,458.31," says W. E. Lenon, assistant manager Little Rock Clearing House association. "These were the dates of the call made by the state bank commissioner, and the figures are taken from the reports of the banks made in accordance with that call."

The state of Arkansas has been dry since January 1, 1916.

Strong Drinks Irritate

Strong drinks like beer, whiskey, tea and coffee, irritate the kidneys and habitual use tends to weaken them. Daily backache, with headache, nervousness, dizzy spells and a rheumatic condition should be taken as a warning of kidney trouble. Cut out, or at least moderate, the stimulant, and use Doan's Kidney Pills. They are fine for weak kidneys. Thousands recommend them.

CAPTAIN GOT NEW TROUSERS

Incident That Has More Than a Touch of Comedy Occurred on the Isonzo Front.

How near tragedy and comedy are in the happenings along the battle line is shown by this incident of the fighting on the Isonzo river front.

A Caproni fighting aeroplane that had gone from the Italian side was hit by the antiaircraft guns and fell within the Austrian lines. The pilot was killed, the observer was somewhat scratched, but otherwise unhurt. His trousers, however, were ripped "from A to Z."

Captain Amegliano, the captured flyer, was inconsolable, and to an Austrian officer who sympathized with him he said:

"My poor comrade will be buried and I cannot even pay him my last respects—not in this gear."

"If that is all," remarked the Austrian, "we'll soon mend that." And, after obtaining permission, he went up in his Fokker machine and threw a letter into the Italian line, acquainting them with the fact, and requesting "a pair of new trousers for Captain Amegliano."

Sure enough, an hour or so later there was an Italian machine high in the air, and a package dropped that contained a laurel wreath for the dead and a pair of trousers for the living.

INTERURBAN CAR HITS SCHOOL HACK

SEVENTEEN PUPILS AND DRIVER INJURED IN JAY COUNTY.

TWO INJURED GIRLS MAY DIE

Only Three Out of Twenty School Children Escape Injury When Muncie and Portland Traction Car Crashes Into the Rear End of a Hack.

Redkey—Two girls were hurt so seriously they may die, and fifteen other school children suffered painful injuries when a line car on the Muncie & Portland line of the Union Traction company of Indiana struck a school hack at Como, a few miles northeast of here.

Maggie Gaunt suffered fractures of her skull and on both legs and one arm; and Goldie Stephens suffered a severe wound on her head and was injured internally. It is believed neither child can live.

Peter Knoth, driver of the hack, was thrown into the road and injured so severely he has been unconscious, and unable to make a statement regarding the accident. Twenty pupils were in the hack on their way to school, and only three escaped injury.

The car crashed into the rear end of the hack, crushing it and injuring all the children in the rear part of the seats. The children in the front were injured when thrown into the road, and by flying pieces of the demolished rig.

Observes 105th Anniversary.

Lafayette—Headed by its president, John M. Stahl, of Chicago, the Illinois Society of the War of 1812 made a pilgrimage to the Tippecanoe battlefield and celebrated the one-hundred-and-fifth anniversary of the battle which resulted in the defeat of the Indian confederacy by the soldiers of Indiana and Kentucky under command of General William Henry Harrison. Several hundred members of the organization attended.

Admits Woman to Bar.

Evansville—In order that she might assist her husband in his law practice, Mrs. Margaret L. Roberts, the wife of O. H. Roberts, has been admitted to the bar in both the superior and circuit court here. She took a course in a law school last year, supplementing several years' study with her husband, and is the second woman to be admitted to the bar here during the last fifteen years.

Forest Fire Under Control.

Nashville—A forest fire, which had been raging in the southern part of Brown county is now under control. The fire was started by a hunter and swept over more than 200 acres of land. Several thousand dollars' worth of valuable timber and fencing was destroyed. Wide furrows were plowed around the fire and these furrows, with the aid of 100 fighters, have checked the flames.

Indiana Naval Officers Get Promotion.

Indianapolis—Lieutenant-Commander J. H. Comfort, in the charge of the Indiana division of navy recruiting offices, with headquarters in the Federal building here, has received notice of his promotion to be executive officer of the battleship Kentucky, with orders to report for duty on January 3. He will be second in command of the battleship.

Governor Grants Remission.

Indianapolis—Governor Ralston has granted a remission of fine to William Maynard Wells, sentenced to a term at the state farm from Lake county, February 8, 1916 and fined $150 and costs. He had served his term and eighty days on his fine, and now is in failing health, the parole papers showed.

Pensions for Indianians.

Vincennes—An unidentified man was ground to pieces under the wheels of a north bound Chicago & Eastern Illinois passenger train at Smith's switch, seven miles north of here.

STATE BODY TO INDORSE JUNIOR MOVING PICTURES

Would Better Moving Pictures for Young People Throughout the State by Forming a Circuit.

Indianapolis—A state-wide organization for the indorsing of junior moving pictures has been made at a meeting of Indiana persons interested in the plan here. Mrs. David Ross, of Indianapolis, was elected president; Mrs. Hugh Stevenson, Brazil, first vice-president; Mrs. Fred McCulloch, Fort Wayne; second vice-president; Mrs. Edward Bailey, Frankfort, third vice-president; Mrs. C. O. Fenton, Logansport, fourth vice-president; Mrs. J. F. Edwards, Indianapolis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Leon Stern, Terre Haute, treasurer.

The object of the organization is to procure better moving pictures for young and to form a circuit in the state whereby the affiliated clubs may know what has been indorsed by clubs in other cities and thus make the work of indorsing much less than if each club makes investigation into each film.

Any club or organization interested in better moving pictures is eligible for each affiliated body. Each club will have two delegates.

Food Inspector Issues Warning.

Indianapolis—H. E. Barnard, state food and drug commissioner, has sent out notices to all commission merchants in Indiana and to weights and measures inspectors throughout the state, calling attention to the provisions of the weights and measures law that provide that "all commodities not sold by standard weight or measure shall be marked with the net weight or volume of contents on the package." This requirement of the statute is being violated persistently, Mr. Barnard says.

Draws Fine for Hunting.

Noblesville—Silas H. Rogers, of Cicero, was arrested by J. J. Bravy, of Anderson, deputy game warden, who found seventy-five muskrat hides in Rogers' cellar. Rogers explained that the offense really was committed by his son, and not himself.

Bedford B. & O. Station Burns.

Bedford—The B. & O. Station, of the Bedford branch here has been destroyed by fire. George Gardner, agent and operator, was burned severely in trying to put out the fire.

Worker's Leg Crushed at Brick Plant.

Brownstown—George Taylor, age forty-five, was seriously hurt when both his legs were crushed in the shale crusher at the Medora brick plant. Amputation may not be necessary.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of Sunday School Course, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 12

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

LESSON TEXT—Romans 14:13-15:3.

GOLDEN TEXT—It is not good to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth.—Rom. 14:21.

The early Christian church had two outstanding problems, the question of the Sabbath days (two of them) and the question of eating meat offered to idols. This lesson suggests the solution of the latter. Our modern problem of intoxicating liquors is very much the same as this ancient one of the early Gentile Christians.

I. "Let us not therefore judge one another" (vv. 13-15). There are certain acts which are universally conceded to be right and within the Christian law of liberty. There are also other acts which are as plainly prohibited. There are a large number of acts which lie in the region between these two, and men ought to be careful how they condemn one another for these latter things. Where good and true men differ, their acts, on the matter of the Sabbath (See Col. 2:16), or on temperance, must be determined as being unto the Lord, sincerely, conscientiously. It is not for us to judge (v. 13), literally, to pronounce judgment. They have a right to their opinion and to their liberty of thought and action, but (vv. 14, 22, 23) as for Paul or the Christian, he must have a clear conscience. He must have faith, and be assured that he is right; otherwise he is condemned by God and by his own conscience, and is not a sincere Christian disciple. The word "therefore" in verse 13 points back to verse 12, which ought to be carefully pondered. As we have each to render our accounts to God, we should stop judging one another. Food is a very proper thing, and laws are also proper, yet love is the ruling principle of the Christian life.

We ought to have our liberty curtailed rather than have our souls lost. If we magnify our liberty to the sacrifice of our brother's soul we "walk no longer in love." The demands of Christian love are more to the true followers of Christ than the permissions of Christian liberty. The privilege of eating and drinking while it injures others, however harmless to yourself, is not to be tolerated.

The word "stumbleth" here used (v. 21) implies a movable trap or snare, literally any impediment placed in the way so as to cause another to fall. We must never forget that even a weak brother is "a brother for whom Christ died."

II. "Let not your good be evil spoken of" (vv. 16-23). The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but it is a life of righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Our liberty is to be so used that it shall not be evil spoken of. The real proof that we are in the kingdom of God and that the kingdom of God is in us is not found in our scrupulousness or lack of it, in our eating and drinking, but in the manifestations of righteousness in our lives, and of having peace in our hearts (15:13). This peace must be manifested toward our fellow men (v. 19; Ch. 15:18) and being filled with "joy in the Holy Ghost." The object of our pursuit is to be the things which make for peace, the things whereby we may fill one another up, not the exploitation of some pet hobby, for the kingdom of God does not consist of riding hobbies.

In this matter of temperance reform we all recognize that alcohol has many uses besides that for drinking purposes, and that there are various opinions about drinking certain forms of it, and various ways of advancing the temperance cause, all of which are honestly held by many good men, but Christian patriotism demands that every true-hearted man or woman, everyone who is loyal to this country, to humanity and to his God, should take Paul's position, (1) That he will not be a stumbling block in the way of the weak and of the young. (2) That he will not do anything to destroy his brother for whom Christ died. (3) That he will deny himself anything for their sake. (4) That his attitude will be that of love and not of selfishness. This places temperance on a high moral plane, but the world is also beginning to recognize that the temperance question is also an economic one.

It is well to have faith, but it is also well to have the love that does not injure others by the exercise of that faith. The question is, "Are you perfectly sure this thing is right?" When in doubt as to whether any action will please God, doubt your doubts, and avoid that act.

III. "We then that are strong" (15:1-3). This section is in reality a continuation of Chapter 14. Paul is continuing his thought that we are not to please ourselves, but rather to live such lives as will edify or build up our neighbor. Our strength is not given to us that we may glory or lord it over our weaker brethren, but rather that we may serve them.

To please my neighbor does not mean that "when in Rome do as the Romans do," but rather to live such a life that my action will be for the good and edification of my brother, thereby pleasing God (Gal. 1:10).

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands of Men and Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

Nature warns you when the track of health is not clear. Kidney and bladder troubles cause many annoying symptoms and great inconvenience both day and night.

Unhealthy kidneys may cause lumbago, rheumatism, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints or muscles, at times have headache or indigestion, as time passes you may have a sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, sometimes feel as though you had heart trouble, may have plenty of ambition but no strength, get weak and lose flesh.

If such conditions are permitted to continue, serious results may be expected; Kidney Trouble in its very worst form may steal upon you.

Prevalency of Kidney Disease.

Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalency of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are among the most common diseases that prevail, they are almost the last recognized by patients, who usually content themselves with doctoring the effects, while the original disease may constantly undermine the system.

If you feel that your kidneys are the cause of your sickness or run down condition, try taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the famous kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys improve, they will help the other organs to health.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at all drug stores. Don't make any mistake but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., which you will find on every bottle.

SPECIAL NOTE—You may obtain a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root by enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. This gives you the opportunity to prove the remarkable merit of this medicine. They will also send you a book of valuable information, containing many of the thousands of grateful letters received from men and women who say they found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed in kidney, liver and bladder troubles. The value and success of Swamp-Root are so well known that our readers are advised to send for a sample size bottle. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

Glando Did It.

Interesting Statement Given by Paulding Man.

Mr. C. A. Hughes, of Paulding, Ohio, said: "I had suffered so much from backache and kidney trouble that I was hardly able to drag around. After taking one treatment of Glando Tonic I was so improved that I took another treatment to make it a cure. I am now a well man and can heartily recommend Glando Tonic to all suffering from backache or kidney trouble."

A sluggish glandular system is responsible for most serious illnesses. Such a condition should not be neglected. The wonderful cures affected by Glando, the Great Gland Tonic, is due to the fact that it acts directly upon the glandular system. The three treatments which each package contains being necessary to effect a cure. Treatment No. One starts glandular activity. Treatment No. Two throws off the accumulated poisons and prepares the system for a tonic. Treatment No. Three is a splendid tonic that builds up the entire system. For sale by All Druggists.

The enrollment of the Auburn High School has reached the 200 mark, the largest enrollment in the history of the school. St. Joe claims the largest number in its history—or at least for a number of years, 55 are in attendance.

DeVere Wallace returned home for election but as he failed to register, he was not allowed to vote. James Fisher came back from Ohio to vote and was unable to exercise this right as he had moved from the state and could not claim this as his residence. Some of the men folks need instructions too, as to how to mark their ballots. A number of them were spoiled and necessarily were thrown out.

The High School Alumni play given at Widney's Opera House, last Tuesday evening, was greeted with a packed house. It was performed by members of the High School Alumni, and as an amateur production was well rendered. The door receipts were $69 25 after deducting for expenses they will have about $58, which will be used to purchase equipment for the St. Joe High School. The public appreciates the efforts of the schools, in doing all they can to push things along, by patronizing them. Special music was rendered between acts by members of the society.

CAUSES FOR THANKS

Season is a Time for All to Remember the Blessings of the Year.

WHAT does Thanksgiving mean to you? Does it mean only a day of special feasting? Does it bring to you only the pleasure of rich foods and elaborate meals? Or do you remember in the midst of feasting that it is a day for giving thanks? We should all take the time from this day, filled with pleasures, to look back over the past year and remember all the blessings for which we have to be thankful.

No matter how much sorrow and trouble may have to come to us in the past 12 months, there have been many blessings as well if we will stop to consider them. Perhaps at the time of trouble we were blinded to the blessings, but now, if we look back with clearer judgment, we can see that they were there all the time, sometimes blessings in disguise, but blessings none the less.

We can surely afford to spare from this whole day of pleasure a couple of hours for silent retrospection and appreciation. Let us each slip away from the crowd for just a small part of the day and give ourselves up to a mental review of the past year, with a special eye to the benefits we have received. It will come as a surprise to many to see how many the blessings have been and how comparatively few the misfortunes.

There is first of all, health. Those who have sound health never stop to be grateful for it, it seems so much a part of them. And yet were these healthy ones laid on a sick bed for months at a time they would soon realize how much of a blessing health really is. The chronic invalids in their beds and wheeled chairs appreciate to the full the blessings of good health. Let those of us, then, who are well and strong be thankful for our health.

Then there is love. Those of us who have the devoted love of a mother or father, of a sister or brother, of a child or a husband, will do well to send up an extra pean of thanksgiving for the blessing of this love. Only too often, the only ones who appreciate the full blessing of love are those who have lost all earthly ties.

If the family circle about the festive board is unbroken is not that a reason for full rejoicing? When so many fathers, husbands, brothers and sons are falling on every side in Europe's inhuman war we should give thanks with all our hearts that our own dear ones go unharmed.

So each of us will find, if we search our minds, that we have many blessings to be thankful for. It is only the hardened heart which feels no gratitude. And we should all fill our minds with love and appreciation on Thanksgiving day, of the great good we have received in the past and the hope to be more worthy of it in the future.

Proper Spirit of the Season.

The proclamations of those who hold high station as the representatives of the people very properly bespeak the spirit the nation should manifest. The manifestation of that spirit is, however, not alone in feasting and the joyous acclaim of thousands on the field of sport. The consciousness of blessing and the returning of thanks therefor by every man according as he is blessed, no less than the voicing of a prayer that he be made ever more sensible of all his blessings, will make the day for all the holy day it should be. Gratitude for the guidance thus far; strength to meet the trials still to come.

A Thanksgiving.

For days of health, for nights of quiet sleep; for seasons of bounty and of beauty, for all earth's contributions to our need through this past year: good Lord, we thank thee.—William Gannett.

Enemy of the Cranberry.

An enemy which would rob the Thanksgiving table of cheap cranberries is the cranberry root worm, and the government has been attempted to circumvent this destroyer, too. Experts of the department of agriculture have found that by stimulating the growth of the plants with fertilizers—a practice that has not been followed in the past—the ravages of this ordinarily destructive creature can be made almost negligible.

Worthy Supplication.

For all blessings which may help to make the land we love more worthy of its fortune, its founders, its destiny. Amen.

Speedy and Easy Riding

There's little comfort in most low priced cars. You can't use their speeds. They jostle you—they ride roughly—they don't hold the road.

The $635 Overland is different. It is not only the speediest of low priced cars—

But you can use the full speed of its powerful motor when you need it.

It has long 42-inch, easy riding, shock absorbing cantilever rear springs. In addition the 75 B Overland is a longer car—104-inch wheelbase. And it has 4-inch tires.

Its smoothness and ease of riding at any speed would do justice to a much larger and heavier car.

Come in and let us demonstrate. That's the best kind of proof.

The Loyal Sons and Daughters Class of the Christian Sunday School very pleasantly surprised Mrs. Foster Gee on her birthday, Saturday evening. Besides about a dozen members of the class the following gues s were present:-Fred Jenkins and wife, Mrs. E. R. Kinsey and Mrs. Merritt Maxwell. Refreshments were served and a jolly good time was had.

THE GLORIOUS PUMPKIN

Queen of the holiday pastries, the pumpkin pie proudly occupies the place of honor. At this season of the year at least French pastry withdraws modestly in favor of the purely American viand; nor is the bulwark of British Christmases—the mince pie—considered especially in keeping for Thanksgiving.

Hank's Version of the Concert

Say, I reckon that little music biznes tother night wuz jest about the best thing ever. It started out with a rip and a roar en it ended with a whiz-bang; en all thru it the results were mighty satisfactery.

Prof. Smith (the one whats hookin up our schools in such good shape) he cum out fust en flopped his hands at us en sez "Allow me, etc" en then he told us about Jim Riley, what died sometime ago—You all know Jim—He's the feller thet wuz addressin a wimmens assassination at Muncie last year—en when a delegation of em met him at the tran he sez, "What good lookin wimen" en tha sez (quiet like) "Wesh we culd return the compliment" en Jim sez right out loud "You could if you wuz as big a liar as I am" thets Jim—Well ther's a feller comin to superstitch him, er sumthin like that, pretty soon, en you don't want to miss it. Watch fer ennouncements. En then the big wind begun to blow. Them fellers cum hoppin out on the stage with their claw hammer coats en began tew hum like a mess uv bumble bees. En then they busted out intew the durndest purtiest song thet I ever herd. It jest floated en drifted en melted away like strained honey—twas sweeter then that—twas sweeter then a sweetheart sweetened with white sugar mixed with powdered silver en seed diamonds—it wuz jest too sweet—I fainted.

En when I cum tew the foundation feller—I guess tha called him the base—wuz jest a knockin the doublegeerd tar out uv thet fiddle uv his,—he tweedled a little way up in the sopraner and he twoodleoodled a little in the bas—en he pinched its cheeks en pulled its nose en slapped its ears—en then he drawed a crooked stick across its tummy, en Lord a mighty how it did holler. En there wuz unly one thing that kinde spoiled things, en thet wuz the durned pianner. Every time tha touched it tha grinned—en no wonder fer the squeeky thing sounded like a lost soul searching its mate in perdition. But it couldnt be helped en I allow es how evry one must hev been satisfied frum the ginerel remarks thet I over heard es tha went out.

Jest seemed es tho this first number fits right in with the school biziness this year, en if it did how could it be nuthin else? Fer evry thing about that old School is right up to the fust scratch en what ever tha do hes the stamp uv success punched in its ear. But I am offen the subject—en all I hev to say further is—don't miss a single number that follows on this course fer you'll be the looser.

WILSON CHOSEN ON FACE OF RETURNS; RECOUNT IS ASKED

Vote in Western States Made Victory of the President Possible.

REPUBLICANS ASK RECOUNT

No Charge of Fraud Is Made, but the Possibility of Error in Count Is Seen.

Race in Several States So Close That Result Was Not Known Until Practically Every Ballot Had Been Counted.

New York, Nov. 11.—President Wilson and Vice President Marshall have been re-elected on the face of the unofficial returns, but with a result in several pivotal states that is so close that the Republican leaders say they will not be satisfied until a recount of the votes has been made in these states.

The situation is extraordinary and has resulted in days of nerve-racking strain for the people of the country. If the election officials of a few remote precincts in a few states know how the nation has been waiting breathless to hear from them, they must be swelled up enormously with a sense of their importance. For on those few precincts has depended the nation's choice of its chief executive.

That Mr. Wilson's victory over Mr. Hughes will not be conceded without a recount in the close states, such as California, New Hampshire, New Mexico and North Dakota, was determined at conferences of the Republican leaders here. Chairman Willcox asserted a recount would be demanded wherever the margin of Democratic victory was so small that comparatively few votes would turn the scales. He and his associates say they take the position that there should be no cloud upon Mr. Wilson's title to the presidency. The Democrats, for their part, declared that there must be a recount in New Hampshire, even though the returns gave the state to Mr. Wilson.

That the returns are still incomplete is due to the presence on the border of the National Guard of a number of states. The soldiers are permitted to vote by mail, their ballots being forwarded to the auditors of their home counties, and in Minnesota especially the vote of the guardsmen is likely to cut a figure in determining whether the state goes into the Wilson or the Hughes column.

Minnesota was as bad as California in the matter of shifts, and as its delegation is nearly as large, it, too, was watched with the intensest interest. Through days and nights of counting, the race was a see-saw, with but a thousand or so of votes separating the candidates. Neither side would admit defeat, and even now both are awaiting the soldier vote and the official count.

Perhaps the most surprising of all the states was New Hampshire. It alone of all New England failed to give the Republican candidate a substantial plurality, and for days no one knew in which column it would land. The astonishing closeness of the vote was shown by the rival claims, three days after the election, of 100 plurality for Hughes and 84 for Wilson. In the circumstances it is no wonder that the managers of both parties should demand a recount.

New Mexico, with three electoral votes, attracted national attention by placing itself early in the list of doubtful states, and as it soon appeared that almost every electoral vote would be vital, the returns from down on the border were grabbed hot off the wires. After veering back and forth for days, New Mexico was definitely placed in the Wilson column, though there, too, the president's margin was so scant that a basis was afforded for the call for a recount. A few mistakes discovered in the figures of the precinct officials might well swing the state over to Hughes.

Willcox Demands Recount.

On Friday National Chairman Willcox of the Republican party handed out the following statement:

"The result still depends upon the vote in a few close states. It must be borne in mind that the returns thus far announced are, in most states, unofficial, and may be changed by the official count required by the laws of those states.

"Twice during these unofficial computations yesterday in California mistakes in additions were announced from that state, substantially changing figures previously given.

"It is a common experience that the result of the official count almost always varies from the returns first announced.

"Where the vote is as close as that reported in several states, it may well be that material changes will result from the official count.

"We owe it to the country to take all necessary steps to see that an exact and honest count of the vote is made. When the current seemed to be running against Mr. Wilson on Wednesday the Democratic managers announced their intention to demand a recount in every close state.

"All we desire is to make sure that the vote is counted as cast."

Both sides conceded that no matter what action might be taken in regard to a recount there was little likelihood of a contest being carried to the house of representatives as it was after the Hayes-Tilden campaign in 1876. Legislation enacted in 1887, it was said, made the state sovereign in pronouncing judgment in a recount of the presidential vote.

How Congress Stands.

With returns missing from only one congressional district in the United States, the Republicans and Democrats each had elected 215 representatives.

The vote in New Mexico, which is still in doubt, probably will determine which party is to have a plurality of one over the other. The present member from New Mexico is a Republican.

The balance of power in the next house will be held by four men, one a Progressive Protectionist from Louisiana, one an independent from Massachusetts, one a Progressive from Minnesota and the other a Socialist from New York.

The action of these members apparently will determine the choice of a speaker, as well as the fate of legislation which is supported or opposed on purely party lines.

The senate remains unchanged, 54 Democrats to 42 Republicans; a Democratic majority of 12.

In addition to the hope of electing a congressman at large from New Mexico, the Democrats had one grain of comfort. It was that an official count may disclose that Thomas J. Scully has been re-elected from the third New Jersey district.

An unusual feature of the result is the election of the first woman to congress, Miss Jeanette Rankin, Republican, apparently having been elected in Montana.

Women Vote as Do Men.

From the general result it is clear that as the men voted in the suffrage states, so did the women.

In Illinois men and women seemed about equally divided as to preference. The state went for Hughes by a big plurality.

In Kansas, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Oregon and California, where women also vote, Wilson was successful, but his pluralities were not sufficiently large to indicate that the woman voters supported him as a unit.

Six States Go Dry.

Prohibitionists are jubilant over the results of the election where prohibition was an issue. From Washington the legislative committee of the Anti-Saloon league issued a statement, saying:

"Prohibition has taken another great leap forward. Michigan has voted for state-wide prohibition by 75,000 majority, Nebraska by 85,000, Montana by 20,000 and South Dakota by 25,000. Idaho has adopted a prohibition constitutional amendment by a majority of 3 to 1. Utah has probably elected a legislature pledged to enact state-wide prohibition. Washington, Iowa, Colorado, Arizona and Arkansas have defeated attempts of the liquor people to secure the adoption of proposals which would nullify their prohibitory laws.

"Thus 24 states out of 48—one-half of the states of the Union—have now declared for state-wide prohibition—over 60 per cent."

Farm Vote the Factor.

There are several great outstanding facts concerning the result of the election, one of which is that labor, in all the big industrial states except Ohio, declined to give its undivided support to President Wilson despite his claim to it on the score of having persuaded congress to pass the Adamson "eight-hour" bill. New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Indiana, all gave the Republican candidate pluralities, and Ohio's vote in favor of Wilson is not certainly to be attributed to the labor vote.

Another interesting development was the independence of the West, which is asserting that it elected a president without the aid of New York and Pennsylvania and other big western and central states. When it was found, early in the evening of election day, that the empire state had gone for Hughes, the newspapers of the metropolis, even those that had supported Wilson, conceded the victory to the Republicans, without waiting to hear from the middle West. When the returns came in from these regions, it was found that the farmer and stock raiser had decided the election.

Yet another fact that calls for comment is that Governor Johnson of California, running on the Republican and Progressive tickets, has been elected to the United States senate by something like 300,000 plurality, and yet the state went Democratic on the presidency.

FIRST WOMAN IN CONGRESS

Miss Jeannette Rankin of Montana Will Go Down in History as Pioneer of Her Sex.

Missoula, Mont., Nov. 12.—Jeannette Rankin, the first congresswoman, is thirty-five years old and makes her own hats. She is more interested in children than in anything else in the world, with the possible exception of votes—for women.

She knows all about the tariff and lobbying and politics and stump speeches — having campaigned for suffrage from coast to coast, and in New Zealand, and can cook for a 50-man logging crew without mussing up her shiny brown hair. She is as good-looking as the hats she makes for herself and she's a good milliner.

"Of course, I'll make speeches," she says. "I've been making them for the last eight years, for suffrage and for prohibition and for myself. More especially, however, I am concerned about social welfare legislation. I had something to do with a children's home society in Washington and I know the needs of the youngsters. That work gave me an insight into the needs of babies, children and young adults, and it's for them that I shall work especially.

"No, I'm not nervous about going to congress. I think that I shall be able to take my place in Washington and do my part."

Suffragettes throughout the country will watch with much interest Miss Rankin's career in congress.

SWAMP-ROOT FOR KIDNEY DISEASES

There is only one medicine that really stands out pre-eminent as a remedy for diseases of the kidneys, liver and bladder.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root stands the highest for the reason that it has proven to be just the remedy needed in thousands upon thousands of even the most distressing cases. Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription for special diseases, makes friends quickly because its mild and immediate effect is soon realized in most cases. It is a gentle, healing vegetable compound.

Start treatment at once. Sold at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes—fifty cents and one dollar.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

The Wooden Cross.

Writing to a student at Yale, a member of the American ambulance corps in France says: "Two of the American aviators have gotten the 'wooden cross' in the past week. We have just heard that Bill Thaw, ex-Yale '15, was killed a few days ago. It did not come out in the papers."

There is the iron cross of the first class, and the iron cross of the second class, the Victoria cross, the cross of the Legion of Honor—all of those are decorations given by the war chiefs of Europe. But the "wooden cross"—that costs more than all others. That is the decoration given by Moloch.—Chattanooga News.

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

Can you imagine yourself dead for five years? Suppose at the end of that time you turned up suddenly among old friends in New York city, asked for an accounting of your estate and announced your intention of finding the girl you had married under pressure before you disappeared—much to their shocked surprise! That's the position in which we find Hugh Whitaker in this installment. How his plans ruin the important plans of others about him, how he creates a furore at a big theatrical performance and how he finds his wife, is told with dramatic effect.

Whitaker laughed quietly and turned the conversation, accepting the manager's pseudo-confidences at their face value—that is, as pure bluff, quite consistent with the managerial pose.

They rose presently and made their way out into the crowded, blatant night of Broadway.

"We'll walk, if you don't mind," Max suggested. "It isn't far, and I'd like to get a line on the house as it goes in." He sighed affectedly. "Heaven knows when I'll see another swell audience mobbing one of my attractions!"

They pushed forward slowly through the eddying tides, elbowed by a matchless motley of humanity, deafened by its thousand tongues, dazzled to blindness by walls of living light. Whitaker experienced a sensation of participating in a royal progress: Max was plainly a man of mark; he left a wake of rippling interest. At every third step somebody hailed him, as a rule by his first name; generally he responded by a curt nod and a tightening of his teeth upon his cigar.

They turned east through Forty-sixth street, shouldered by a denser rabble whose faces, all turned in one direction, shone livid with the glare of a gigantic electric sign, midway down the block:

THEATER MAX
SARA LAW'S FAREWELL.

It was nearly half-past eight; the house had been open since seven; and still a queue ran from the gallery doors to Broadway. The lobby itself was crowded to suffocation with an occidental durbar of barbaric magnificence, the city's supreme manifestation of its religion, the ultimate rite in the worship of the pomps of the flesh.

"Look at that," Max grumbled through his cigar. "Ain't it a shame?"

"What?" Whitaker had to lift his voice to make it carry above the buzzing of the throng.

"The money I'm losing," returned the manager, vividly disgusted. "I could've filled the Metropolitan opera house three times over!"

He swung on his heel and began to push his way out of the lobby. "Come along—no use trying to get in this way."

Whitaker followed, to be led down a blind alley between the theater and the adjoining hotel. An illuminated sign advertised the stage door, through which, via a brief hallway, they entered the postscenium and—Max dragging him by the arm—passed through a small door into the gangway behind the boxes.

"Curtain's just up," Max told him; "Sara doesn't come on till near the middle of the act. Make yourself comfortable; I'll be back before long."

He drew aside a curtain and ushered his guest into the right-hand stage-box, then vanished. The few empty stalls were rapidly filling up. There was a fluent movement through the aisles. A subdued hum and rustle rose from that portion of the audience which was already seated. The business going on upon the stage was receiving little attention—from Whitaker as little as from anyone. The opening scene in the development of the drama interested the gathering little or not at all; it was hanging in suspense upon the unfolding of some extraordinary development, something unprecedented and extraneous, foreign to the play.

Max slipped quietly into the box and handed his guest a program. "Better get over here," he suggested in a hoarse whisper, indicating a chair near the rail. "You may never have another chance to see the greatest living actress. Wonderful house," he whispered, sitting down behind Whitaker. "Drummond hasn't shown up yet, though."

"That so?" Whitaker returned over his shoulder.

"Yes; it's funny; never knew him to be so late. He always has the aisle seat, fourth row, center. But he'll be along presently."

He glanced idly at his program, indifferently absorbing the information that "Jules Max has the honor to present Miss Sara Law in her first and greatest success entitled Joan Thursday—a play in three acts—"

The audience stirred expectantly; a movement ran through it like the movement of waters, murmurous, upon a shore. Whitaker's gaze was drawn to the stage as if by an implacable force. Max shifted on the chair behind him and said something indistinguishable, in an unnatural tone.

A woman had come upon the stage, suddenly and tempestuously, banging a door behind her. The audience got the barest glimpse of her profile as, pausing momentarily, she eyed the other actors. Then, without speaking, she turned and walked up-stage, her back to the footlights.

Applause broke out like a thunderclap, pealing heavily through the big auditorium, but the actress showed no consciousness of it. She was standing before a cheap mirror, removing her hat, arranging her hair with the typical, unconscious gestures of a weary shopgirl; she was acting—living the scene, with no time to waste in pandering to her popularity by bows and set smiles; she remained before the glass, prolonging the business, until the applause subsided.

Whitaker received an impression as of a tremendous force at work across the footlights. The woman diffused an effect as of a terrible and boundless energy under positive control. She was not merely an actress, not even merely a great actress; she was the very soul of the drama of today.

Beyond this he knew in his heart that she was his wife. Sara Law was the woman he had married in that sleepy Connecticut town, six years before that night. He had not yet seen her face clearly, but he knew. To find himself mistaken would have shaken the foundations of his understanding.

Under cover of the applause, he turned to Max.

"Who is that? What is her name?"

"The divine Sara," Max answered, his eyes shining.

"I mean, what is her name off the stage, in private life?"

"The same," Max nodded with conviction; "Sara Law's the only name she's ever worn in my acquaintance with her."

At that moment, the applause having subsided to such an extent that it was possible for her to make herself heard, the actress swung round from the mirror and addressed one of the other players. Her voice was clear, strong and vibrant, yet sweet; but Whitaker paid no heed to the lines she spoke. He was staring, fascinated, at her face.

Sight of it set the seal of certainty upon conviction: She was one with Mary Ladislas. He had forgotten her so completely in the lapse of years as to have been unable to recall her features and coloring, yet he had needed only to see to recognize her beyond any possibility of doubt. Those big, intensely burning eyes, that drawn and pallid face, the quick, nervous movements of her thin white hands, the slenderness of her tall, awkward, immature figure—in every line and contour, in every gesture and inflection, she reproduced the Mary Ladislas whom he had married.

And yet . . . Max was whispering over his shoulder:

"Wonderful make-up—what?"

"Make-up!" Whitaker retorted. "She's not made up—she's herself to the last detail."

Amusement glimmered in the manager's round little eyes: "You don't know her. Wait till you get a pipe at her off the stage." Then he checked the reply that was shaping on Whitaker's lips, with a warning lift of his hand and brows: "Ssh! Catch this, now. She's a wonder in this scene."

The superb actress behind the counterfeit of the hunted and hungry shopgirl was holding spellbound with her inevitable witchery the most sophisticated audience in the world; like wheat in a windstorm it swayed to the modulations of her marvelous voice as it ran through a passage-at-arms with the termagant. Suddenly ceasing to speak, she turned down to a chair near the footlights, followed by a torrent of shrill vituperation under the lash of which she quivered like a whipped thoroughbred.

Abruptly, pausing with her hands on the back of the chair, there came a change. The actress had glanced across the footlights; Whitaker could not but follow the direction of her gaze; the eyes of both focussed for a brief instant on the empty aisle-seat in the fourth row. A shade of additional pallor showed on the woman's face. She looked quickly, questioningly, toward the box of her manager.

Seated as he was so near the stage, Whitaker's face stood out in rugged relief, illumined by the glow reflected from the footlights. It was inevitable that she should see him. Her eyes fastened, dilating, upon his. The scene faltered perceptibly. She stood transfixed. . . .

In the hush Max cried impatiently: "What the devil!" The words broke the spell of amazement upon the actress. In a twinkling the pitiful counterfeit of the shopgirl was rent and torn away; it hung only in shreds and tatters upon an individuality wholly strange to Whitaker: a larger, stronger woman seemed to have started out of the mask.

She turned, calling imperatively into the wings: "Ring down!"

With a rush the curtain descended as pandemonium broke out on both sides of it.

CHAPTER VI.

The Late Extra.

Impulsively Whitaker got up to follow Max, then hesitated and sank back in doubt, his head awhirl. He was for the time being shocked out of all capacity for clear reasoning or right thinking. Uppermost in his consciousness he had a half-formed notion that it wouldn't help matters if he were to force himself in upon the crisis behind the scenes.

Beyond all question his wife had recognized in him the man whom she had been given every reason to believe dead; a discovery so unnerving as to render her temporarily unable to continue.

This, then, explained Drummond's reluctance to have him bidden to the supper party; whatever ultimate course of action he planned to pursue Drummond had been unwilling, perhaps pardonably so, to have his romance overthrown and altogether shattered in a single day. He had lied lied desperately, doubtless meaning to encompass a marriage before Whitaker could find his wife, and so furnish him with every reason that could influence an honorable man to disappear a second time.

On the other hand, Max to a certainty was ignorant of the relationship between his star and his old time friend, just as he must have been ignorant of her identity with the one time Mary Ladislas. For that matter, Whitaker had to admit that, damning as was the evidence to controvert the theory Drummond might be just as much in the dark as Max was. It was only fair to suspend judgment. In the meantime . . .

The audience was getting beyond control. In the gallery the gods were beginning to testify to their normal intolerance with shrill whistles, cat-calls, sporadic bursts of hand-clapping and a steady, sinister rumble of stamping feet. In the orchestra and dress circle people were moving about restlessly and talking at the top of their voices in order to make themselves heard above the growing din.

Abruptly Max himself appeared at one side of the proscenium arch. It was plain to those nearest the stage that he was seriously disturbed. There was a noticeable hesitancy in his manner, a pathetic frenzy in his habitually mild and lustrous eyes. Advancing halfway to the middle of the apron, he paused, begging attention with a pudgy hand. It was a full minute before the gallery would let him be heard.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced plaintively, "I much regret to inform you that Miss Law has suffered a severe nervous shock"—his gaze wandered in perplexed inquiry toward the right-hand stagebox, then was hastily averted—"and will not be able to continue."

Wave upon wave of sound swept through the auditorium to break, roaring, against the obdurate curtain. Max with difficulty contrived to make himself disconnectedly audible.

"Ladies and . . ." he shouted, sweat beading his perturbed forehead . . . "regret . . . impossible to continue . . . money . . . box office . . ."

An angry howl drowned him out. He retreated at accelerated discretion.

Whitaker, slipping through the stage door behind the boxes, ran into the stage manager standing beside the first entrance, heatedly explaining to anyone who would listen the utter futility of offering box-office prices in return for seat checks which in the majority of instances had cost their holders top-notch speculator prices.

"They'll wreck the theater," he shouted excitedly, mopping his brow with his coat sleeve, "what t'ell'd she wana pull a raw one like this for?"

Whitaker caught his arm in a grasp compelling attention.

Well, what's your guess? Will Whitaker's wife receive him with gratitude and open arms—because he saved her honor long ago—or will she look him over calmly and chase him off the place?

Sportive Fish.

The gamboling of whales is often witnessed by sailors, and Paley says that any observer of fish must acknowledge that "they are so happy they know not what to do with themselves. Their attitudes and frolics are simply the effect of an excess of spirits."

Optimistic Thought.

There is nothing which will so soon produce a speedy and honorable peace as a state of preparation for war.

FIRST AID TO BURLESON

John C. Koons, formerly chief inspector of the post office department, was nominated by President Wilson as first assistant postmaster general, to succeed Daniel C. Roper, who resigned from the department in order to assist the Democratic national campaign.

Mr. Koons, as first lieutenant to Postmaster General Burleson, will be acting postmaster general in the absence of his chief.

Mr. Koons entered the postal service 20 years ago as a railway mail clerk at a salary of $1,000 a year. His ability and efficiency attracted the attention of his chiefs, and he was transferred to Washington and made a post office inspector. Under Postmaster General Hitchcock he was promoted to the position of chief of salaries and allowances.

The more recent promotions of Mr. Koons, which culminated in his selection as first assistant postmaster general, include his appointment to the parcel post commission, a committee of postal experts to work out regulations for the development of the parcel post. As a result of his work on this commission Postmaster General Burleson promoted him to be chief inspector of the post office department.

Mr. Koons, while having lived in Washington for the last ten years, has his legal residence in Carroll county, Maryland, where his family has lived for generations.

NEW JAPANESE AMBASSADOR

Aimaro Sato, the recently appointed Japanese ambassador to the United States, like many other Japanese statesmen, was educated in this country, at De Pauw university at Greencastle, Ind. The college was then known as Indiana Asbury university. Sutemi Chinda, who was Japanese ambassador in Washington in 1912, was a fellow student with Mr. Sato and married Mr. Sato's sister in 1882.

Mr. Sato came to this country officially first in 1904, during the war between his country and Russia, as secretary to Prince Fushimi, who had been sent here upon a grateful mission to the United States government. He served as general manager, so to speak, of this interesting expedition, and acquitted himself with great credit, his knowledge of the language and American customs proving of great use to his compatriots. Ambassador Sato, like other Oriental diplomats who have come here, has a keen sense of humor, and his life in the United States has assisted him to give it an expression that an American can understand and appreciate.

Ambassador Sato already has had a distinguished career in the diplomatic service, having served in important subordinate positions, and later as Japanese minister to Holland and ambassador to Austria-Hungary. He is said to be very much of an epicure, delighting in cozy little dinners to his friends which are the delight and wonder of his circle.

ROGERS IS SOME SPENDER

The "biggest spender" in Texas is Col. Harry L. Rogers, but he isn't a spendthrift. His position on Funston's staff as chief quartermaster of the southern department makes it his duty to spend money "right and left" in little wads of $25,000 or $50,000. Little wads!

Just imagine a sum like one of those in greenbacks wadded up, then the squeeze removed. But Colonel Rogers is used to trifles of that sort, or at least to handling Uncle Sam's checks that represent such piles.

For instance—there are 75,000 pairs of army shoes in San Antonio. Twenty thousand pairs are at Fort Sam Houston. Just sort of a shelf stock. Each pair cost $2.81.

Mosquito bars are another article issued to soldiers. One hundred thousand of them cost something, too. Double ones are obtained for $2.29 and single ones for $2.16. Double refers to weight and not to size. Each mosquito bar is for one bunk.

Gasoline costs the government from 21 to 26 cents a gallon, according to where it is delivered. That delivered at San Antonio is 22 cents a gallon. The previous contract price was 9 cents a gallon.

George Baker and wife of Hicksville were guests in the F. M. Monroe home, last Sunday.

Indiana was sure represented in the election. She had one candidate for President and two for Vice-president.

Returns show that Goodrich's plurality (13,629) was as large as the total Prohi vote for Governor (12,808.) Out of the 92 counties in the state, only 67 have been fully reported.

Card of Thanks.

I am sincerely grateful to all the voters who favored me with their support on Tuesday, November 7th. To the many friends who at all times worked in my behalf I extend my thanks, and to all I promise to perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability. Again I thank you all.

DRINK MORE WATER IF KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take Salts for Backache or Bladder trouble—Neutralizes acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts, is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Two years ago 75c. to $1.00 was good value for a Skunk, $1.00 to $1.25 was considered a high quotation for Raccoon and Muskrats sold on the average from 8c. to 10c. and strange to say, these figures were all that any Fur shipper expected, says Mr. A B. Shubert, President of A. B. SHUBERT, INC., Chicago, U. S. A., the largest House in the World dealing exclusively in American Raw Furs. Compare these prices with present day values. Is it any wonder that the farmer boy finds it profitable to get out and trap Fur-bearers?

However, many a dollar is lost to the man who does not exercise good judgment and common sense in gathering his collection of Raw Furs. How many thousands and thousands of Muskrat, Skunk, Raccoon and other Fur-bearers are taken off of the animals most any old way and no care given whatever to the skinning and stretching? A man will be well paid for the time spent in putting his Raw Furs in the best possible condition You cannot make your Furs look too good.

Most every trapper knows—the time to trap Fur-bearers is when the Fur is prime. Nevertheless many a thoughtless trapper seeks to kill Fur-bearers all Summer. This practice should be stopped.

One peculiarity about the American Raw-Fur collection during the season of 1915-16, is the fact that over three million Muskrats, as well as thousands of Skunk, Raccoon and other Fur-bearing animals were taken from the Central States, namely Illinios, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. This will dispel all thought from the minds of those who imagine there are no Fur-bearers left in thickly populated States. It is also a fact that the Furs collected in these States are bringing high prices, particularly at the present time when we have such an excellent demand. Trappers will make big money this Winter.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

Hot Water for Sick Headaches

Tells why everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it before breakfast.

Headache of any kind, is caused by auto-intoxication—which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood, through the lymph ducts, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head producing violent, throbbing pain and distress, called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilide, aspirin or the bromides which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drank before breakfast for awhile, will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache but will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar, and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphated hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Results are quick and it is claimed that those who continue to flush out the stomach, liver and bowels every morning never have any headache or know a miserable moment.

Rice as a Valuable Food.

In the Orient rice is appreciated at its proper worth. Rice has a higher food value than potatoes, is comparatively cheap and, with the ease in which it may be prepared, it makes a food not to be despised.

Cook a cupful of rice until tender, in two cupfuls of brown stock, highly seasoned with salt, cayenne, chopped parsley and onion juice. Stir in a tablespoonful of butter just before serving.

Boiled Rice Pudding.

Wash two cupfuls of rice, add a cupful of stoned raisins, cut in halves, with a teaspoonful of salt. Tie in a pudding cloth, leaving plenty of room for the rice to swell. Drop into boiling water and boil until tender. Serve with fruit sauce.

Rice With Cheese.

Put a layer of cooked rice, a layer of grated cheese and tomato sauce or hard cooked eggs sliced in thin white sauce, then another layer of rice, cover with crumbs and brown in a hot oven.

Compote of Rice With Peaches.

Wash two-thirds of a cupful of rice, add one cupful of boiling water, and steam until the rice has absorbed the water, then add one and one-third cupfuls of hot milk, one teaspoonful of salt and a fourth of a cupful of sugar. Cook until the rice is soft. Turn into a buttered mold and, when shaped, remove and arrange sections of canned peaches dipped in chopped nuts or macaroon crumbs. Serve with the juice from the peaches. Pears may be used in place of peaches.

IF

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

DAY OF REJOICING

Thanksgiving Celebration Is a Great Event on Cotton Plantation.

THANKSGIVING day on a cotton plantation means an open heart and hand on the part of the master and a full stomach, a day of happiness, and, consequently, gratitude on the part of the worker. It means, also, another, and, for that little world, universal token, an offering up of thanks for the numerous little white pods which bring profits to the master and the winter's provisions and clothes to the worker. But it also means a day of play to all.

Hard as is the labor of the cotton plantation hands, they do some extra work willingly for Thanksgiving day for several weeks beforehand. It is a sure sign of the approach of Thanksgiving day when one sights here and there through the woods the bobbing, smoking pine torches that light the way for a dozen black, shining, grinning faces. It is the usual hunt for Mr. Possum that keeps them from their beds, and makes them scramble through thickets, jump ditches and wallow through marshes.

For several nights the woods for miles around the plantation are the scene of night activities. It is easy enough to find the trail of a 'possum, and when once located the dogs lead a running, howling band in the hunt. Mr. Possum is, however, a slow mover, and when he hears the yelps of those hounds and the howls of the negroes and sees the glare of the torches, he gets up the nearest tree and settles on a limb.

Somehow the light fascinates him and he usually settles on the lowest limb. It is just what the hunters want. Mr. Possum is noted for his fondness for dead meat, consequently a 'possum that is shot is not the most savory of meats. Their object is to catch him alive and when the tree is reached he is surrounded by a ring of blazing torches and howling blacks until in sheer fright he drops off, plays dead and is bundled into a sack, to be hustled off in the morning to the plantation pen. Sometimes two or three are caught in a night and some of them show fight. Once in the pen they are fed for a couple of weeks with food that takes away all trace of their natural food and rounds out their sides with good, sweet meat.

Several days before Thanksgiving day some of the hands are taken from the cotton fields and put to work around the plantation buildings. This is, with the exception of Christmas, perhaps the most enjoyable task of the year, for it means the preparation for the feast which the plantation is to give its hands on the day when thanks offerings are made.

Usually this is spread in one of the big buildings on the plantation, perhaps a barn or a cotton shed. The hands are set to work at first to clear out the place and make it clean. Then they put together a dozen or more long improvised tables and benches, and lastly they decorate the building with all kinds of flags and bunting. On the side near the center they also put up the fiddler's stand, for later in the day there comes the usual dance. Several days before, also, some of the hands make barrels of ginger beer and sweet cider and stow them away to ripen for the feast.

The F. G. M. & N. Club was very pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. Daisy Butler, Friday afternoon, which was spent in fancy work and a social time. The guests were Mrs. Henry Stalder and Mrs. Oma Morr. A delicious two-course luncheon was served.

The C. C. Club was pleasantly entertained Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Minta Rhodes. A dainty lunch was served to 20 members and one guest, Mrs Rose Beams.

The evening of November 1st., 1916, was one that will be long remembered by the members of the Class of 1914 of the Spencerville High School. Promptly at 8 o'clock the members proceeded to the home of Miss Thornburg, who was principal in 1914, and the pleasure began. Many games were indulged in, and some prizes were awarded. Luncheon was served in school pails. The idea of the evening was in keeping with the invitations, "For the Sake of Auld Lang Syne". At a late hour the guests departed, each hoping that this would only be the first of many such happy gatherings.

A Real Surprise

A surprise was given last Monday eve,
  In honor of one about to leave.
When she reached home just about nine,
  To find seventeen, all along in a line,
With baskets, and bundles of things to eat,
  You can imagine the expression we'd meet.
And when she noticed, just who was there
  Exclaimed aloud, "I do declare".
If it isn't my Sunday School Class so bright,
  That's come to give me a farewell to-night.
The time soon went, in social chat,
  As each one knows of girls like that.
And then came the lunch, in cafeteria style,
  Each took their turn, in single file.
There were all the good things that one could wish
  And each did justice to every dish.
They all expressed their own regrets
  Of her leaving us, but let's
Remember, where ere she may go,
  She still is a member of the class Rayo.
If you think this a fable,
  Just ask Mrs. Glenn Abel.

Edward Billman and wife, of Wise's Corners; Walter Perkins, wife and son Lloyd, of Harlan, and Mr. Sowers, wife and daughter, of Michigan, were Sunday dinner guests of Joel Betz and wife. In the afternoon, John Betz and wife, and Mrs. Wallace, of St. Joe, called at the Betz home.

COLETOWN

Henry Kling, wife and daughter were Sunday guests of Frank Kling and wife, of Hicksville.

Alvin Walker and family and Mrs. G. W. Palmer, Sundayed, with Hollis Jacksons' near Newville.

R. H. Conine and family, and Fern Walker motored to Angola, Sunday.

Olive Jackson and Paul Furnish were married by Rev. F. H. Hall, at Auburn, Nov. 9th. The boys in this neighborhood gave them an old fashioned belling in the evening.

Rather Dull.

"I understand your town is establishing a record for law and order."

"Yes," replied the thoughtful citizen. "And it's rather hard on our local reformers."

"How is that?"

"They haven't had an excuse to call a mass meeting and pass resolutions in more than six months."

Not Used to It.

"Is it true that Twobble and Dubwaite are no longer on speaking terms?"

"Yes. But the quarrel is so recent that they still find it rather difficult to ignore each other."

A Risky Investment.

"Has your son decided to enter business?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Cobbles, "but I'm not encouraging him any."

"That's strange. Why not?"

"I can't afford to buy mahogany furniture and oriental rugs for an office he doesn't expect to stay in more than two or three hours a day."

Big Agricultural Warehouse.

New Orleans has the largest agricultural warehouse in the world. It has a capacity of 2,000,000 bales of cotton and is adapted to the storage of all other packed commodities, such as sugar and coffee. It was built at a cost of $3,500,000 by the state of Louisiana and is said to reduce the cost of handling any agricultural commodity 40 per cent. There are 23 acres of ground under roof, while the entire plant occupies 150 acres.

DRAW PLANS FOR HIGHWAY BODY

Automobile Clubmen and Others Adopt Resolutions at Indianapolis.

BILL FOR THE LEGISLATURE

Conference Appoints Committee to Draft Measure Containing Provisions to Make It Possible for Indiana to Get Federal Aid.

Indianapolis.—A tentative outline of a law creating a state highway commission, to be presented to the next legislature, was drawn up at a meeting of Representatives of the Hoosier State Automobile association and its affiliated clubs, including the Hoosier Motor club of Indianapolis, held at the Claypool hotel.

About thirty representatives of organizations at the conference adopted the following resolutions to be used as a guide in the drafting of a bill for the state legislature:

"That we favor the creation of a state highway department conducted on a basis of nonpartisanship and efficiency.

"That the state highway commission should consist of not more than three members.

"That the state highway commission be appointed by the governor.

"That the members of the state highway commission serve at a nominal salary.

"That the state highway engineer be appointed by the commission and serve as long as he is efficient and honest.

"That the commission shall have power to get the best man for an engineer, either within or without the state.

"That the state shall give state aid in the construction of roads on a 50 per cent basis.

"That the state shall give aid only for those roads forming a connecting series of roads, approved by the commission.

"That the initative in construction be left with the county.

"That all plans and specifications for such be subject to the approval of the state highway commission.

"That the contracts for building such roads shall be subject to the approval of the state highway commission.

"That state aid should be paid during the construction of roads, the amount of such payments to be determined by the commission. Roads to be constructed under supervision of the state engineer.

"That the state give aid for maintenance of roads. The proportion to be left to the commission.

"That plans, specifications and contracts for roads other than those receiving aid, be subject to the approval of the state highway commission.

"That the state engineer give advice and assistance to county road officials when requested.

"That the state engineer have authority to require county and township road officials to give to him such information of their local road conditions as he may see fit to request.

"That the state highway department be financed by general tax levy.

"That the counties provide funds for their portion of the cost of roads built with state aid either by tax or bonds of the county.

"That where roads receiving state aid pass through towns and cities, that state aid should be allowed inside the city limits in proportion to aid given outside the city limits."

The conference adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to draft a bill containing such provisions and make it possible for Indiana to receive its share of money to be expended by the federal government in the building of good roads.

The meeting was called to order by A. G. Lupton of Hartford City, president of the Hoosier State Automobile association, who was chosen as permanent chairman of the conference committee. John A. Lapp, chief of the Indiana legislative bureau of information, was named chairman of a committee to draw up a tentative outline for a bill. A. G. Batchelder, executive chairman of the American Automobile association, was the principal speaker at a smoker at the Hoosier Motor club.

Highway Suit Decided.

The supreme court held, in affirming the Dekalb circuit court, that the statute authorizing the establishment of a highway by the board of commissioners on a line of a previously used highway, does not authorize the board to vary the line of the highway to take in any lands not previously used as a highway, although the road extends along the line between two land-owners, and the statute provides that where the road is along the line between two land-owners it shall be taken in equal quantity from each owner. The court points to the fact that the present law adopts the language used in a former law which had been construed by the court not to authorize the taking of any land unused as a part of the highway, and says the court is bound by the former construction of the law, whether it should or should not have been so construed on that portion of the language.

The decision is made in holding that Warren Boyer and others could not correct the line of a used highway between their lands and the lands of Jasper Everetts and others, but the highway must be recorded and established along the line on which it was used.

New Incorporations.

The Rossville Fur Farming company, Indianapolis; capital, $60,000; to propagate fur-bearing animals; directors, J. E. Grahab, E. H. Mann and E. C. Smith.

F. M. Bowers & Sons company, Indianapolis; capital, $15,000; poultry supplies; directors, F. M. Bowers, F. E. Bowers and L. A. Bowers.

C. A. Cropper company, Muncie; capital, $5,000; merchandise; directors, C. A. Cropper, E. M. Cropper and M. E. Bake.

Orders Sale of Roads.

The public service commission of Indiana entered orders approving the sale of three Indiana railroads to the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway company (Monon). The roads figuring in the transfer are the Indiana Stone Railroad company, the Indianapolis & Louisville Railway company, and the Chicago & Wabash Valley Railway company, known as the Gifford railroad.

The Monon system has held the stocks, bonds and other securities of the roads that it now formally takes over. Under the merger order the Monon guarantees the payment of the principal and interest of securities of the roads it buys and makes certain cash payments.

The contract for the sale of the Indianapolis & Louisville railway provides that "the purchaser shall pay to the seller $158,309.48, so as to enable the seller in liquidation to repay to its stockholders the actual cash investment which they have in its stock; the purchaser shall also pay a sum sufficient to enable the seller to repay to the purchaser its account for advances in full to the date of the transfer herein provided for, this payment to be regarded as part of the purchase price."

The transfers are to be made as of December 31, 1916. The purchaser pays to the Indiana Stone Railroad company $15,000 to enable that road to repay to its stockholders their actual cash investment and it pays to the Chicago & Wabash Valley Railway company $35,000 to enable it to repay its stockholders $10 a share for their stock.

Send Out 1,198,866 Ballots.

The state board of election commissioners at a meeting in the offices of Governor Ralston, approved the final work of the force of clerks under the direction of Ed. D. Donnell, which gave the last of the ballots for the November election to the county clerks of the state. The total number of election ballots distributed to the 92 counties was 1,198,866, and a reserve of 33,033, according to law, was kept at the statehouse.

The ballots distributed contained the names of candidates on the state and national tickets only, the county tickets being prepared by county authorities. One ballot was delivered by the state board to the secretary of state.

The state board of election commissioners, because the registration totals, reported from the various counties, showed enormous gains in some instances over the total vote cast at the presidential election four years ago, estimated the number of ballots needed in each precinct of the state on the registratioin returns. The total registration reached 811,405 voters. The law prescribes that to the estimate of total votes in each county the state board shall add 25 per cent of the total for emergencies and then shall include in the shipment of ballots to each county clerk an additional reserve of 2,000 ballots. The addition of 25 per cent to the registration total throughout the state brought the total of ballots up to 1,014,866 and the addition of 2,000 ballots in each of the 92 counties to 1,189,866.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS.

Peru.—Rolly Slabaugh, seventeen, while hunting, fell from a fence and his gun exploded, killing him instantly.

Shoals.—Because of two deaths from diphtheria the Sherfick school, southeast of here, was closed by the board of health.

Anderson.—Miss Geraldine Vermillion was elected president and Miss Edith Diven secretary, of the Anderson Visiting Nurses association at the annual meeting.

Rushville.—James Dugan was driving a milk wagon that was crowded off the road by a heavy automobile truck, north of here, and he was injured severely and cut by flying glass.

Sullivan.—The first mine-rescue meet in Sullivan was held here as a feature of the annual meeting of the Sullivan County Medical association. The meet was under the supervision of Dr. A. F. Knoefel of Terre Haute.

Noblesville.—Dennie Brackens' one hundredth birthday was the happiest of his life, for he was reunited with his son whom he had not seen for a quarter of a century. The centenarian's chief pleasures are playing ball with a grandson and a quiet evening with his pipe.

Columbus.—Miss Edith Weller has arrived here from Montesona, Wash., to become superintendent of the new $100,000 Bartholomew county public hospital. The hospital is nearly completed, and the trustees hope to have it ready to receive patients by December 1.

Lafayette.—Alonzo Brown, twenty-six, of Danville, Ky., accidentally killed himself with a revolver here when he was loading it. Brown was injured at the Queen & Crescent railroad coal chutes, in Danville, some time ago, and last week received $2,700 compensation.

State Happenings

Jeffersonville.—Five cases of scarlet fever have appeared at the Jeffersonville Orphans' home, where there are more than 40 children.

Shelbyville.—Judge Alonzo Blair of the Shelby circuit court has ordered the dismissal of a suit for damages filed by Henry Leo Kelley against the Indianapolis Traction and Terminal company, and brought here on a change of venue from Marion county, because costs in a similar action filed some time ago have not been paid.

Huntingsburg.—Claude Stevens, a young man about twenty years old, giving Gibson county, Tennessee, as his home, was arrested in Madisonville, Ky., accused of horse stealing, having in his possession the horse and buggy of Frank A. Klosterman of this city. He was brought here and, after a preliminary hearing, was bound over to the circuit court.

Hammond.—Will Nill, chief of the Hammond fire department, and his men fought a big fire in North Hammond in full-dress suits. The chief and Mrs. Nill had just begun the grand march at the annual firemen's pension benefit ball when the alarm was given. The dance, which netted the department $2,000, was resumed after two hours' delay.

Princeton.—Guinn Heniken, fifty-five, a carpenter employed at the Southern railroad shops, fell from a pile of lumber and was dead when reached by fellow workmen. He had been stricken with heart disease. The widow and four children survive in addition to his mother, Mrs. Mary Kimball of Albion, Ill., and a brother, John Heniken of Mt. Carmel, Ill.

Quincy.—Thomas Allee is searching for his son, Nathan, age fifteen, who disappeared and was last heard of in Terre Haute. He is about five feet eight inches tall, weighing about 115 pounds. He has heavy dark eyebrows and blue eyes, and he wore a light suit with belt in the back, black and white check cap, shirt with white collar and dark tie, black shoes, and brown gloves.

Muncie.—Three schoolgirls were fatally injured, Peter Knoth, driver of a school hack, was seriously injured, and 17 other children were bruised when a Union Traction line car crashed into a school hack near Como. The children expected to die are Maggie Gant, Mabel Wagner and Goldie Stephens. The fact that the traction car only struck the rear of the school wagon saved many from death. It is alleged the driver failed to stop before attempting to cross the railroad tracks.

Shelbyville.—Joseph Bellis, who says he was sentenced to the state prison at Michigan City from Marion county for a term of two to six years on a charge of larceny, July 24, 1906, walked into police headquarters here, with his wife, and said that he desired to give himself up. He is being held here on a loitering charge, pending word from the warden of the state prison. Bellis and his wife have been working on farms in this county for some time. Mrs. Bellis returned to her work after her husband had been placed in jail.

Marion.—The rural churches of Grant county will hold a conference at the Maple Run church, in Franklin township, December 13 and 14, when Prof. G. I. Christie, Miss Lulu Gaddis and O. Hill of Purdue university will give addresses. This is said to be the first of the county rural conferences to be held in a rural church. Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, state president of the W. C. T. U., will be asked to give an address.

Columbus.—At a joint meeting of the boards of elders and deacons of the Tabernacle Christian church, Rev. Eugene Martin, pastor of the Central Christian church here, was chosen assistant pastor of the Tabernacle Christian church. The congregations of the Tabernacle and Central Christian churches were merged at a meeting at the Tabernacle. The Central church was organized in August, 1899, and was composed chiefly of former members of the Tabernacle. No disposition has been made of the Central church property.

Brazil.—Pickpockets, working in the crowd that gathered here to hear Charles E. Hughes speak, robbed at least 12 persons, who have reported to the police losses aggregating about $250. Frank Killion of Center Point lost $110. The police arrested a man who gave his name as George Hanna of Evanston, Ill., who the police said was caught in the act of putting his hand in a man's pocket. He had only $24. He said he was here looking for a location for a grocery. The police fired at several men who were boarding a freight train, and arrested Dan Hampton of Bloomington, on a charge of carrying concealed weapons. He had a revolver, and was fined $25 and costs, which he paid.

Brazil.—Fred Elliott, a wagon driver for the Standard Oil company, lighted a match to look into a coal oil tank to see how much oil a grocer needed. An explosion resulted. The grocery store also caught fire, but the damage was slight.

Evansville.—The Vanderburg county grand jury has returned an indictment against Charles Stuart, charging murder in the first degree. Stuart shot and killed Al Steiner on the night of October 17 in the presence of his own wife. Jealousy is attributed as the cause by the state. It is understood Stuart will plead self-defense.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 19

FROM MELITA TO ROME.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 28:11-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.—Rom. 1:16.

In this lesson we see somewhat of the human side of Paul's character. No man appreciated fellowship more than he. Look up Acts 17:15; 18:5; I Cor. 7:6; I Thess. 3:1, 2; II Tim. 4:21.

I. The Sea Journey (vv. 11-14). Paul left Melita (Malta) probably February, A. D. 60. From there to Syracuse was a distance of between 80 and 100 miles. From the island of Syracuse (now a part of Italy) to Rhegium was one day's sail. From Rhegium to Puteoli was 180 miles. Puteoli (modern Pozzuoli) is in the Bay of Naples, eight miles from the modern city of Naples. Paul and his band who had done so much for the Maltese were specially honored with many honors. (v. 10.)

In these verses we have a picture of Paul seeking out his brethren wherever he went, thanking God and taking courage as they came to meet with him and converse with him. It is a picture upon which we ought to ponder deeply and be grateful that it reveals to us a side of Paul little known and appreciated.

II. The Land Journey (vv. 14, 15). At Puteoli, Paul and his companions began their march to 140 miles to the city of Rome. After a march of 60 miles they reached the famous Appii Forum, i. e., "The market of Appius." Here Paul is met by the first delegation from the church at Rome, who were waiting to welcome him and Luke and escort them to the capital city. A second delegation met them at the Three Taverns, or "The Three Shops," as we would call stores in the modern sense. These Christians had come at no small cost, as they had to walk 46 miles to the Appii Forum and 33 to the Three Taverns, and then walk the same distance back to the city. Thus it was that the sight of these friends cheered Paul and he thanked God. We can well imagine the joy of these souls, the communion enjoyed by those pilgrims as they journeyed toward the imperial city.

We can see in the letters which Paul wrote from Rome plain signs of his longing for sympathetic friends and can imagine how he must have felt upon being thus greeted on his journey. We can also imagine something of the blessing and inspiration which must have come to those Christians who met this famous soldier of the cross and had the privilege of escorting him to the city.

III. In Rome (vv. 16-29). Having entered into the city the centurion Julius, who had become a friend of Paul, delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard. This officer we are told was a liberal-minded man, one of the few good people in the corrupt life of the city. Paul was probably first taken to the forum, which was the center of imperial power and magnificence and near which was the "house of Caesar." (Phil. 4:22.) Paul was not sent to prison for it was against the law to put a Roman into prison without a trial, but he was permitted to dwell by himself in "his own hired house." Of course, there was a soldier who guarded him. This was the city where Paul had so long desired to preach the Gospel. (Rom. 1:14-16.) As in other places, he first turned to the Jews, for he loved his own people no matter how much he had suffered at their hands. He got them together that he might preach unto them Jesus and sought to conciliate them.

In Paul's preaching he always emphasized that a Messiah was risen from the dead as a guaranty of all other resurrections. In his day, as in this present one, there were those who spoke against this, and yet that resurrection was to conquer the world and to save it from moral ruin. Those present had had no word out of Judea. (v. 21.) At a later and a public meeting (v. 23) there came unto him, that is, into his lodgings, great numbers to whom Paul sounded the Gospel of the kingdom and gave his personal testimony. He proved out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets, common ground for them all, that the Messiah had truly come, the prophecies of the kingdom of God had been fulfilled, and that Jesus by his life and death and teaching had shown the Jews how perfectly the latter were fulfilled. This Paul did from morning till evening, following the same line as in his speech before Agrippa and in other places where he had been testifying. All of his explanations and testimonials centered in Jesus. It was no abstract mental theory for an improved order of society but a definite reign of a definite person, Jesus of Nazareth. Paul is a great example for any Bible student to follow.

As on so many other occasions, Paul's preaching caused a division. (v. 26.)

And again he turns to the Gentiles. (v. 28.)

Paul told them plainly what lay at the root of their unbelief (v. 27), and though they refused the salvation it was none the less of God.

The cook had a beau, and Robert was very much interested in him.

"Why does that man sit there and never say anything?" he asked.

"He does be talkin' when you uns ain't there. He's me own company, and you're not invited," said the cook.

"Well, excuse me," said Robert, who could take a hint, "but I thought maybe you might like someone you knew stay around if he wasn't nice to you."

"Gowan," exclaimed the cook. "What's me two fists fer?"

"Kidded" the Inspectors.

The other day two sanitary inspectors were making a round of the cottages in a certain English village. During their visit they came to one where lived three adults. On being admitted, after waiting about ten minutes, one of the inspectors said, angrily:

"How many persons are there in this house?"

"There are five," answered the man of the house.

"Five!" exclaimed the inspector, "there'll have to be two less in it."

"So there will when you two get out," was the sarcastic reply.

Dissipation and Health.

Here's another neighborhood story from Columbia, Tenn.

An aged mother, it seems, was scolding her oldest son for some of his bad habits.

"Ain't you 'shamed of yourself," she exclaimed, "to be chawin' tobaccer and smokin' that old pipe? You are jes' ruinin' your health."

"But listen, ma," replied her son, "I am seventy years of age, ain't I?"

"Yes, you is," admitted the mother, "but maybe if you didn't chaw an' smoke you'd be ninety now."—Youngstown Telegram.

Even by any other name the average backyard would not inspire a landscape painter.

Hard Work.

David Belasco was talking about Ibsen, whose later plays are greatly admired.

"Ibsen," said Mr. Belasco, "wrote plays in the intervals of stage managing from the age of twenty on. It was only with 'Ghosts,' at the age of sixty that he won world-wide fame.

"A lady said to Ibsen, on the production of 'Ghosts':

"'What a genius you are!'

"Ibsen turned to his wife:

"'I've worked fifteen hours a day for forty years,' he said, and now they call me a genius.'"

AN APPRECIATIVE LETTER.

Mr. M. A. Page, Osceola, Wis., under date of Feb. 16, 1916, writes: Some years ago I was troubled with my kidneys and was advised to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. It is now three years since I finished taking these Pills and I have had no trouble with my kidneys since. I was pretty bad for ten or twelve years prior to taking your treatment, and will say that I have been in good health since and able to do considerable work at the advanced age of seventy-two. I am glad you induced me to continue their use at the time, as I am cured.

To Save Nut Trees.

The Northern Nut Growers' association is trying to save the fine nut trees, says a circular just sent out by the association. The association was founded a few years ago by a surgeon, a family physician, a lawyer, a professor of horticulture and a plain ordinary enthusiast—all tree lovers of course. Along with the many others who have joined them, they have learned how to graft the nut trees and they believe that we would have orchards worth $500 or more per acre, if they were composed of trees as good as the best native trees now growing wild right here in the United States.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT

Mrs. Sheldon Spent $1900 for Treatment Without Benefit. Finally Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Englewood, Ill. — "While going through the Change of Life I suffered with headaches, nervousness, flashes of heat, and I suffered so much I did not know what I was doing at times. I spent $1900 on doctors and not one did me any good. One day a lady called at my house and said she had been as sick as I was at one time, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made her well, so I took it and now I am just as well as I ever was. I cannot understand why women don't see how much pain and suffering they would escape by taking your medicine. I cannot praise it enough for it saved my life and kept me from the Insane Hospital."—Mrs. E. SHELDON, 5657 S. Halsted St., Englewood, Ill.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complication exists it pays to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special free advice.

Has Two Hats Now.

"I found such a wonderful bargain," said Mrs. Flatter.

"What was it?" asked her husband, a resident of Back Bay.

"You know I went downtown to buy a hat. Well, just as I got in the store they put up a sign, 'All hats at half price!'"

"So you only had to spend half of the money you intended."

"Oh, no, I bought two hats instead of one."

Feel Achy All Over?

To ache all over in damp weather, or after taking a cold, isn't natural, and often indicates kidney weakness. Uric acid causes many queer aches, pains and disorders of the organs. Well kidneys keep uric acid down. Tired, dizzy, nervous people would do well to try Doan's Kidney Pills. They stimulate the kidneys to activity and so help clear the blood of irritating poisons.

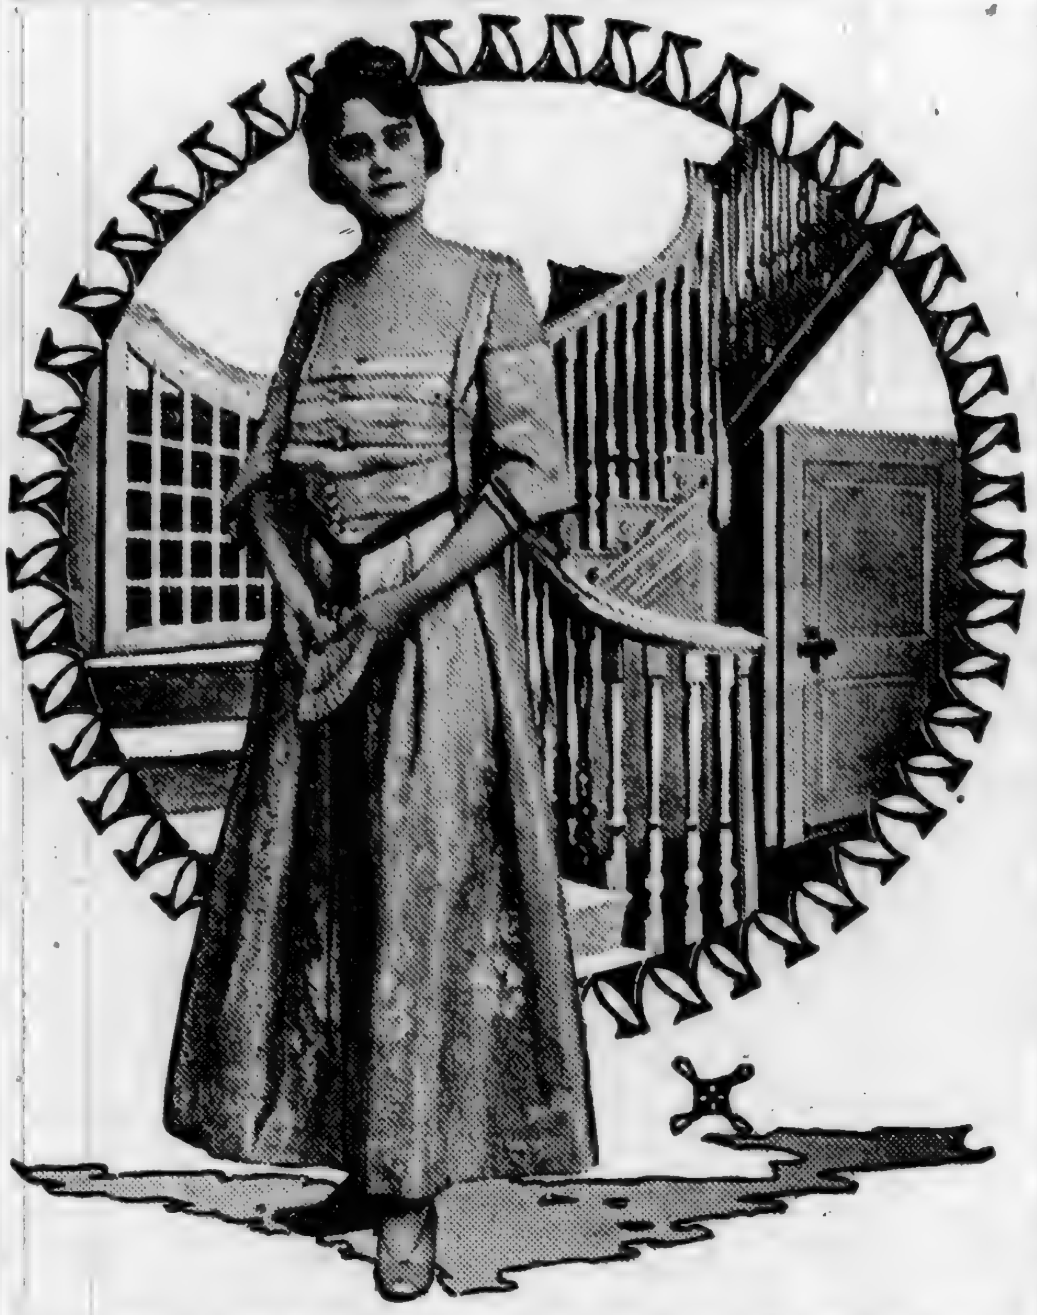
Evening Frock in Silver Brocade



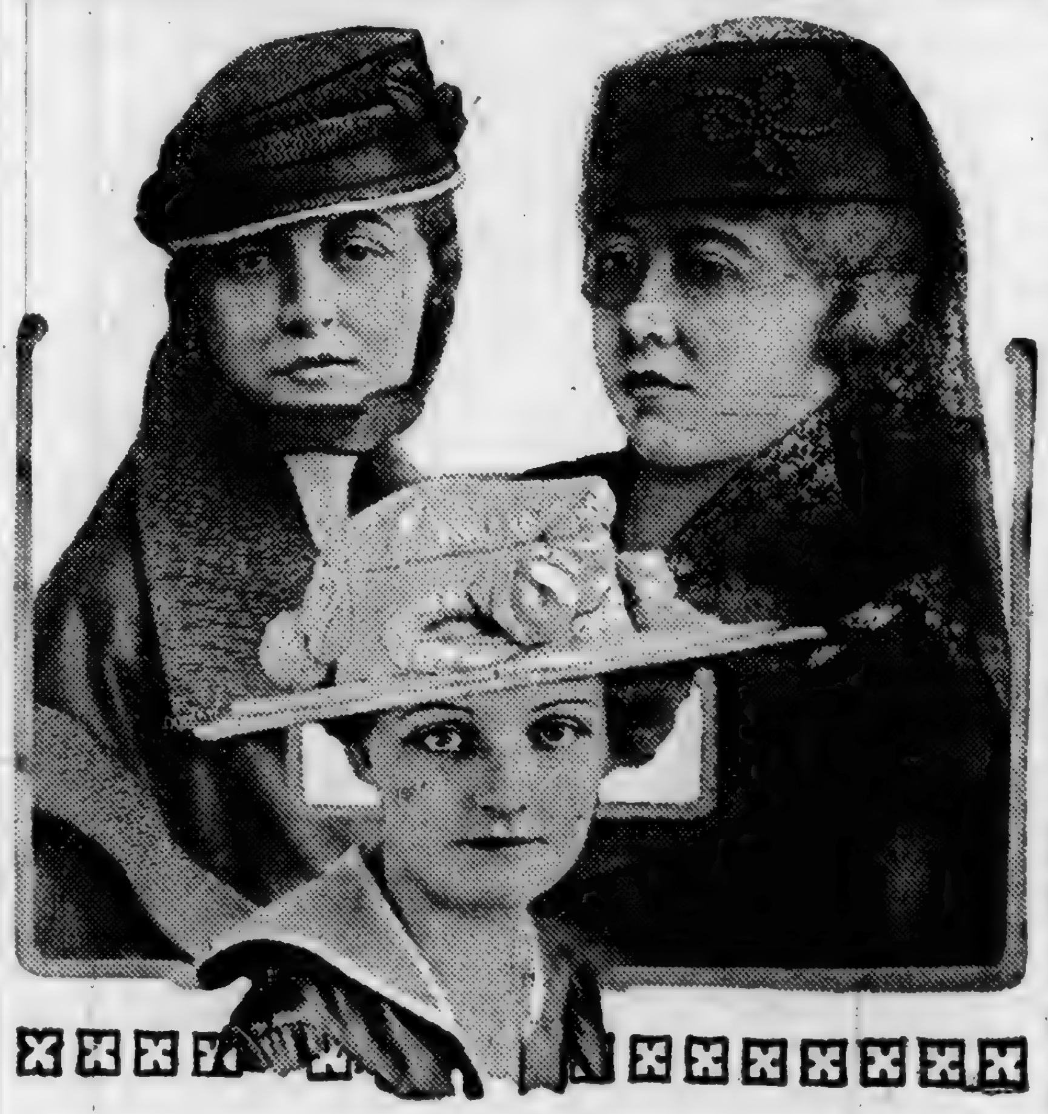
It is difficult, in this day of gorgeous and colorful fabrics, for the evening gown to keep within just the right limit of display. But in spite of all its gold and silver cloth and rich brocade it may practice a reserve that adds to its distinction. Much glitter and gleam and riotous color, and many vagaries of style, are more than permissible—they are sought for, and it is left to the individual taste to choose from among them.

The lovely frock pictured here is in light gray silk brocaded with silver and made with embellishment of silver-run lace. There is something quaint and quakerish that is very engaging in the design, and no one will grow tired of the refined interpretation of the mode in evening gowns. It is a slim model, with its plain style perfectly suited to its color and material. Wider skirts with puffy draperies are not so new but they are equally good style.

The skirt is laid in small, single box plaits about the waistline, and the side bodies in the bodice appear to be cut in one with it. A narrow band of the brocade is extended over the shoulders. The bodice is merely a wide girdle at the front, with two narrow bands of brocade across the bust. Silk lace over silver tissue is introduced with buttons like those on the girdle. It has a plain back.

As in many others among the latest evening frocks the bodice has elbow sleeves with smart, square, turnback cuffs. The brocade is cut away at the top of the sleeves and the space filled in with lace. To add a required depth of color a sash of black velvet ribbon is an accessory that is worn in the simplest manner. Silver slippers and gray silk stockings complete a lovely costume which will be becoming to everyone.

Demands of the Mode in Mourning



The choice lies now between white or black crape for those who are called upon to observe a period of mourning. It is the material and not the color which has significance. Custom has made crape the insignia of mourning; this makes it possible to wear white instead of black, and removes the objection of sombreness. But crape hats are worn for shorter periods than those of mourning silk, which usually follow them. It is admissible to wear silk during the whole period which is to be observed.

In the picture given here three hats in this particular kind of millinery are shown. One of them is of white crape made on a sailor shape of medium size. The frame is smoothly covered and the effect of a double brim is given by a shaped piece of crape with corded edge overlaid on the upper brim. The hat has a soft crown and is trimmed with roses and leaves made of the crape. Veils of white net edged with narrow borders of crape are made for wear with hats of white crape, and they are also in white.

An elegant small turban of black crape is pictured, worn with a scarf-like cape to match and a semicircular. The veil is of fine Brussels net bordered with crape. Grenadine or silk may be used for the cape. The collar and border are plain folds of crape.

A turban of black silk, in a weave made especially for mourning wear is very modish with its veil of fancy net bordered with chiffon. The veil is an important decorative adjunct to the hat, which is entirely plain except for a scrollwork of dull jet beads about the coronet. This model is one of those which may follow the crape hat for the remaining period of mourning, or be substituted for crape during the whole period. Nearly all veils are of net, bordered either with chiffon, narrow grosgrain ribbon, or with crape.

Julia Bottomley

Touch of Fur.

Everywhere one finds the touch of fur—or the lavish use of fur—and great cleverness has been shown in the handling of these fur trimmings, the ordinary bordering bands being less in evidence than odd little girdle arrangements of fur, fur collars, etc. Of course, the bordering bands are popular, too, and very wide bands appear on the bottoms of skirts or tunics in afternoon and street models; but these trimmings, though they are effective and handsome, are vieux jeu, and some of the less striking but more original fur motifs are more interesting.

White Beaver Hats for Sport.

The oddest thing about them is that they have not come before, for they are exactly in line with the season's fashion. This one is a regular snowball, of no particular shape except that the narrow brim droops and upon one side is a nosegay of primrose silk flowers buttonhole-stitched around with gay floss.

Temperance Notes

MAINE VINDICATED.

Poverty.

A common trick of the liquor advocates is to claim that prohibition promotes pauperism. In order to prove this they select a few southern states where conditions are very different from those in New England, and contrast them with Maine. As a matter of fact United States census reports show that Maine has fewer paupers in her almshouses in proportion to her population than any other New England state except Vermont. Maine has 127 per 100,000 population. New Hampshire has 230 per 100,000.

Business.

The statement is sometimes made that prohibition injures business and drives away capital. But in the ten years covered by the last census returns while the great manufacturing state of Massachusetts increased the amount of capital invested in manufactures, 63.95 per cent, the prohibition state of Maine showed an increase of 77.4 per cent. The per cent increase in Maine was larger than in any of the other New England states.

Crime.

The Boston bartenders marching in a parade carried a banner upon which they proclaimed the startling news that "Prohibition produces crime." This was intended as a fling at Maine by the representatives of a so-called business that last year (1915) caused the arrest of 58,385 persons in Boston alone, and 106,146 in the commonwealth, under the high license regulation system. But United States census reports prove the falsity of the liquor claims. Contrasting Maine with her sister states we find that in 1910 she had for every 100,000 population, 98 prisoners in her penal institutions, the smallest proportion of all the New England states. And thus the slanderers of Maine are once more refuted by the official facts. Prohibition, even when imperfectly enforced, tends to the reduction of crime.

Insanity.

While there are many causes of insanity, the study of which shows it to be a very complex problem, and while conservative estimates by scientific authorities like Doctor Rosanoff of Clark university find that drink is the cause of about 25 per cent, it has remained for saloon supporters to discover that prohibition is largely responsible for insanity. How placing the liquor traffic under the ban of law can make people insane is one of the mysteries which only the brewers and distillers and their associates can solve. Certainly there has been no prohibition in the District of Columbia up to the present time (1916), yet the census returns show that on January 1, 1910, the number of insane in the hospitals there was 2,890, or 872.9 for every 100,000 of the population, the largest proportion reported anywhere in the country. How does Maine stand in this respect as compared with other New England states? If prohibition promotes insanity Maine ought to be well up at the head of the list. We find, however, from the official figures that Maine has the smallest proportion of insane—169 per 100,000 population. Massachusetts has 344 per 100,000.

Drunkenness.

Opponents of prohibition are fond of referring to the city of Bangor, Me., as an example of the results of prohibition, and holding up the number of arrests for drunkenness as proof of the complete failure of the prohibitory law in that state. As a matter of fact Bangor is a striking proof of the failure of the regulation system. Under the Bangor system of nullification of law, liquor sellers have been brought into court and fined, thus setting aside the intent and purpose of the law and setting up a local license system. Under this plan the number of arrests for drunkenness has been large, not on account of prohibition, but because of the treasonable action of Bangor officials. Any attempt, however mild, to enforce the law has always resulted in a diminution of arrests for drunkenness, thus proving conclusively the failure of the Bangor regulation method and showing the efficacy and value of prohibition.—Prof. John A. Nicholls.

WARNING TO BEER-DRINKER.

The beer-drinker is much worse off than the whisky drinker, who seems to have more elasticity and reserve power. He (the whisky drinker) will even have delirium tremens; but after the fit is gone you will sometimes find good material to work upon. Good management may bring him around all right. But when a beer-drinker gets into trouble, it seems as if you have to re-create the man before you can do anything for him. I have talked this for years, and have had abundance of living and dead instances around me to support my opinions.—Dr. S. H. Burgen, Toledo, O.

RUNNING TO COVER.

Sixty-eight new "temperance" beverage productions have recently been put upon the market by the breweries. Twenty-four of these drinks contain no alcohol at all. The remainder contain from 0.22 to 0.48 per cent of alcohol, except one which contains 1.44 per cent.

BAN ON BOOZE.

Science, industry, medicine and war have put the ban on alcohol. Greed is the only thing which bolsters up booze.

Drinking of Water

(By V. M. PIERCE, M. D.)

The general conclusions of the latest Medical Scientists proves that drinking plenty of pure water both between meals and with one's meals is beneficial to health. It has now been proven by means of the X-rays and actual tests upon many healthy young men that the drinking of large amounts of water with meals is often beneficial. Therefore if you want to keep healthy drink plenty of pure water (not ice water), both with your meals and between meals. If you ever suffer from backache, lumbago, rheumatism, or any of the symptoms of kidney trouble—such as deep colored urine, sediment in urine, getting out of bed at night frequently and other troublesome effects, take a little Anuric before meals. These Anuric Tablets can be obtained at almost any drug store.

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

GAVE HIS WIFE A SURPRISE

Indiana Man, Dressed for Festive Occasion, Was Taken by Spouse for Bold Burglar.

A member of the degree team of the Columbus lodge of Eagles was getting himself ready to go to Greensburg, where the Columbus team was to give the work to a class of candidates, relates the Indianapolis News. Each member of the Columbus team was to wear a dress suit. This member did not have any evening clothes, so he borrowed an outfit, including a boiled shirt, high collar and white tie. He got home rather late and found his wife in bed, asleep. He wished to try the thing on to see just how he looked. So, after dint of much nervous expenditure, he had everything in shape and rather admired himself in the mirror. He felt it was a shame for his wife to miss the great sight, so he went into the bedroom, shook her gently and waited for her to awaken. The woman opened her eyes and looked into the face of a strange man attired in fashionable evening clothes. She gave one scream and ducked under the cover.

"Go away, go away," she begged the supposed gentleman burglar, "we haven't any money."

"Nobody knows that any better than I do," her husband retorted, "but that's no reason why you should carry on like this."

Then she recognized his voice, came from under the covers and admired him to his heart's content.

GREAT ACTOR ON HIS DIGNITY

Richard Mansfield's Rebuke to Subordinate Who Spoke Lightly of Theatrical Production.

With reference to fine discrimination in the use of the well-known English language, it is possible to overdo the thing.

Diving into the trunk of recollections for the suitable illustration to adorn this remark and point the moral, we find it in Richard Mansfield's occupancy of the Garrick theater in New York—days of hilarity on that stage.

To Mansfield this theater was a temple. He tolerated no lightly spoken references to it. One day, when an attache reported, Mansfield gave instructions and started for his dressing room.

"I'll see you after the show," said the business lieutenant in parting.

"'After the show?'" repeated the actor-manager, with dignity. 'Are we acrobats?'

"After the perfromance," replied his associate, humbly.

"'The perfromance!'" exclaimed Mansfield. 'Are we ants?'

"Im very sorry," mumbled the crushed manager; "I'll see you after the play, sir."

"I shall be pleased to see you then," answered Mansfield.

Might Lose Ball, Too.

Two English soldiers caused some amusement at a golf course the other day. The first man teed up and made a mighty swipe, but failed to shift the ball. The miss was repeated no fewer than three times.

His pal was unable to stand it any longer.

"For heaven's sake, Bill," he broke out, "hit the thing. You know we have only four days' leave."

Slaughter-sale prices haven't struck the meat markets yet.

Birth of a Nation.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation", which will be shown at the Court Theatre Auburn, Nov. 17-18-19, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord", with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days". Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads.

Glando Did It.

Interesting Statement Given by Paulding Man.

Mr. C. A. Hughes, of Paulding, Ohio, said: "I had suffered so much from backache and kidney trouble that I was hardly able to drag around. After taking one treatment of Glando Tonic I was so improved that I took another treatment to make it a cure. I am now a well man and can heartily recommend Glando Tonic to all suffering from backache or kidney trouble."

A sluggish glandular system is responsible for most serious illnesses. Such a condition should not be neglected. The wonderful cures affected by Glando, the Great Gland Tonic, is due to the fact that it acts directly upon the glandular system. The three treatments which each package contains being necessary to effect a cure. Treatment No. One starts glandular activity. Treatment No. Two throws off the accumulated poisons and prepares the system for a tonic. Treatment No. Three is a splendid tonic that builds up the entire system. For sale by All Druggists.

BIG GUNS SWELL FROM AWFUL HEAT

Rapid Rate of Firing on Somme Causes Expansion of the Metal.

MUST STOP TO COOL OFF

Nuts and Various Small Parts of Guns Fly in Faces of Gunners Owing to Terrific Strain of Constant Firing.

London.—The following letter received at the home of Driver W. J. Edie of the British Royal Field artillery is a graphic description of his experience in the "great push." Mr Eadie was a London business man before joining the army:

"You start from a village about four kilometers in the rear on a fine summer night. The noise is terrific as you ride along; batteries all round you are firing salvos; shells from the heavy batteries and siege guns behind you, hurtling through the air overhead, go roaring along on their way to the German lines. Ahead of you star shells may be seen going up merrily into the night air, to float gracefully down and then go out.

"Great clouds of smoke hanging over the trenches; our shells bursting on top of the German position; red rockets going up from the German infantry asking their artillery for more support (in vain, however!) and above all, the ceaseless rattle of the machine guns. All combine to make a perfect inferno of flame and sound.

"Last, but not least, while you see and hear all this, you have a considerable amount of attention paid you by German shells—the shrapnel bursting with its peculiar and wicked whine, and the tear shells which, if you don't get your mask on quickly produce such an unpleasant effect on your eyes. This gas, by the way smells very much like strong mustard and cress.

"You have the satisfaction, however of knowing that, for every shell that comes, we let about 100 per cent back in return, believing as we do that ''Tis better far to give than to receive!' Our airmen have brought down all the enemy's 'spotters,' or 'sausages,' while ours can be seen floating in the air all along the line.

In Constant Stream.

"At last, the day dawned and, after an early cup of tea, we started to dispatch a few more specimens of English metal into the enemy lines.

"For a couple of hours, we (as well as every other battery in the line) poured a ceaseless stream of metal upon the poor 'blighters' waiting for our infantry attack. In the gun pits stripped to the waist, with sweat running down us and covered with oil and dirt, we do some record firing.

"Deaf, owing to the terrific noise and concussion; smarting eyes where lachrymatory gas had penetrated under our masks, strained faces due to lack of sleep; but, withal, a look of satisfaction on every face.

"We get the signal to pause for a minute, as the infantry is going 'over the top.' The London Terriers (London Scots, Rifle brigade, etc.), who were in front of us, went steadily across, and in exactly 30 minutes from the time of starting had penetrated the enemy's fourth line of trenches.

"As they got nearer the German lines, the latter rushed out and threw up their hands, but on the Terriers went to the next trench, though not without bestowing a kick on the tender part of the 'blighter's' anatomy, leaving them for those who followed.

"We start firing again at a longer range, and work like demons as our range gradually creeps up, and the fuses are lengthened accordingly, for we know our men are going on rapidly. We set up a cheer when we knew they had reached the fourth line of trenches.

"At one time we reached such a rapid rate of firing that water had to be poured down the muzzles of the guns to cool them. All that came out the other end was—steam, and, the steel of the breach expanding, we had to force the breach open after each shell with a stave of wood. At length the guns became so hot that one could hardly stand near them, let alone touch them. The steel, of course, expanding under the heat, stopped the gun from sliding back into its proper place after the recoil. Two of the guns in our battery were thus compelled reluctantly to 'cease fire' till they cooled down a bit.

At Gunners' Own Risk.

"Two guns, I might say, had been firing for quite half an hour at the gunners' own risk, with nuts, oil, etc., flying in their faces owing to the terrific strain they (the guns) were subjected to. But as soon as there was a lull, the guns were soon put right again.

"As you will no doubt have read by now the wood round which we were attacking was a tough job, but the idea was to keep large numbers of enemy troops engaged while on our right our troops were advancing. We attained our object and when the others had a firm hold on the villages they had captured, we withdrew to our old positions.

"Our wounded came down the road—at least, those who were able to walk—most of them with a flower in their buttonhole or hat, and quite cheerful.

"The German prisoners I saw looked as if they had had a terrible time of it. One of them picked up a potato from a field and started eating it. During the 'great push' the most difficult push of all is pushing hard biscuit down your throat accompanied by bully beef! But we don't mind, so long as we are giving the Germans a hot time. When it rains hard, we have the consolation of knowing that the enemy is getting wet as well as ourselves.

"I should have mentioned that, towards the close of the first day of the advance so numerous were the German dead, both in the trenches and outside, they asked for a short armistice to enable them to clear away the bodies. Even then the 'rotters' couldn't play the game, but opened fire upon some of our men who were exposed. By way of punishment every one of our guns let fly six rounds of rapid fire, from which the Germans suffered considerably."

WOMAN SHOOTS ANGRY BULL

Wife Saves Her Husband's Life From Enraged Animal on Minnesota Farm.

Thief River Falls, Minn.—Mike Zimney, a farmer living east of here, was saved from being trampled to death by an enraged bull by the courage and prompt action of his wife.

The animal took offense at the flapping of Mr. Zimney's raincoat and attacked him, throwing him to the ground and breaking several ribs and his collarbone.

Mrs. Zimney, seeing the plight of her husband, quickly secured a shotgun and some shells. While she had never attempted to use firearms of any kind, she managed to load the gun and shoot the animal, stunning him sufficiently to enable her to drag her unconscious husband out of danger. Mr. Zimney was brought to the hospital here for treatment.

TOBACCO KEEPS HER ALIVE

Indiana Woman Takes a Smoke on the One Hundredth Anniversary of Her Birth.

Washington, Ind.—Sarah Ellen Denny has celebrated her one hundredth birthday anniversary. Sitting on the porch at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Dave Dove, she smoked her old-fashioned clay pipe and spent the day telling her friends of her early life.

She has used tobacco since she was sixteen years old, and says she believes tobacco is what "kept her alive."

Mrs. Denny was born in Tishimingo county, Tennessee, but has been a resident of Washington for many years. She gets about without the aid of a cane and does not wear glasses. She has traveled over 12 different states, behind a team of oxen for the most part.

Pressing of Necktie Cost $500.

Sandusky, O.—Charles A. Trinter had occasion, during the absence of his family, to press a necktie. He used an electric iron and after smoothing his tie went away without turning off the current. The next morning Trinter was awakened by a cry of "fire," and found that it was his dwelling that was in flames. The iron was the cause and the loss amounted to $500.

People in St. Joe had an opportunity Monday to contribute to the great Thanksgiving dinner that is to be given by the Salvation Army at Wayne. A representative was in town gathering up apples, canned fruit, chickens, etc, for this great day. In conversation with him he stated that they fed 1,000 hungry poor folks about 3 times a year. Besides eatables they will take clothing and in this way they are able to care for the down-and-out poor folks when they are out of work. While this kind of work is new to the small town folks, yet the gentleman says that the people did splendidly for the first time.

Always Welcome At The
St. JOE ELEVATOR
SAMUEL KEESLER, Local Manager.

The second Rural Church Conference, a movement in co-operation with Purdue University, of this state was held here on last Tuesday and Wednesday. The meeting was a great one and the purpose was simply to promote the general interests of all the churches of the 12th. District. The attendance was a failure but those who stayed by the meeting to the finish are broader Christians than they were before. The representatives from outside churches numbered 4 at one time. Frank Scholes extended the welcome from the churches of our little city while H. M. Widney represented the Rural Community. Chairman J. C. Coons responded "Why we are Here" setting for the purpose of Purdue in putting on such meetings and what a great opportunity is lost by the churches not rallying to the support of the great institution which is at our command as well as for the farmer. Prof. J. A. Linke, Purdue, gave "The Home, the School and the Church" Church people should realize the value of the Get-together movement—lay aside all denominational differences and unite on one common ground. Efforts of church are too scattered. Churches must give more attention to the children as they are the biggest product in the country. The Hebrew nation emphasized home training and religious development, while the Greeks stand for school education. In further discussion Mr. Linke said:

I believe in evolution, not the theory as advanced by Darwin that man's ancestor was the monkey, but that the earth was formed atom by atom, the fossils of prehistoric animals, foretell those of a future age. Science is in full accord with the Biblical account, if we believe in the past, we must believe in the future. The history of the world is in cycles. We are living in the cycle of religious thought and activity which clearly indicates the coming of the spiritual kingdom. He said we should have a central church. The modern slogan is interest in the other fellow. When we are thoroughly alive to this idea it will result in the abandonment of religious lines and political differences will disappear in the same way. The way of knowledge comes through doing things, and not by hearing or seeing. Happiness comes through being in your own proper place, and not being a misfit. The community idea, he said, offers a place to try out, a test of the capacities or capabilities of different individuals. This he illustrated by stories.

The professor's address was followed by a discussion. Mrs. Lottie Tuttle, who was first on the program to lead the discussion, under the head of "The Home", was not present. Rev. Spayd, the local Christian minister, acted in her stead. He made a comparison between the Catholics and Protestants, stating the reason for hold Catholics exercised over their children was due to the early and constant teaching of bible truths. Protestants have been negligent in this matter, they must use the same tactics employed by Catholics or there will come a time when it will be too late to exercise any control over their children. At the conclusion of this talk, the audience sang, "Nearer My God to Thee". An announcement and reading of a letter of greeting followed this song. Frank Scholes spoke feelingly of the spirit of brotherly love that seems the world is beginning, or ought, to recognize in adjusting our differences.

Prof. F. L. Smith, of the St. Joe High School, spoke next on "The School". One of the points upon which he dwelt particularly was the advantages possessed by the country youth over the youth of the city. The country youth lives near to the heart of nature, he breathes the clear fresh air, his eyes behold less of the artificial. There being less amusements to distract, leaves his mind more clear and receptive to the things which are more beneficial, and which is offered in their stead, his natural activities are given a better channel in which to express themselves. Mrs. Charles W. Sewell, Extension Worker for Purdue University, next spoke. Mrs. Sewell is a pleasing speaker who posesses a sense of humor, she seems to delight in the defense of her sex in good humored witticisms at the expense of the male objectors of woman's activities in various fields, supposedly closed to her sex. She represents herself as a farmer's wife, and seems to be of the class that does not work at it much, preferring to become active in telling the others how.

Tuesday evening a fair sized audience greeted Oakel F. Hall, the Students Pastor of Purdue, in his great, new, illustrated lecture on "Weekday Activities of the Rural Church", in which he threw upon the screen some most startling pictures giving exact conditions of the church life in some of the rural communities of the state. In other cases the live churches gave a striking example of what was possible to do where a little pep and ginger with business ability is used.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The second days session was opened by Rev. Spayd by Scripture reading and prayer, followed by short prayers by others. A. Z. Arehart, DeKalb County Agent, spoke on the "Relation of the County Agent to the Rural Church" The farmers must be brought to a higher state of efficiency, for it is through them the rural church must have their financial strength.

"Woman's Part in Rural Progress" was the subject alotted to Mrs. Chas. W. Sewell. Woman has, it would appear, the lion's share of work on the farm from the description given by Mrs. Sewell. The last detail of sending the children to school, looking towards the minor details of her own and her husband's work fall upon the shoulders of the woman, she through the generousity of the men, is allowed to do the greater portion of the work of the church. Mrs. Sewell has a faculty of saying sharp biting truths in a manner that does not affront, and her talk was replete with anecdote and illustrations to sustain her arguments.

Walfred Lindstrom's topic was "The Farmer and the Church". He stated that for a lack of members a church of any particular denomination would or could not be organized. A farmer would not stop at a house of worship not representing his views of religion, but would drive past that church to a different community where his particular brand was in use. The church must not show a spirit of intolerance toward the desire of youth to seek entertainment, but provide social interests strong enough to appeal to this natural instinct things not of questionable nature. An illustration of this idea was given. In a community in which the young and old engaged in social games in the basement of a church. A dance was advertised. A number of men from a neighboring town, were attracted to the hall where this dance was to be held, upon their arrival they were told that there would be no dance, as all the young people were at that church affair.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

Rev. Coons, local pastor of the M. P. Church, could not preside over this, the last session of the conference, being called away to take charge of a funeral, his place was filled by Rev. Overholtzer, of Harlan, Ind. Rev. Hall led the devotional services, his text being Matt. 13th. chapter, following devotional. Rev. O. E. Tomes, of Ft. Wayne, pastor of one of the three Christian Churches of that city, spoke on the subject of "The Community Training School". The teachers training course which has been adopted in many communities is gradually being supplanted by the newer community training school, this seems to be more satisfactory. The methods of this

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

We may be shy of cannon and we may be short of guns,
We may not have as many men as many other ones,
We may require a fort or two, some infantry and horse,
A little more artillery to back them up, of course;
But in one matter we have not a reason to be scared—
For, when it comes to pumpkin pies, we surely are prepared!

We may be short of men of war and shy of submarines
And low in mines and other subterranean machines;
We ought to have an aeroplane, or, maybe two or three,
To sail among the mountaintops or hydroplane the sea;
We haven't any instruments for shooting poisoned gas—
But we can beat the universe at making apple sass!

We have the pumpkins and we have the pippins big and fine;
And, if you want preparedness, pie-paredness for mine!
If someone sails across the sea America to try,
We'll shoot them full of apple sass and full of pumpkin pie,
I bet they'll throw their guns away, beneath that magic charm,
And settle in America and buy them each a farm!

MAY ASK CHANGE IN PRIMARY TIME

Many Leading Politicians Believe That a Later Date Would Be Better.

EXPENSE TO THE CANDIDATES

Under the Present Law They Are Required to Make Two Long expensive and Wearing Campaigns, Nomination and Election.

Indianapolis.—Some talk is heard that a bill will be introduced at the coming session of the legislature to change the time for holding primary elections in Indiana.

The present law requires that they shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March. Many of those who have taken part in the 1916 campaigns for nominations, as well as for election, are of the opinion that the time should be changed, and that the primaries should not be held until September or the first of October each year. Some say it would be well to make city nominations in October and county and state nominations in September, thus giving 30 days for the city campaign and 60 days for the state and county campaign.

Under the present law a candidate for office is required to make two long, expensive and wearing campaigns—one for the nomination and one for election. Candidates for nominations, under the present system, announce their candidacies months in advance of the primaries, and they are required to make a long campaign. For instance, candidates for state offices start one year ahead to get ready for the primaries to be held the following spring. They must travel all over the state, or, at least, they think they must, and this kind of campaign is almost, if not quite, as expensive as conducting the campaign for election.

Following the March primaries there is a long lull in political matters, during which the only thing done is organization work by the parties. This kind of work, it is urged, could be accomplished in the same months, even though the nominations were not made until September or October.

City elections will be made throughout the state next fall, and nominations for city offices will be made next March, unless the present primary law is changed and the date for holding the primaries made later in the year. Already there is talk of candidates for city nominations, in the cities throughout the state, and this is one thing that has given rise to the talk of a change in the primary law.

Complaint is heard that it is foolish to start now to work for nominations to be voted for at the election next fall, a whole year ahead, but that is exactly what is going on. If the primaries for city nominations were postponed until September or October, it is pointed out, there would be no necessity for primary campaign work to start before next spring, whereas under the present system it is on right now.

Under the primary law, as it stands now, precinct committeemen for the parties are elected at the March primaries. The precinct committeemen to be elected next March will not only be the members of the county committee, but all of them whose precincts are wholly or in part within the limits of a city are also members of the city committee, although they elect a city chairman to conduct their city campaign. If the legislature changes the time of holding the primaries the present precinct committeemen would continue as members of the city committee until the primaries to be held later in the season.

While the talk in favor of a change in the time of holding the primaries has not yet taken on the form of a definite movement, it is known that some of the politicians are laying plans to bring about such action by the legislature.

Indiana Crop Summary.

The corn crop as a whole did not turn out as well as was anticipated, although what is good will be cribbed and the poor quality used for ensilage. In the north part of the state frost damaged the crop very materially, while in the south part the greatest damage was from heat and storms. Complaint from all sections has been received of poorly filled and small, chaffy ears. Husking is progressing very rapidly and will be practically completed within the next two weeks if the weather continues favorable.

The wheat crop is the smallest for many years and will not grade above No. 3 for the whole crop, notwithstanding that there were some sections that produced an excellent grade.

The oats crop is considerably short of last year, and while it is of splendid color, the extreme heat at the filling period caused it to be very light weight per measured bushel.

Tobacco is not grown very extensively in this state, but the counties that do produce it report a splendid crop this year, both weight and color being exceptionally good and the crop put away in the best of condition.

The early potato crop was a fairly good one, but the late potatoes were almost a failure. Blight, bugs and frost being the agencies contributing to the disaster.

Hay was about the only full crop produced this year, it being one of the largest and best ever raised in the state.

The total production of apples, compared with a favorable year, is very low. Very few of the farm orchards had any at all, but the commercial orchards in nearly all cases report a good crop, and some of them the largest crop ever raised. The quality is unusually good except in a few sections. The late varieties are raised much more extensively than the early and nearly all of them are marketed, either at the orchard or through cold-storage houses. The number of trees remains about the same as the census reported, although many large orchards have been set out since that time.

A summary of preliminary estimates of crop production for the state of Indiana and for the United States, as compiled by the bureau of crop estimates (and transmitted through the weather bureau), United States department of agriculture, is as follows:

Corn.

State—Estimate this year, 175,000,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 190,950,000 bushels.

United States—Estimate this year, 2,640,000,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 3,054,535,000 bushels.

Wheat.

State—October estimate, 18,158,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 47,300,000 bushels.

United States—October estimate, 607,557,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 1,011,505,000 bushels.

Oats.

State—October estimate, 54,060,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 65,520,000 bushels.

United States—October estimate, 1,229,182,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 1,540,362,000 bushels.

Tobacco.

State—Estimate this year, 13,800,000 pounds; production last year (final estimate), 11,340,000 pounds.

United States—Estimate this year, 1,150,000,000 pounds; production last year (final estimate), 1,060,587,000 pounds.

Potatoes.

State—Estimate this year, 3,260,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 7,125,000 bushels.

United States—Estimate this year, 289,000,000 bushels; production last year (final estimate), 359,103,000 bushels.

Hay.

State—September estimate, 3,054,000 tons; production last year (final estimate), 3,030,000 tons.

United States—September estimate, 86,155,000 tons; production last year (final estimate), 85,225,000 tons.

Apples.

State—Estimate this year, 1,310,000 barrels; production last year (final estimate), 3,883,0000 barrels.

United States—Eestimate this year, 67,700,000 barrels; production last year (final estimate), 76,670,000 barrels.

Prices.

The first price given below is the average on November 1 this year, and the second the average on November last year:

State—Wheat, 169 and 102 cents per bushel; corn, 76 and 60; oats, 47 and 33; potatoes, 159 and 55; hay, $10 and $11 per ton; eggs, 32 and 26 cents per dozen.

United States—Wheat, 158.0 and 93.1 cents per bushel; corn, 85.0 and 61.9 cents; oats, 49.0 and 34.9 cents; potatoes 136.0 and 60.8 cents; hay, $10.68 and $10.83 per ton; cotton, 18.0 and 11.6 cents per pound; eggs, 32.0 and 26.3 cents per dozen.

Merger Is Authorized.

The purchase of a group of utilities in southern Indiana by the Indiana Power and Water company, a concern recently organized at Bloomfield, Ind., has been authorized by the Indiana public service commission.

H. L. Clarke and B. M. Simon, both of Chicago, are said to be at the head of the organization of the new utility corporation. The utilities that are to be taken over include the Indiana Light and Power company, Worthington; Home Light and Power Company, Bloomfield; Elnora Light and Power company, Elnora; Myers Light and Power company, Ogden; Bicknell Light and Power company, Bicknell, and the Linn Coal company, also of Bicknell. It is understood that the issuance of $240,000 in bonds and $80,000 in stock is authorized, the securities to be sold at not less than 80 per cent of par.

New Incorporations.

Acme Variety Stores company, Indiana Harbor, has dissolved.

The Warrick Roofing Tile company, Evansville, has filed notice of preliminary dissolution.

The A. F. Wolke Rubber company of Kentucky has announced it will do business in Indiana.

The Roberts Veneer company, New Albany, has increased its capital stock from $35,000 to $52,000.

Young Syrian Christian society, Michigan City; religious; directors, A. Caili, J. Kaluch, N. Samaya.

SHORT STATE ITEMS.

Richmond.—Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sommerville left for New York to sail for Europe November 18. Mr. Sommerville is to become an assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Petrograd, Russia.

Lawrenceburg.—Milford E. Milburn, thirty-three, a tobacco grower, accidentally shot himself when hunting rabbits. The load entered his left hand and wrist and it is probable the hand will have to amputated.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Greencastle.—Arthur Coffman, thirty, died of tetanus. A week ago he stepped on a nail and tetanus developed Sunday.

Indianapolis.—Her clothing afire and unable to move from her chair, Mrs. Sarah Bryson, eighty-four, was burned to death here. Neighbors prevented the house from burning.

Lawrenceburg.—Rodger E. Tolbern, twenty-two, accidentally shot Breckenridge E. Wooders, twenty-three, when hunting rabbits near Splitrock. Both were shooting at two rabbits and scattering shot from their guns struck each other.

Bloomington.—Pupils in the departmental building of the city schools all were searched by their teachers after a gold watch had been stolen from Minnie Weybright, an instructor, during the noon hour. The watch was not found.

Lafayette.—A man beating his way on a Wabash freight train was killed in a wreck of a freight train at Coburn. The man was identified as Harry B. Riley, thirty-five, who was on his way from Port Huron, Mich., to Dallas, Tex.

Brazil.—Catherine E. Pell, wife of George Pell, a farmer east of Brazil, has brought suit in the Clay circuit court for a divorce and $25,000 alimony. She alleges cruel and inhuman treatment. The couple has a family of grown children.

Princeton.—During a political quarrel here Lloyd Evans shot at Joe Cannon, colored, and Cannon fell. It developed Evans shot into the ground as he pushed Cannon over. No one was hurt. Evans was fined $2 and costs for carrying a concealed weapon.

Indianapolis.—The public service commission has approved the agreement of city officials of Elkhart and the gas company there for reductions in the gas rate. The reduction is from $1.15 to 95 cents a thousand cubic feet and other graded reductions based on the amount of gas used.

Spencer.—Rather than go to trial Thursday for the murder of Fern Brumit, eighteen, who had spurned his love, Harry Dyar, forty-one, of Indianapolis, committed suicide in the county jail here by hanging himself. He used two sheets to make the noose around his neck. Dyar shot and killed Miss Brumit last April 16, when the girl had accompanied the body of Dyar's mother here for burial.

Evansville.—The coroner of Warrick county began an investigation into the cause of the Evansville and Eastern Interurban head-on collision which cost two lives and resulted in injuries to 15 persons. Motorman Raymond Polk of the east-bound car, who, with Conductor Noble Goodman, is blamed for the accident by the company because his car ran past a signal, and Ira Meador of the west-bound car died of their injuries. All the passengers will recover.

Indianapolis.—In the three years the federal free employment bureau has operated the number of persons for whom employment has been secured has grown until in the fiscal year ending next June 30 employment will have been found for 200,000 workers, according to Anthony Caminetti, commissioner of immigration, who stopped here to inspect the Indiana bureau. Mr. Caminetti is much interested in the work of the women's department of the bureau here, which was established recently with the co-operation of club women of the city.

Indianapolis.—The federal grand jury began work which may continue through most of the winter. The grand jury will investigate first a score of violations of federal laws and then will take up the alleged election law violations in Indiana. Prosecutors in several counties who had gathered evidence of illegalities at the polls are turning their evidence over to the federal authorities. It was reported from Connersville that much evidence of vote-buying at $2 a head has been given to the government. Two Rushville men, Homer and Will Casey, were arrested by local authorities, charged with illegal voting. It is claimed they moved to Rushville from Indianapolis after registering.

Indianapolis.—Indiana Democrats hailed with delight the determination of administration leaders to ask a senate investigation of the method of election of United States Senators James E. Watson and Harry S. New. Will H. Hays, Republican state chairman, greeted the announcement with contempt. "There was no crookedness," he declared. The proposed senate investigation was not instigated by the Democratic state committee. State Chairman Korbly had decided to let the federal grand jury do its work first. But defeated candidates on the ticket and Democratic organs in every hamlet have been clamoring for action. One of the latest Democratic charges is that the Republicans gave hundreds of workers five-dollar bills with which to place bets on Hughes.

South Bend.—Mrs. Estella Biggs, charged with kidnaping her laughter, aged two, from J. H. Bellard of Greencastle, her former husband, was held in the county jail to be returned to Greenfield, but the warrants were found to be defective.

Gary.—The United States Steel corporation has taken steps to protect its 20,000 employees here from coal famine and high prices for fuel. Coke produced at the Gary steel mills is being sold to steel workers at $2.90 per ton, plus a small drayage charge. The price is one-half that charged by local retail dealers for coke.

Meat Eaters' Backache

Meat lovers are apt to have backaches and rheumatic attacks. Unless you do heavy work and get lots of fresh air, don't eat too much meat. It's rich in nitrogen and helps to form uric acid—a solid poison that irritates the nerves, damages the kidneys and often causes dropsy, gravel and urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills help weak kidneys to throw off uric acid. Thousands recommend them.

An Indiana Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

F. P. Clark, 124 E. Frank St., Mitchell, Ind., says: "I was bothered a great deal by kidney trouble. It was hard for me to do my work, because of that heavy aching in my back that changed to a sharp pain when I lifted. My kidneys acted too often and the kidney secretions passed several times at night. Finally, I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they brought me such great relief, that I gladly recommend them."

With Sorrow.

An example of the genially naive is the following, clipped from an exchange:

"It is with sorrow that we announce an accident to Mrs. John Whitman, wife of the well-known grocer, who sells three pounds and a half of sugar for a quarter. While he was chasing her around the yard in fun the other evening she stepped on an old tomato can and severely lacerated her foot. Should blood poisoning set in and she be removed from our midst the Banner will turn its column rules as a tribute to her."

Men and Generals.

Sir Henry Babbington Smith, during his last visit to New York, was talking about the war.

"Of course, when a general loses," he said, "it isn't his fault. Oh, no! Of course not!'

"It's like men and their overcoats.

"No man is honest enough to say to his wife, "Where did I leave my overcoat?' He always says instead:

"'Where did you put my overcoat?'"

QUEER LUCK

Did you ever have a piece of really good luck—for instance, help from an entirely unexpected source when you were in deep trouble?

Luck, good or bad, is certainly on the trail of Hugh Whitaker. You remember, a corps of eminent surgeons gave him just six months to live. So he found a girl in trouble, married her to save her good name and disappeared immediately. Five years later he reappeared in New York from Australia, happy, healthy and prosperous, and started out to find the little girl he married. He discovers her when he goes to the theater—she's Sara Law, great actress. Mutual recognition across the footlights stops the play and creates wild excitement among the audience. What next occurs is told in this installment. Go to it!

"Where's Miss Law?" he asked.

"I dunno—go ask Max."

"Where is he?"

"You can search me; last I saw of him he was tearing the star dressin' room up by the roots."

Whitaker hurried on just in time to see Max disappearing in the direction of the stage door, at which point he caught up with him, and from the manager's disjointed catechism of the doorkeeper garnered the information that the star had hurried out of the building while Max was making his announcement before the curtain.

Max swung angrily upon Whitaker.

"Oh, it's you, is it? Perhaps you can explain what this means? She was looking straight at you when she dried up! I saw her—"

"Perhaps you'd better find Miss Law and ask her," Whitaker interrupted. "Have you any idea where she's gone?"

"Home, probably," Max snapped in return.

"Come on, then." Passing his arm through the manager's, Whitaker drew him out into the alley. "We'll get a taxi before this mob—"

"But, look here—what business've you got mixing in?"

"Ask Miss Law," said Whitaker, shortly. It had been on the tip of his tongue to tell the man flatly: "I'm her husband." But he retained wit enough to deny himself the satisfaction of this shattering rejoinder. "I know her," he added; "that's enough for the present."

At the entrance to the alley Max paused to listen to the uproar within his well-beloved theater.

"I'd give five thousand gold dollars if I hadn't met you this afternoon!" he groaned. "I always knew that woman was a Jonah!"

"You were calling her your mascot two hours ago."

"She'll be the death of me, yet," the little man insisted gloomily. He stopped short, jerking his arm free. "Look here, I'm not going. I've got my work cut out for me back there"—with a jerk of his head toward the theater.

Whitaker hesitated, then without regret decided to lose him. It would be as well to get over the impending interview without a third factor.

"Very well," he said, beckoning a taxicab in to the curb. "What's the address?"

Max gave it sullenly.

"So long," he added morosely as Whitaker opened the cab door; "sorry I ever laid eyes on you."

Whitaker settled back in the cab and, oblivious to the lights of Broadway streaming past, tried to think. It suddenly presented itself to his reason, with shocking force, that his attitude must be humbly and wholly apologetic. It was a singular case: he had come home to find his wife on the point of marrying another man—and she was the one entitled to feel aggrieved! Strange twist of the eternal triangle!

Far too soon the machine swerved into Fifty-seventh street, slipped halfway down the block, described a wide arc to the northern curb and pulled up, trembling, before a modest modern residence between Sixth and Seventh avenues.

Reluctantly Whitaker got out and, on suspicion, told the chauffeur to wait. Then, with all the alacrity of a condemned man ascending the scaffold, he ran up the steps to the front door.

A man-servant answered his ring without undue delay.

Was Miss Law at home? He would see.

This indicated that she was at home. Whitaker tendered a card with his surname penciled after that of Mr. Hugh Morten in engraved script.

He stared round him with pardonable wonder. If this were truly the home of Mary Ladislas Whitaker—her property—he had builded far better than he could possibly have foreseen with that investment of five hundred dollars six years since. Soft, shaded lights, rare furnishings, the rich yet delicate atmosphere of exquisite taste, the hush and orderly perfection of a home made and maintained with consummate art: these furnished him with dim, provoking intimations of an individuality to which he was a stranger—less than a stranger—nothing. . . .

Almost immediately he became aware of feminine footsteps on the staircase—there entered to him a lady well past middle age, with the dignity and poise consistent with her years, her manifest breeding and her iron-gray hair.

"Mr. Whitaker?"

He bowed.

"I am Mrs. Secretan, a friend of Miss Law's. She has asked me to say that she begs to be excused, at least for tonight. And I am further instructed to ask if you will be good enough to leave your address."

"Certainly: I'm stopping at the Ritz-Carlton; but"—he demurred—"I should like to leave a note, if I may—?"

Mrs. Secretan nodded an assent. "You will find materials in the desk there," she added, indicating an escritoire.

Thanking her, Whitaker sat down, and, after some hesitation, wrote a few lines:

> Please don't think I mean to cause you the slightest inconvenience or distress. I shall be glad to further your wishes in any way you may care to designate. Please believe in my sincere regret. . . .

Signing and folding this, he rose and delivered it to Mrs. Secretan.

He found himself in the street, with his trouble for all reward for his pains. He wondered what to do, where to go, next. The driver of the taxicab was holding the door for him, head bent to catch the address of the next stop. But his fare lingered still in doubt.

Dimly he became aware of the violent bawlings of a brace of news vendors who were ramping through the street, one on either sidewalk. At the spur of a vague wonder if the papers were already noising abroad the news of the fiasco at the Theater Max, Whitaker purchased a paper.

"Ther'y'are, sir. 'Orrible molder . . . Thanky . . ."

The man galloped on, howling. But Whitaker stood with his gaze riveted in horror. The news item so pointedly offered to his attention was clearly legible in the light of the cab lamps:

LATEST EXTRA

TRAGIC SUICIDE IN HARLEM RIVER.

Stopping his automobile in the middle of Washington bridge at 7:30 p. m., Carter S. Drummond, the lawyer, and fiance of Sara Law, the actress, threw himself to his death in the Harlem river. The body has not yet been recovered.

CHAPTER VII.

A History.

Whitaker consulted a telephone book without finding that Drummond had any private residence connection, and then tried at random one of the clubs of which they had been members in common in the days when Hugh Whitaker was a human entity in the knowledge of the town. Here he had better luck—luck, that is, in as far as it put an end to his wanderings for the night; he found a clerk who remembered his face without remembering his name, and who, consequently, was not unwilling to talk. Drummond, it seemed, had lived at the club; he had dined alone, that evening, in his room; had ordered his motor car from the adjacent garage for seven o'clock; and had left at about that hour with a small handbag and no companion.

Nothing further was known of his actions save the police report. The car had been found stationary on Washington bridge, and deserted, Drummond's motor coat and cap on the driver's seat. Bystanders averred that a man had been seen to leave the car and precipitate himself from the bridge to the stream below. The body was still unrecovered. The club had notified by telegraph a brother in San Francisco, the only member of Drummond's family of whom it had any record. Friends, fellow members of the club, were looking after things—doing all that could and properly ought to be done under the circumstances.

Whitaker walked back to his hotel. There was no other place to go; no place, that is, that wooed his humor in that hour. He was, indeed, profoundly shocked. He held himself measurably responsible for Drummond's act of desperation. Next to poor Peter Stark, whom his heart mourned without ceasing, he had cared most for Drummond of all the men he had known and liked in the old life. Now . . . he felt alone and very lonely, sick of heart and forlorn. There was, of course, Lynch, his partner in the Antipodes; Whitaker was fond of Lynch, but not with the affection that a generous-spirited youth had accorded Peter Stark and Drummond—a blind and unreasoning affection that asked no questions and made nothing of faults. The capacity for such sentiment was dead in him, as dead as Peter Stark, as dead as Drummond. . . .

It was nearly midnight, but the hour found Whitaker in no humor for bed or the emptiness of his room. He strolled into the lounge, sat down at a detached table in a corner, and ordered something to drink. A page, bearing something on a salver, ambled through the lounge, now and again opening his mouth to bleat, dispassionately: "Mista Whitaker, Mista Whitaker!"

The owner of that name experienced a flush of exasperation. What right had the management to cause him to be advertised in every public room of the establishment? . . . But the next instant his resentment evaporated, when he remembered that he remained Mr. Hugh Morten in the managerial comprehension.

He lifted a finger; the boy swerved toward him, tendered a blue envelope, accepted a gratuity and departed.

It was a cable message; very probably an answer to his to Grace Pettit. Whitaker tore the envelope and unfolded the inclosure, glancing first at the signature to verify his surmise. As he did so, he heard his name a second time.

"Pardon me; this is Mr. Whitaker?"

A man stood beside the little table—one whom Whitaker had indifferently noticed on entering as an equally lonely lounger at another table.

Though he frowned involuntarily with annoyance, he couldn't well deny his identity.

"Yes," he said shortly, looking the man up and down with a captious eye.

Yet it was hard to find much fault with this invader of his preoccupation. He had the poise and the dress of a gentleman: dignity without aggressiveness, completeness without ostentation. He had a spare, not ungraceful body, a plain, dark face, a humorous mouth, steady eyes: a man easily forgotten or overlooked unless he willed it otherwise.

"My name is Ember," he said quietly. "If you'll permit me—my card." He offered a slip of pasteboard engraved with the name of Martin Ember. "And I'll sit down, because I want to talk to you for a few minutes."

Accordingly he sat down. Whitaker glanced at the card, and questioningly back at Mr. Ember's face.

"I don't know you, but . . . What are we to talk about, please?"

The man smiled, not unpleasingly.

"Mrs. Whitaker," he said.

"Mrs. Whitaker didn't send you to me? Then how— What the deuce—!"

"I happened to have a seat near your box at the theater tonight," Mr. Ember explained coolly. "From—what I saw there, I inferred that you must be—yourself. Afterwards I got hold of Max, confirmed my suspicion, and extracted your address from him."

"I see," said Whitaker, slowly. "Who the devil are you?" he demanded bluntly.

"I was," said the other slowly, "once, a private detective. Now—I'm a person of no particular employment, of independent means, with a penchant—you're at liberty to assume—for poking my nose into other people's business. Mrs. George Pettit once employed me to find her sister, Miss Mary Ladislas, who had run away with a chauffeur named Morton."

"Just a minute," said Whitaker suddenly—"by your leave—"

Ember bowed gravely. For a thought longer Whitaker's gaze bored into his eyes in vain effort to fathom what was going on behind them, the animus undiscovered by his words; then, remembering, he looked down at the cable message in his hand.

"Martin Ember (it ran) private agency 1435 Broadway, Grace Pettit."

Whitaker folded the paper and put it away in a pocket.

"Go on, please," he said quietly.

"In those days," Mr. Ember resumed, "I did such things indifferently well. I had little trouble in following the runaways from Southampton to Greenport. There they parted. He was wanted for theft in a former position, was arrested, convicted and sent to Sing Sing; where he presently died, I'm glad to say. . . . Miss Ladislas had registered at the Commercial house as Mrs. Morton. She was there, alone, under that name, for nearly a week before you registered as Hugh Morten, and in the space of a few hours married her, under your true name, and shipped her off to New York."

"Right," Whitaker agreed steadily. "And then—?"

"I traced her to the Hotel Belmont, where she stopped overnight, then lost her completely; and so reported to Mrs. Pettit. I came into a little money about that time, and gave up my business: gave it up, that is, as far as placing myself at the service of the public was concerned. After some time Mr. Drummond sought me out and begged me to renew my search for Mrs. Whitaker; you were dead, he told me; she was due to come into your estate—a comfortable living for an independent woman."

What do you think of this man Ember? Is he on the level, or is he a smart rascal who has evil designs on Whitaker?

We all of us give the farmers a mighty lot of advice, but the most of them don't mind it; sometimes there's a bit of it they can use.

BALBOA HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPAL

The most responsible educational position in Panama is held by Miss Jessie Daniels, principal of Balboa high school. All the students of the graded schools, except that at Gatun, come under her jurisdiction and she has proved herself to be a powerful link connecting those serving under the isthmian government with all they have left at home.

Miss Daniels is young for her responsible position and has a prepossessing personality, as well as executive ability. She first went to Panama to visit a sister who was married to one of the zone officials and, feeling a desire to teach, she took a position in the graded schools at Ancon, where she taught for a time before receiving her promotion. She is a daughter of Andrew Daniels of Canton, O., and was born in the city made famous as the residence of the martyred president, William McKinley. She received her education in the high schools at Canton and the Western Reserve university, graduating with honors to spare.

The new building for the Balboa high school is not yet completed, but when it is it will compare favorably with any in the States. It is being constructed of cement, the same as was used in the construction of the famous locks at Gatun and elsewhere along the Canal and will cost more than $200,000. It is of pure Spanish type, with a patio to be filled with rare plants and flowers, and into which everyone of the classrooms will open. Only children of American citizens are permitted to enjoy gratis the educational benefits of the school, but more than 200 students have enrolled in the new institution.

BETHMANN-HOLLWEG A GREAT WORKER

Bethmann-Hollweg, chancellor of of the German empire, is a prodigious worker. He has vigorous health and a tough, wiry body, and few men can spend more hours a day at a desk. At seven o'clock every morning he takes a ride of an hour in the park. Then follows the simple German breakfast, and the long day's work begins immediately after that.

But the day's work is with him a rather indefinite expression, according to a writer in the Century, for he often returns to it in the evening, and is sometimes kept at his desk till midnight. He is so absorbed in his work, and has withal so little liking for public functions and ceremonies, that his critics have sometimes seized upon this fact to blame him for being something of a recluse and showing himself too seldom in public. In fact, the chancellor has never utilized the spectacular possibilities of his position to advertise himself and thus strengthen his hold upon the people. He never even goes to theaters and concerts now, but he did allow himself before the war the occasional treat of a concert of good classical music.

At the general army headquarters in the west, where he has spent much of his time since the war began, in order to keep in close personal contact with the kaiser and the military authorities, his labors are less arduous.

TRIES TO RETURN TO WAR

© INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE

Having already lost a leg in the service of the allies, Lieut. Theodore Marburg, Jr., of Baltimore, son of the former American minister to Belgium, applied to the state department for a passport in order to return to his post as an officer of the Royal British aviation corps. His application was rejected on the ground that he had forfeited his American citizenship.

Lieutenant Marburg has been in this country since last April, when he returned to recuperate from his wounds, which were received while he was flying over the German lines in France. He was accompanied to this country by his bride, who was Baroness Giselle de Vavario of Belgium.

Young Marburg, who is twenty-two years of age, had met the baroness shortly before the outbreak of the war, while his father was still representing the United States at the court of King Albert. The young man had been at the front only a month when he was wounded. He was ordered into active service on November 9, and on January, 1915, was assigned to the Royal British aviation corps. At the time war was declared he was a student at Oxford university, England.

NEWVILLE

Mrs. D. D. Lumas is quite ill at this writing.

George Haines and wife, of near Auburn, motored to Newville, Sunday afternoon, and called on relatives.

There was a wood cutting for the Christian Church, Friday, at the home of Henry Webster. The ladies of the church prepared the dinner.

Rev. Hively, of Columbia City, has been hired for the Newville circuit. He delivered a fine sermon, Sunday evening.

Dale McNabb and wife left the first of the week for Norfolk, Va., where he has engaged employment. They visited Mrs. McNabb's sister, Mrs. Charley Lake and family, at Ft. Wayne, while enroute to their new home.

It was a mistake about little Robert Ames being dead. Dr. Shumaker, of Butler, was called the first of the week, and pronounced the disease, Infantile Paralysis. The family is now under quarantine and the child is recovering slowly.

The remains of Mrs. Georgie Gormly, who died at New Castle, Pa., was brought to Newville, last Thursday, for interment. On account of Grandma Dean not being able to go away from home the funeral services were held at the home of Mrs. John Whitherst, aunt of the deceased. Only a few of the relatives and neighbors were present owing to the short notice of the arrival of the funeral party. The bereaved husband accompanied the remains.

Since the dawn of civilization physical contests have been the sport of Kings, and today those contests include Foot-ball, Base-ball, Basket-ball, Tennis, Archery, Fencing, etc., and no up-to-date College, Church or Y. M. C. A. is complete without its gymnasium and one or more teams engaged in those sports. In our own little town we have two active teams, one in the High School and the other made up of local boys and both teams are making mighty creditable showings, the High School defeating Spencerville High School last Friday night in a sturdy contest. The score being 11 to 33 and the Independents taking a lively game from the Exendas (a Sunday School team belonging to the St. John's Reformed church athletic association) the score being 16 and 23, of which the Ft. Wayne Sentinel has the following to say:—Clipping.

"In a whirlwind game of clean basketball the St. Joe Independents counted up the long end of an 18 to 23 score against the Fort Wayne Exendas Friday night on the floor of the St. Joe men. A real scoring machine is the evenly balanced St. Joe team. Both teams played a good standard of basketball, the Extendes falling down only at the baskets and consequently at the game. The team work of both was good and it was nothing uncommon for one of the teams to pass the entire length of the floor, only to lose the ball under the basket and have it taken back. The management of the St. Joe team announced a game with the Butler city team at St. Joe next Friday night. The two aggregations are rivals and expect to fight some battle."

Now don't you think that clean sport, and to-night (Thursday) the local team clashes with the Butler five, and we trust that you can see your way clear to encourage them with your presence. They promise you a thrilling entertainment, and it is clean, straight sport well worth the approval of the most fastidious. Game will be called about 8 o'clock or immediately after Prayer Meeting. Doors open at 7 o'clock.

IF

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

Nov. 12—was Rally Day, Luther Day and World's Temperance Sunday all in one at the Lutheran Church at Spencerville. The program began at 9:15 a. m., with the Reveille and Salute of the Flag, and was a series of military tactics and patriotic songs. The usual thirty minutes was given to the study of the lesson. The Cradle Roll graduation exercises under the direction of Mrs. Simeon Maurer were very pretty—Lucile Miller, Esther Lake and Nellie Bachmann were promoted to the Primary Department and received their diplomas. The boys' chorus was especially good. The Supterintendent and Pastor gave short addresses. There were 148 on time—170 present and $5.90 offering. Considerable interest is being manifested in the attendance contest now on between two of the ladies' classes.

BARN DESIGNED FOR SMALL FARM

Liberal Use of Concrete in Its Foundation Assures Permanence.

HAS LARGE STORAGE SPACE

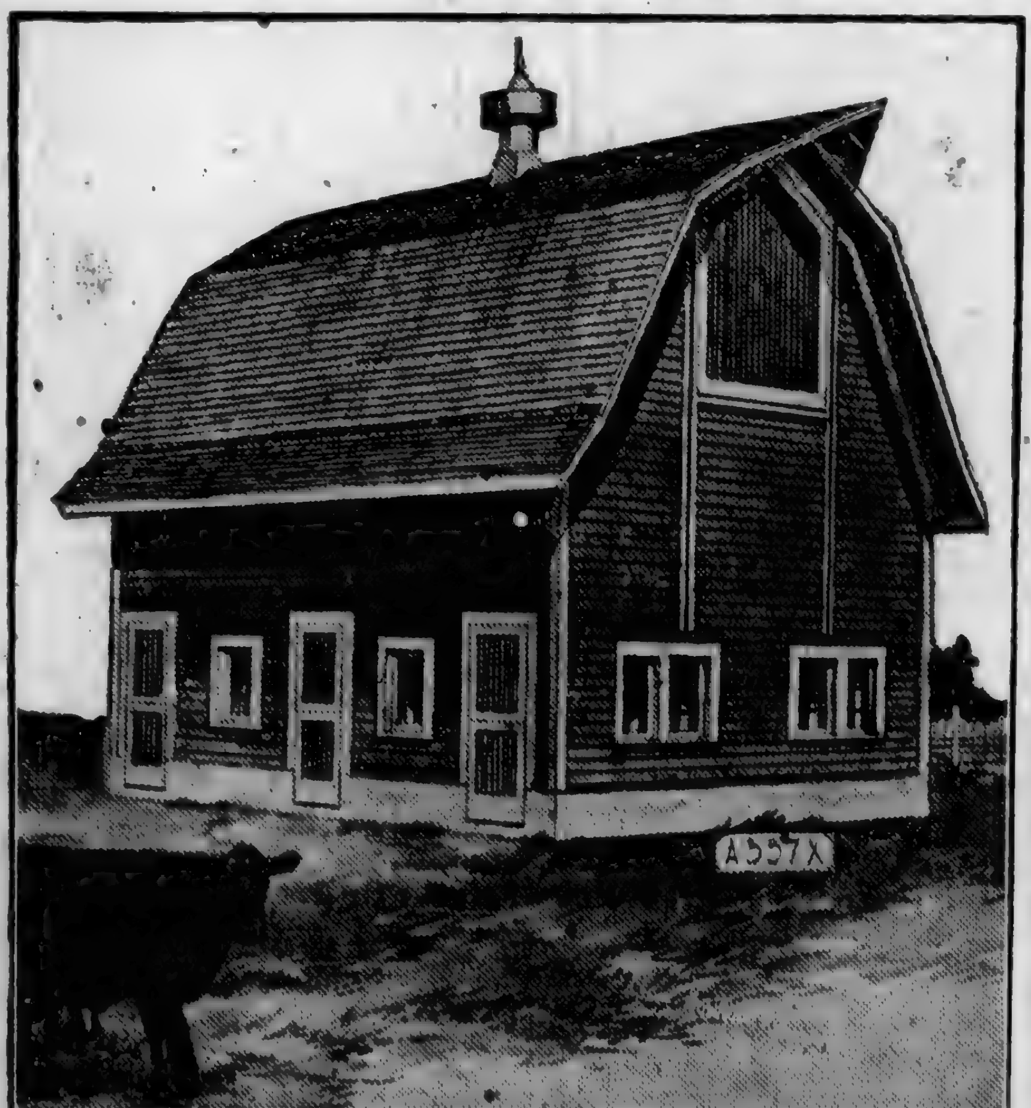
Self-Supporting Roof Helps to Provide for That Important Matter—Central Feed Alley Saves Much Work—Ample Provision for Ventilation.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

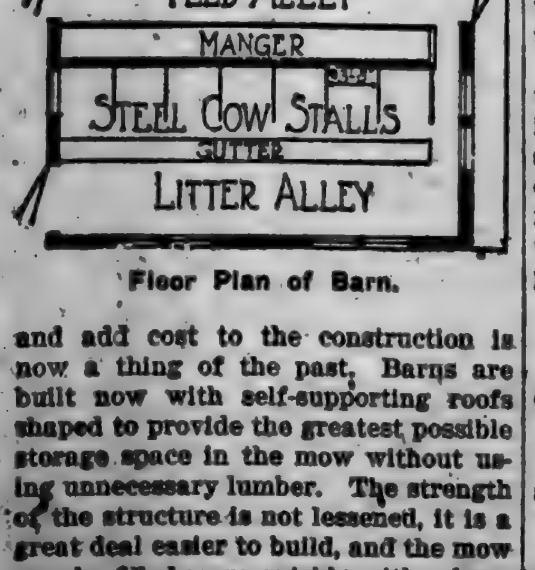
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

There is no reason why the small farm should not have buildings of as high quality as those of the larger farms. There is little saving realized in the long run when cheap, poorly-constructed buildings are placed on a farm of any size. Small buildings may be constructed with just as careful regard for the latest ideas in farm-building construction as the larger structures. In order that a barn shall follow the latest practice in farm-building design it must be provided with a large number of windows which will allow the sunlight to penetrate every corner, and there must be a system of scientific ventilation to insure the health of live stock kept in the barn and prevent the formation of conditions resulting in an increased fire risk.

The permanence of a barn is dependent very largely upon its foundation. When the structure is given a good coat of paint at regular intervals and no accident occurs which weakens it at any point, the only rapid deterioration which is likely to occur is the rotting of timbers kept moist by an improperly-constructed foundation system. Concrete has furnished one of the most useful of materials in building farm structures which do not rot along the sills. By carrying the concrete foundation walls up 18 inches or two feet above grade and bolting the sills to the top of these walls the moisture is kept away from the wood and rotting is prevented. In addition, the walls and floors may be made of concrete throughout, furnishing strong construction and making the barn very easy to keep clean.



The heavy timber construction of barns in which numerous braces and ties were placed across the haymow to interfere with the storage space and add cost to the construction is now a thing of the past. Barns are built now with self-supporting roofs shaped to provide the greatest possible storage space in the mow without using unnecessary lumber. The strength of the structure is not lessened, it is a great deal easier to build, and the mow may be filled more quickly with a larger quantity of material.



Floor Plan of Barn.

The barn shown in the illustrations is a substantial-looking farm barn of small size designed in accordance with most approved practice in farm-building architecture. It is 32 feet by 26 feet in size on the ground, and the roof reaches up high enough to make a good-sized mow over the stable.

The concrete foundation is built up above the level of the barnyard about 18 inches to protect the sills of the building from moisture. The sill of the wooden building is laid in soft concrete mortar on top of the foundation wall, and anchor bolts tie the sill firmly to the concrete.

The floor over the cow stable and horse stable is made in the usual way, except that the joists are tied together at the ends and spiked into the studding at the sides to tie the building together. The timbers are all light and are put together on the plank frame construction plan, so that the trussed crossties help materially in making a solid building.

The shape of the roof also strengthens the building, so that even though the timbers are light the structure is very strong.

There is one central feed alley, which serves the horses on one side and the cows on the other, a plan which saves a great many steps at feeding time.

Dutch doors are provided so that the upper parts of the doors may be left open for ventilation.

The horse stalls are made to use as double stalls when necessary. There is a door which makes the standing double stall into a box stall when this is an advantage. The box stall with the outside door is convenient for a mare and foal, since they can run out into the yard and come back to the stable at feeding time and at night. Box stalls are convenient in all barns where live stock is stabled.

An interesting feature of the plan is the hay door. It is made ten feet in width and is hung with weights like a window sash, so that it may be moved up or down and left in any position wanted. In summer time while the mow is being filled and for some time after, this door is pulled down to the full opening. Afterwards it may be partially closed until the hay is done sweating.

The weights move up and down in boxes at the sides of the studding. A raceway a little longer than the height of the door is necessary to allow for the stretch of the cord.

Gambrel roofs are becoming quite common in different parts of the country. People are becoming accustomed to them and are, in fact, beginning to like their appearance. Their main advantage, however, is in the strength of the roof truss which may be used in their construction, assuring a solid building, while at the same time there is furnished large mow room in proportion to the amount of material in the roof, and the free space is not interfered with by braces or cross timbers.

The strength comes from the number, shape and construction of the trusses. Each pair of rafters forms a truss which reaches from one sill to the other. The roof boards are firmly nailed to the trussed rafters, so that the whole roof is as strong as if it were in one piece. It is strongly recommended that the roof boards shall be placed close together so all shingle nails are usually zinc-coated and should be long enough to reach clear through. Good shingles put on in this way will last a great many years.

Warm and foul air is expelled from the building by a single large ventilator placed in the center of the roof.

A small barn built in the substantial manner called for by this design is not only far better-appearing than a cheaper structure, but when it has once been properly constructed it is ready for a long period of use, during which time the money spent for repairs will be practically nothing.

Knowing Him Like a Book.

"He has a title?" remarked Miss Cayenne inquiringly.

"Yes," replied the young woman.

"Have you learned all about his personal history?"

"I don't think I have."

"Well, I should advise you to do so. In my reading I have found that a very charming title may go with a highly unsatisfactory story."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 26

A LIVING SACRIFICE.

LESSON TEXT—Romans 12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your spiritual service.—Rom. 12:1 R. V.

The first 11 chapters of this letter teach and illustrate the great principles of the Christian life. Paul calls it "my Gospel." Its fundamental principle is that justification regenerates men, and nothing else. The second section is the practical application of these truths.

I. The Exhortation to Gratitude (vv. 1-2). "Therefore," because of the work of Christ on our behalf, we are to present our bodies as living sacrifices unto God, to be used for his glory and service. (See chapter 6:13, 16, 19). Paul urges, he beseeches; he is winsome, though he might command. To "present" technically means, "bring an offering to God." The body is the sum of all human faculties, physical and spiritual. It must not be defiled by being yielded as an instrument to sin, for it is the temple of God. (I Cor. 3:16, 17). A "Living Offering," (not as the bodies of slain animals offered by Jews) is a consecration of the body, and not a destruction of life. The original means that this—the offering of ourselves as a living sacrifice—is a reasonable, rational service. God has the right of ownership of every member of our body, and there never was a day when there was greater need of insisting upon a Christianity that affects the bodies of men than today. Hands, lips, ears, eyes—every member should be constantly presented to him who purchased it by the blood of his own Son. (I Cor. 6:20; I Pet. 1:18-19.) This is a spiritual, religious service because it is our spirit which presents the offering of the body which he inhabits. Too many of us are "fashioned according to this age."

II. The Expression of Gratitude (vv. 3-8). Or the right use of the gifts of God. (1) Avoid "self-conceit" (vv. 3-5). These verses indicate how important this subject is. Conceit is entertaining an exaggerated opinion of one's own ability. The church has many members, and they do not all have the same office; there is a variety in the unity of the body. So in the church there are many "members in one body," each of which is important; all are essential. (2) "Prophecy" (v. 6), not necessarily foretelling, but the revelation of spiritual truth and experience according to the proportion of our faith (Ps. 39:3), the living, spiritual experience of the presence of God within us. (3) "Ministry" (v. 7). The business side of the church, collecting of its money and the distribution to the poor. Some can best attend to such business. Many churches fail by not selecting wise leaders for this work. (4) "He that teacheth." The true pastor is a combined prophet, pastor and teacher. We are all teaching, whether we wish to or not. It is a privilege as well as an obligation.

III. Conduct Toward All Men (vv. 9-21). The renewed soul needs guidance, encouragement and instruction. (1) "In love" (v. 9). The hypocrite wears a mask. Notice the close connection of "abhor that which is evil" with "cleave to that which is good." The word for cleave means literally to glue it, so that nothing can separate you from love which is the supreme good. "In honor preferring one another" (v. 10). Let others carry the banner—few of us can stand this acid test. (3) "Diligent in business" (v. 11). Whatsoever your hands find to do, do it with your might, being fervent or boiling in spirit, the reverse of the previous exhortation, in that which we are thus to serve the Lord. Few need exhortation to be diligent in their own business, but all of us need this exhortation with regard to the "king's business." (4) "Rejoicing in hope (v. 12). Triumphing over trials and difficulties in the way. Looking for that "blessed hope" (Titus 2:13). (5) Patience and tribulation (v. 12). The Latin "tribulum" was the threshing instrument or roller whereby the husbandman separated grain from the husk. Sorrow, distress and adversity are the means for separating men from the chaff of their lives. Sometimes small annoyances, long continued, become great tribulations. (See Joshua 24:12.) (6) Continuing in the school of prayer (v. 12). Steadfast, urgent, pressing, persevering prayer (Luke 12:1). (7) "Given to hospitality" (v. 13); literally, pursued it.

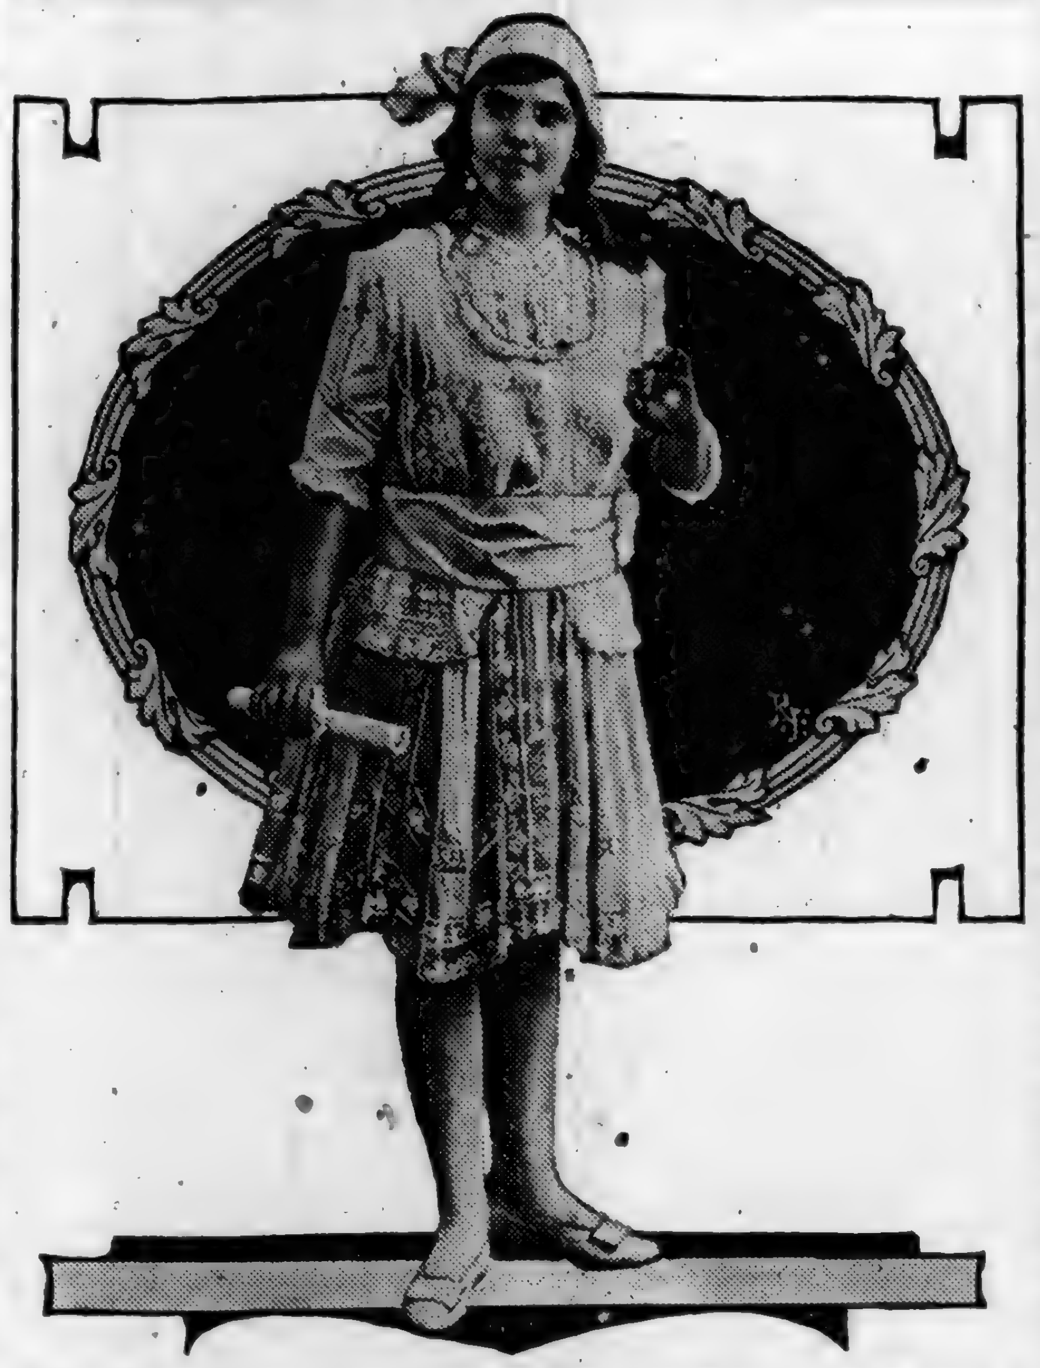
The word "condescend" is not strong enough—it should be literally "Borne away" from the living things along the line of the things that are humble.

(8) Living peaceably with all men (v. 18); being ready for peace and to do more than your share of reconciliation.

(9) Overcoming evil with good (vv. 19-21). The heaping of coals upon the enemy's head is not the object but the result of returning good for evil. (See Proverbs 25:21-22.)

The only real victory is, "Be not overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good."

Approved Modes in Girls' Party Frocks



When Father Time comes along with a birthday to celebrate, or a dancing-school party, or other great occasions in the life of a little girl, it means a pretty frock for her. Even in party dresses there is a difference of opinion as to whether they should be simply or elaborately made, but as the little girl is sure to look pretty in either sort, fashion smiles approval on both.

White, pink, blue, pale green and light yellow are oftenest selected for the little girl's party frock, with white a favorite choice. Voile, batiste, organdie, and taffeta are the materials used for making them. Some of the prettiest light voiles are made up with no other decoration than tucks headed with hemstitching, and smacking about the waist and yoke. This is done in heavy white silk. Taffeta is managed with about the same simplicity, but organdie and batiste seem to be made for fine swiss embroideries and val. lace.

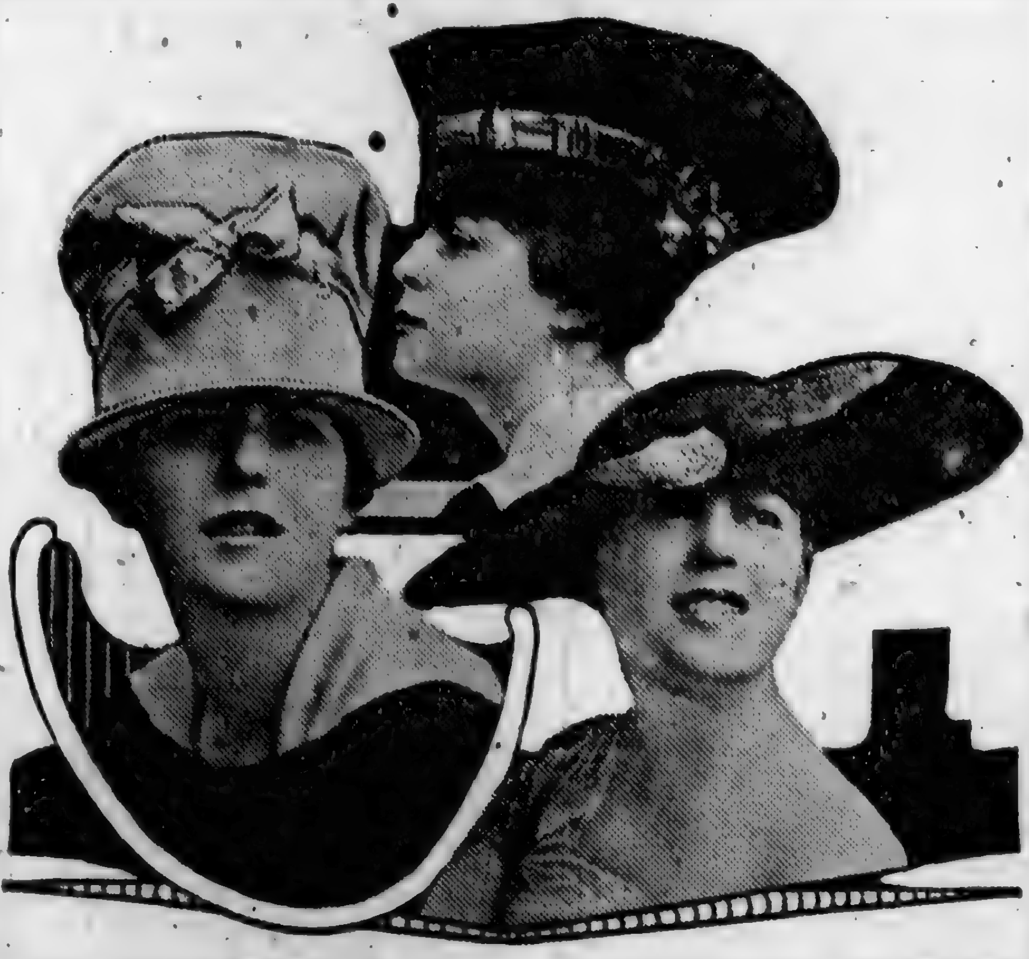
An elaborate dress of white batiste, for the girl of eleven, or more, is shown in the picture. The waist shows rows of insertion placed between groups of fine tucks. It is attached to the skirt and has elbow sleeves. The skirt is divided into panels by wide vertical insertions, and each panel is cut into a scallop at the bottom. Two rows of narrow insertion follow the line of the scallops about the skirt, and each panel is laid in a boxplait at the waistline.

The slipover is not needed to complete this dress, which may be worn without it; but the slipover is a feature of present-day fashions. Besides, a dress of this kind is equal to long service and it may be varied by the addition of the little jacket. Embroidered batiste is used for making it, with insertions of lace and swiss embroidery, and it boasts a peplum at each side. The girdle worn over it is soft satin ribbon with a rosette at one side.

Oriental Motifs.

Embroidery is the most favored decorative trim for one-piece frocks, and it is executed in fine braids, in metallic threads, chenille and beads, either round beads or those of tubular form. Oriental and Egyptian motifs are preferred and they ornament the corsage, the ceinture and the pocket flaps. Occasionally the design extends from the bodice down over the front breadth of the skirt, giving the effect of a Louis XV waistcoat.

Three Hats From Paris



They say that designing for Americans occupies the time—so far as it is occupied—of the world-famous modistes of Paris. Judging from the number of imports, and that the Americans who look to Paris are those of two hemispheres, the designers seem to be fairly busy. In spite of the tension of war there seems to be no lack of inspiration in the products of the peculiar genius of the French.

Three hats from Lewis shown here are beautiful and rational styles for midwinter wear. Already the eyes of those who create styles are turned toward spring and they are busy with the things that must be ready for display just after the holidays, so the hats pictured may be accepted as the last word from a great authority.

The wide brimmed hat of satin, faced with velvet, is partly turned off the face at the front, in a mode already approved. Its lines suggest outspread wings, and perhaps this is the reason why a small pair, embroidered in silk in several colors, is posed at the front. There is no other trimming.

The second hat is a turban in a shape that is particularly becoming to women of middle age. A puff of velvet is set about the coronet, higher at the back than at the front. A band of paillettes and bugles, finished at the side with two balls, adds a touch of brilliance to this all-black creation.

The remaining hat is for the woman who can carry off odd and dashing headwear, and it continues to be both unusual and plain. The very tall crown is draped with velvet, which is slashed. Ribbon with metallic edge is threaded through the slashes.

Julia Bottomley

Cretonne Covers.

Scarfs of cretonne are neat and especially attractive for a girl's room. The pincushion and nap pillow should be covered to match. A scarf made to fit the top of the dresser should be scalloped all around, but one that hangs at the sides need have only the ends scalloped, the sides being hemmed. Rather heavy embroidery floss should be used for working the scallops. The heavy floss not only facilitates the work but is more in harmony with the material than a fine cotton would be.

Bright Waistcoats With Velvet Suits.

Some of the dark velvet suits sent out by Jeanne Lanvin in her last collection have waistcoats of bright-colored silks, geranium or royal blue, and to match these are hats of the same silk.

"I DON'T SUFFER ANY MORE"

"Feel Like a New Person," says Mrs. Hamilton.

New Castle, Ind.—"From the time I was eleven years old until I was seventeen I suffered each month so I had to be in bed. I had headache, backache and such pains I would cramp double every month. I did not know what it was to be easy a minute. My health was all run down and the doctors did not do me any good. A neighbor told my mother about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took it, and now I feel like a new person. I don't suffer any more and I am regular every month."—Mrs. HAZEL HAMILTON, 822 South 15th St.

When a remedy has lived for forty years, steadily growing in popularity and influence, and thousands upon thousands of women declare they owe their health to it, is it not reasonable to believe that it is an article of great merit?

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

MORE THAN SHE COULD STAND

Mrs. De Graw, After Short Interview With Maggie, Is Again Advertising for a Maid.

Mrs. De Graw is minus a maid again. It happened this way:

"Maggie, I think you had better wash the windows today, before we put up the new white curtains."

"I don't wash windows for nobody, mum. I don't wash my own windows at hum, and I certainly won't wash yours."

"But washing windows is just as much a part of housework as washing floors, Maggie."

"I don't wash floors, either."

The door bell rang. Maggie stood still.

"Why don't you go to the door, Maggie?"

"Go to the door yourself. You look better than I do."

"Maggie, do as your told."

"Not when I ain't dressed up, mum. And while we're talkin' frank, let me tell you that I don't like the way this house is managed. Not a bit!"

"Then, my dear young woman, you trot up stairs and pack your trunk, and get out of here as fast as you can. I didn't hire you to be the lady of the house."

(Exit Maggie in a great rage.)

COULD TRUST HIS MEMORY

Mr. Wanamaker Able to Turn at Once to Any Book on His Miles of Shelves.

A couple of weeks ago John Wanamaker did something which he said he had not done before in his 55 years' experience as a merchant. He opened his store on Sunday. That will interest you even less than something else which Mr. Wanamaker did that afternoon and which was told me by one of the dozen persons who were present, writes "Girard" in the Philadelphia Public Ledger. There had been a dinner for a party of distinguished Japanese visitors, and Mr. Wanamaker volunteered to show the oriental gentlemen the inside of his store.

Before departing from the big granite building Mr. Wanamaker said to the chief guest:

"Baron, there is a book here I wish you to have."

Naming another book, Mr. Wanamaker walked to another case and got it. Then he proceeded to present to each gentleman present a volume or two, in each instance naming what he intended to give before he went to a bookshelf to get it. Which feat of memory caused my informant to remark when he related the incident to me:

"I have seen John Wanamaker do a great many extraordinary things in 40 years, but his ability to pick here and there a book out of many thousands amazed me the most."

Temperance Notes

VAMPIRE TRADE.

The following quotation is from a speech delivered at a business man's meeting in Liverpool, England, by Mr. Alfred Booth, head of the Cunard Steamship company. The American citizen who advocates "preparedness"—for peace or for war—will do well to ponder these things:

"The most glaring example of a form of consumption which we could perfectly well dispense with is the drink traffic. I am not thinking now of the temperance side of the question. Important though that is, we have got far beyond that now. I am thinking of the demand which the trade makes upon the services of our ships, our railways and carts, and of our labor. Thirty thousand tons a week of barley and other products are brought into this country for the brewing and distilling trades! Think of the demand which this makes on the depleted resources of our mercantile marine. Then all this stuff, together with the larger quantity which is grown at home, has to be carted and hauled by rail to the brewery or distillery. Then it has to be brought back again and distributed to the consumer. In addition to this, 6,000 miners are kept permanently employed in getting coal, and 36,000 tons of coal to be sent every week to these breweries and distilleries. Taken in the aggregate, the services absorbed by this trade are on a gigantic scale, and the net result of it all is a decrease in national efficiency. I say in all seriousness that, if we are to maintain our armies in the field, we shall before long have to choose between bread and beer."

SENSIBLE ARGUMENT.

This from the Daily Oklahoman:

"The ardent prohibitionists make extravagant claims for their policy, with which it is not necessary to agree. But if anybody can produce one sensible argument in behalf of the saloon, he can get rich a good deal quicker than Mr. Wallingford. The brewers will besprinkle him with diamonds and the distillers will upholster his purse with million-dollar bills.

"The silence remains unbroken. It can't be done. There simply isn't a word to say for the saloons. How they managed to hold on as long as they have is one of the mysteries. It is also one of the most serious reflections upon our capacity for self-government.

"Posterity is going to have a good deal to wonder about. Among the follies of the fathers will stand the saloon."

SHORTAGE IN COLORADO.

The state penitentiary of Colorado is threatened with a shortage of occupants unless something is done at once to stop the ravages of prohibition. For a period of approximately ten weeks this year, from May 1 to July 14, the penitentiary received but 44 prisoners, less than one-third of the 137 prisoners which were sentenced during the same period of 1915. During July of last year 83 prisoners were admitted to the penitentiary. Up to July 18 of this year only one lonely victim was received. "That," says Warden Tom Tynan, "the story of Prohibition in Colorado given in a nutshell."

Poor Colorado! Here is a chance for Tom Gilmore to fly to her relief with some of the latest brewery-distilled manufactured "facts."—Louis Albert Banks.

WHY A NUISANCE?

Why is a slaughter house a nuisance? Because its noisome odors cannot be confined to the land on which it is situated.

And who has a right to complain of a slaughter house? Everyone has a right to complain as soon as the odors of the slaughter house reach him.

And why is a saloon a nuisance? Because its evil influences cannot be confined to the block in which it is located or to the city which licenses it to do business.

And who has a right to complain of a saloon? Everyone who lives within the radius of its evil influence—everyone who suffers from the use of the liquor which he sells.—William Jennings Bryan.

TOLL OF THE BREWERY.

Such horrors as a great modern joint-stock brewery perpetrates are unrivaled in the whole world's history. Men in past centuries were made chattel slaves. But the slaves kept their health. Men have been killed by thousands; but the children of the murdered remained living. Now they make slaves of them and murder them at the same time. They kill them together with their children and children's children. They kill them slowly; they torture them slowly to death.

LARGE REDUCTION.

According to the official report of the internal revenue department, the number of barrels of beer sold in the United States during the first ten months of the present fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1915, have decreased 2,226,670 barrels, as compared with the first ten months of the previous year.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

MODERN CHICKENS.

"Some Chickens were talking the other day and Boasting for all they were worth," said Daddy.

"What about?" asked Nancy.

"Yes," chimed in Nick, "I don't think Chickens have much to Boast about."

"Well," said Daddy, "you will be Surprised when you hear how much they did have to Boast about.

"'It's very fine to be Modern,' said one little Yellow Chicken.

"'Whatever do you mean by Modern?' asked a small White Chicken.

"'I mean,' continued the little Yellow Chicken, 'to be Modern is to be Up-to-Date, Right up to the Time, and to know everything that is going on at once.'

"'Oh, oh, oh,' Cackled the small White Chicken. 'I know just Who you are thinking of—and just What you are thinking of too.'

"'You don't,' said the Yellow Chicken Crossly.

"'I do,' said the White Chicken. And they began to Quarrel. Soon their Mother came along to the Corner of the Chicken House where they were Playing, for they felt the Cold too much to go out on the first sharp days.

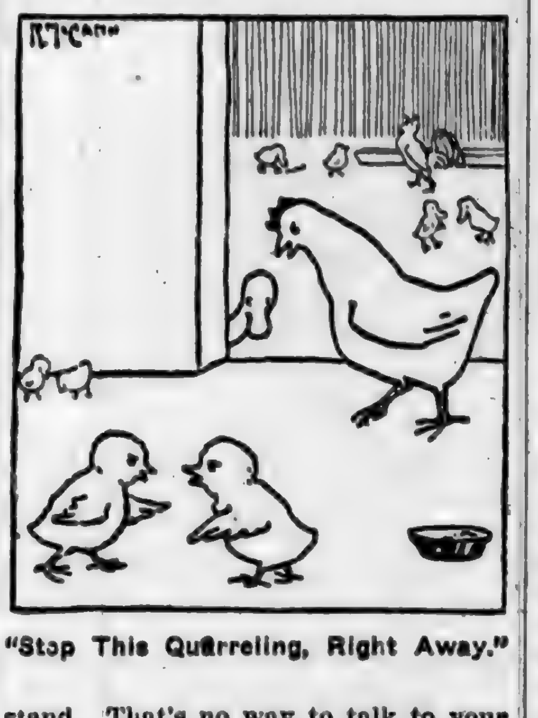
"'Children, Children,' she called out in horror. 'Stop this Quarreling right away! What an Example for my Chickens to set to the other Chickens. And whatever are you Quarreling about?'

"'I said,' came from the White Chicken, 'that I Understood what he meant and it made him Angry.'

"'Don't you want to be Understood?' asked the Mother Hen Laughing in her funny Cackling way. 'Most Folks and Animals are forever trying to make themselves Understood.'

"'You don't Understand, Mother,' said the Yellow Chicken.

"'There you go! The idea of telling your Mother she doesn't Understand. That's no way to talk to your Elders. No way at all. Tell me at once just what you Mean.'



"Stop This Quarreling, Right Away."

"The Yellow Chicken was Frightened by his Mother's Cross Tones, and so began at once: 'You see,' he said, 'I begun by saying I thought it was fine to be Modern, and Whitey asked me what it Meant to be Modern. Then when I began to Explain he said he knew at once what I meant.'

"'So I did,' chimed in Whitey. 'You meant an Alarm clock—something that wakes up on time like old Father Rooster.'

"'Seems to me that's a pretty good Guess,' cackled Mrs. Hen.

"'But it wasn't what I Meant,' said the Yellow Chicken almost in Sobs.

"'Hurry, hurry, hurry, and tell us what you Meant!' said the Mother Hen.

"'I Meant that it was very Modern for us to have Telephones in the Chicken House so the Farmer can Telephone to the Barn and to the Stable and to the big House and to the Tool House. Every one of those places have Telephones. I heard the silly little Bell Ring in each one when I went to find out. And I heard the Farmer say to a friend of his, "Well, we must be Modern you know and it's a very great Convenience to have a Telephone." So then I knew a Telephone was Modern! See? But what I don't quite know,' he ended sadly, 'is what he Meant by Convenience.'

"'I know,' said Whitey.

"'What?' asked the Yellow Chicken excitedly.

"'He Meant it was Useful! There! I do know something even if I thought you Meant Father Rooster was the Modern Object you were talking about.'

"'Who called me an Object?' came from Father Rooster who Walked in the Chicken House at just that moment.

"'I said you were an Alarm Clock and very Modern,' said the White Chicken.

"'And so I am, my dear,' said Father Rooster Crowing delightedly. 'I will give you a nice little Worm for that.' And Father Rooster gave the White Chicken the finest Worm he had been able to get that day.

"'Ding-a-ling-ding-a-ling,' sounded a little Bell.

"'There!' said the Yellow Chicken, 'I said the Telephone was Modern.'

"'So it is,' said Father Rooster, 'and I will give you a Worm too for being so Wise. But for my part I don't see any more use to a Telephone than I do to a Motor Car. They may be Modern, but they're of no use to me!'"

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Have You Rheumatism, Kidney, Liver or Bladder Trouble?

Pain or dull ache in the back is often evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

Danger Signals.

If these danger signals are unheeded more serious results may be expected; kidney trouble in its worst form may steal upon you.

Thousands of people have testified that the mild and immediate effect of Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized—that it stands the highest for its remarkable curative effect in the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine, you should have the best.

Lame Back.

Lame back is only one of many symptoms of kidney trouble. Other symptoms showing that you may need Swamp-Root are, being subject to embarrassing and frequent bladder troubles day and night, irritation, sediment, etc.

Lack of control, smarting, uric acid, dizziness, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervousness, sometimes the heart acts badly, rheumatism, bloating, lack of ambition, may be loss of flesh, sallow complexion.

Prevalency of Kidney Disease.

Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalency of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are among the most common diseases that prevail, they are sometimes the last recognized by patients, who very often content themselves with doctoring the effects, while the original disease may constantly undermine the system.

Regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at all drug stores.

The More Effective Way.

The sign, "Boy Wanted," is more frequent, in windows and in advertisement columns, than it was a year ago. Between improved economic conditions and laws enforcing school attendance, it has come to pass, in the United States, that few lads who want work need go unemployed. On the other hand, never were school and colleges so crowded, and administrators so put to it to find room for pupils of high school and college age. In this way, far more effectively than by specific statutory enactment, is child labor being reduced.—Christian Science Monitor.

OF INTEREST TO MOTHERS

The cost of food today is a serious matter to all of you. To cut down your food bills and at the same time improve the health of your family, serve them Skinner's Macaroni and Spaghetti two or three times per week. Children love it and thrive on it. It is the best possible food for adults. Write the Skinner Mfg. Co., Omaha, Nebr., for beautiful cook book telling how to serve it in a hundred ways. It's free to every mother.—Adv.

Bill Knew.

It was on an ocean liner, and the stewards were being drilled in waiting at table. In the course of the drill they lined up outside the saloon with empty dishes (supposed to contain curry and rice), and, on a bell being rung, marched to their respective tables and proffered the dish to each seat, containing an imaginary diner.

The eagle eye of the chief noticed that one steward (a cockney named Bill) deliberately passed one of the seats without proffering the dish. He strode up to the table, and his manner betokened trouble for Bill.

"Ho! you! What do you mean by missing this seat?"

"Oh, that's all right, sir," replied Bill, not a bit put out; "that gent don't take curry!"—Tit-Bits.

DEAD ON HIS FEET

Kidney Disorder

(By DR. V. M. PIERCE.)

The most simple methods are usually the most effective ones when treating any disorder of the human system. The mere drinking a cup of hot water each morning, plenty of pure water all day, and a little Anuric before every meal has been found the most effective means of overcoming kidney trouble. Death would occur if the kidneys did not work day and night in separating poisons and uric acid from the blood.

The danger signals are backache, depressions, pains, heaviness, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, chilliness, rheumatic twinges, swollen joints or gout.

Since it is such a simple matter to step into your favorite drug store and obtain Anuric, anyone who earnestly desires to regain health and new life will waste no time in beginning this treatment.

INDIANA FOLKS SHOULD TAKE THIS ADVICE.

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"For a number of years I have suffered with kidney trouble, especially after retiring at night. I had taken several advertised kidney medicines, but with little or no results, then I heard of Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets, and knowing by experience how good Dr. Pierce's other remedies were I decided to give this new remedy a trial. The first bottle cleared all sediment from the urine, relieved the bladder so that I could rest at night and took the rheumatism and stiffness from my hands and fingers. I feel amply repaid, and hope my testimonial will help someone else to try it, too."—MRS. PEMILA TOMKINSON, 815 Cottage Ave.

school as used in his church were explained. Text books on different subjects were used, those that would in any way help one to understand the Scriptures, from different standpoints.

He recommends the adoption of this method in the rural communities, for there they are just as essential as elsewhere, for a clearer, more comprehensive understanding of the Bible. The differences between the day school teacher and the Sunday School teacher is merely that of training. No one would think of employing an untrained teacher in the public schools; "Why should they do so in the Sunday School?"

A general discussion and chance for the inquisitive followed the address of Rev. Tomes, which brought forth some spirited talks. The following resolutions were then read and adopted.

The committee on resolutions beg lief to submit the following:

Whereas we appreciate the interest and work done for the Rural Church by the Purdue University in sending into our midst such capable workers for our helpfulness:—

Therefore be it resolved that we assembled in session signify the same by a rising vote.

Also, that we seek to continue this Rural Church Work by annual Convention, and endeavor to impress upon the ministers and laity of this congressional district the great opportunity and the urgent need of their attendance upon such conventions, that the highest church efficiency may be realized.

Signed { A. K. Mumma
W. S. Oberholtzer
F. E. Johnson

Miscellaneous business followed. What were intended for five minute addresses were in order, and advantage taken by a number some whom, being filled with enthusiasm for some ideas advanced spoke over the alotted time. One person, whose name we did not learn, stated that in his opinion better leaders were the solution of the problem of lack of church attendance, that we cannot expect a minister of average mental attainments to have a hold upon the people who are doing church work. The country demands quality as well as the city, if this is not offered people will go where they can find it. As an answer to this, Rev. Oakel Hall arose to state that it was just for that reason they were advocating the adoption of these same community training courses, that through this means they were best enabled to get these leaders. To get quality we will have to have a good quality of training.

Glando Did It.

Interesting Statement Given by Paulding Man.

Mr. C. A. Hughes, of Paulding, Ohio, said: "I had suffered so much from backache and kidney trouble that I was hardly able to drag around. After taking one treatment of Glando Tonic I was so improved that I took another treatment to make it a cure. I am now a well man and can heartily recommend Glando Tonic to all suffering from backache or kidney trouble."

A sluggish glandular system is responsible for most serious illnesses. Such a condition should not be neglected. The wonderful cures affected by Glando, the Great Gland Tonic, is due to the fact that it acts directly upon the glandular system. The three treatments which each package contains being necessary to effect a cure. Treatment No. One starts glandular activity. Treatment No. Two throws off the accumulated poisons and prepares the system for a tonic. Treatment No. Three is a splendid tonic that builds up the entire system. For sale by All Druggists.

SEASON OF JOY

"When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock."

TURKEY AN "IDJUT"

At Least That Is the Opinion Farmer Has of the Great American Bird.

HOUSEWIVES contemplating the annual Thanksgiving dinner little realize the months of preparation which preceded the feast. Their cranberries are on the market. Turkeys, dressed and ready for the oven; huge yellow pumpkins, with the earth still clinging to their gaudy sides; oranges, apples, grapes and nuts all await the call of the epicure.

A trip to a market gives the layman an insight into the real business of Thanksgiving, and incidentally a quantity of rural folk lore which is illuminating. Wandering around the wagons which line the sidewalks of the market space, a reporter the other day came upon an old resident of Virginia—a man with whiskers and a magnificent quid of tobacco and a small supply of turkeys, the last named alive and protesting vigorously against the confinement of their crates.

After a little preliminary conversation the old farmer dilated upon the ways of the great American fete bird and in his conversation knocked the pedestal upon which the fowl is placed squarely from under its feet.

"Biggest fool bird in the world," he confided to the reporter. "They ain't nothin' in the world that I've ever found that's as big an idjut as a turkey."

"In what way?" was asked.

"In every way," replied the farmer. "I believe that the words 'not sense enough to come in out of the rain' was written to describe a turkey. Did you ever know, for instance, that a turkey can drown itself during a rainstorm?"

"What!" ejaculated the reporter.

"Fact," said the farmer. "Them there birds hold up their heads during a rainstorm exactly as if they was trying to swallow the whole creation. Naturally, they can't drink the entire output. And I tell you as a fact, that I've found cases where they managed to drown themselves."

Continuing on the peculiarities of the bird, the old man said:

"They're helpless critters, too. Ain't got as much gumption about them as a chicken. And frail—let me tell you, young man, that a turkey is the greatest natural-born invalid in the world. They have to be watched every minute or the first thing you know they'll up and die on you without a second's warning.

"I been raisin' turkeys for years and years—had good luck with 'em, too. But I reckon I don't understand more than half about them. Nobody does—particularly why the Creator, when he made 'em, didn't give 'em minds."

"Does that apply to wild turkeys as well as the tame ones?" asked the reporter.

The old man spat thoughtfully and profusely at a chip of wood in the street. He hit the mark.

"As to that," he said, "I can't exactly say. "Mebbe there's something in the idea that a turkey, when he's tame, gets so used to havin' folks make a fuss over him that he jest naturally loses all his ambition. There's one thing certain—if every wild turkey was as big a fool as some that I've raised there wouldn't be a live wild turkey in the United States within a year."—Washington Star.

Cranberry Industry.

Study of the cranberry industry by government specialists has shown it to be confined practically to three states: Massachusetts, New Jersey and Wisconsin. Of the total crop, Massachusetts produces in an average year about 800,000, New Jersey 150,000, and Wisconsin 75,000 barrels. The industry is gradually extending to Minnesota, Michigan and Oregon, where marshes and climatic conditions are favorable.

Thanksgiving Meeting.

The second meeting in the new year's work of the W. C. T. U., was held Friday afternoon at the home of the president, Mrs. Jennie Seohler, who called the meeting promptly. The opening song was "There will Dawn a Golden Morrow"; Mrs. Emma Bishop led the devotional by reading the first seventeen verses of the 8th. chapter of Romans, with prayer by Mrs. Alice Warner. The topic being "Thanksgiving" the program all the way through touched upon that subject. Mrs. Mary Buchanan read a story, "An Uninvited Guest" which was very good; Mrs. Retta Hathaway sang a beautiful solo, "My Jesus as Thou Wilt". A leaflet was read by Mrs. Lora Leighty called "Lenora Burnham's Thank Offering" which brought out the fact that we have many things to be thankful for if we only counted them over. Mrs. Rose Widney gave a very interesting talk about her recent trip through the East. She said, the temperance work was very weak there; that they thought nothing of serving wine in a social way just as the people here serve lemonade; that the custom gave her quite a shock. Her talk was very interesting all the way through as was the discussion which followed. She also said, there was a large field for Temperance workers through the East. The secretary's report and roll call to which fourteen members responded with quotations and current events on Thanksgiving. One new member, Mrs. Amanda Spayd, was added to the roll. Mrs. Spayd transferring her membership from the Hamilton Union. After a brief business session, Mrs. Spayd dismissed the meeting with prayer.

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

CAN YOU SOLVE LOVE'S PUZZLE?

What is love, anyhow? Is it, in the case of husband and wife, respect and admiration of certain spiritual qualities? Or, in your experience, is it pure physical attraction between a certain man and a certain woman—with respect and admiration as side lights?

Do you believe that an intelligent woman would love enough to live with him, the man who years previously had married her just to save her good name as a girl and then had disappeared? That is the problem confronting Sara Law, the great actress, in "The Destroying Angel."

Hugh Whitaker, you remember, was given just six months to live, by eminent surgeons. He discovered a decent young woman in trouble—her honor at stake. "One good deed before I go," he said; "I'll marry this frightened child, and give her my respectable name. Then I'll go off somewhere and wait for the end." This he did—and five years later turned up in New York from Australia, prosperous and healthy, and started a hunt for the girl-wife of other days.

He discovers her in Sara Law, and mutual recognition across the footlights stops a play. Martin Ember, former detective, comes to Whitaker and tells amazing facts. A big mystery looms in this installment.

"And you found her and told Drummond—?"

Whitaker leaned over the table, studying the man's face with intense interest.

"No—and yes. I found Mrs. Whitaker. I didn't report to Drummond."

"But why—in heaven's name?"

Ember smiled somberly at the drooping ash of his cigar. "There were several reasons. In the first place I didn't have to: I had asked no retainer from Drummond, and I rendered no bill: what I had found out was mine, to keep or to sell, as I chose. I chose not to sell because—well, because Mrs. Whitaker begged me not to."

"Ah!" Whitaker breathed, sitting back. "Why?"

"This was all of a year, I think, after your marriage. Mrs. Whitaker had tasted the sweets of independence and—got the habit. She had adopted a profession looked upon with abhorrence by her family. She was already successful in a small way, had little need of the money she would get as claimant of your estate. She enlisted my sympathy, and—I held my tongue."

"That was decent of you."

The man bowed a quiet acknowledgment. "I thought you'd think so. . . . There was a third reason."

He paused, until Whitaker encouraged him with a "Yes—?"

"Mr. Whitaker"—the query came point-blank—"do you love your wife?"

Whitaker caught his breath. "What right—!" he began, and checked abruptly. The blood darkened his lean cheeks.

"Mrs. Whitaker gave me to understand that you didn't. It wasn't hard to perceive, everything considered, that your motive was pure chivalry—quixotism. I should like to go to my grave with anything half as honorable and unselfish to my credit."

"I beg your pardon," Whitaker muttered thickly.

"You don't, then?"

"Love her? No."

There was a slight pause. Then, "I do," said this extraordinary man, meeting Whitaker's gaze openly. "I do," he repeated, flushing in his turn, "but . . . hopelessly . . . However, that was the third reason," he pursued in a more level voice—"I thought you ought to know about it—that induced me to keep Sara Law's secret. . . . I loved her from the day I found her. She has never looked twice at me. . . . But that's why I never lost interest."

"You mean," Whitaker took him up diffidently—"you continued to—ah—?"

"Court her—as we say? No." Ember's shoulders, lifting, emphasized the disclaimer. "I'm no fool. I have had the sense not to invite the thunderbolt. She doesn't know it, unless Max told her against my wish; but it was I who induced him to bring her before the public, four years ago, as Joan Thursday. Since then her destiny has been rather too big a thing for me to tamper with; but I've watched and wondered, sensing forces at work about her of which even she was unsuspicious."

"What in blazes do you mean?" Whitaker demanded, mystified.

"Did it strike you to wonder at the extraordinary mob her farewell performance attracted tonight?"

"Why—yes. It struck me as rather unusual. But then, Max had done nothing but tell me of her tremendous popularity."

"That alone, great as it is, wouldn't have brought so many people together to stare at the outside of a theater. The magnet was something stronger—the morbid curiosity of New York. Those people were waiting, thrilled with expectancy, on tiptoe for the sensation that presently came to them: the report of Drummond's death."

"What the devil—!"

"Patience! This is the third time it has happened—the same thing, practically: Sara Law on the verge of leaving the stage to marry, a fatal accident intervening. Did Max by any chance mention the nickname New York has bestowed on Sara Law?"

"Nickname? No!"

"They call her 'The Destroying Angel.'"

"What rot!"

"Yes; but what coincidence. Three men loved her—and one by one they died. And now the fourth. Do you wonder . . . ?"

"Oh, but—'The Destroying Angel'—!" Whitaker cried indignantly. "How can they blame her?"

"It isn't blame—it's superstition. Listen . . ."

Ember bent forward, holding Whitaker's gaze with intent, grave eyes. "The first time," he said in a rapid undertone, "was a year or so after her triumph as Joan Thursday. There were then two men openly infatuated with her, a boy named Custer, and a man I believe you knew—William Hamilton."

"I knew them both."

"Custer was making the pace; the announcement of his engagement to Sara Law was confidently anticipated. He died suddenly; the coroner's jury decided that he had misjudged the intentions of a loaded revolver. People whispered a suicide, but it didn't look quite like that to me. However . . . Hamilton stepped into his place. Presently we heard that Sara Law was to marry him and leave the stage. Hamilton had to go abroad on business; on the return trip—the wedding was set for the day after he landed here—he disappeared, no one knew how. Presumably he fell overboard by accident one night; sane men with everything in the world to live for do such things, you know—according to the newspapers."

"I understand you. Please go on."

"Approximately eighteen months later a man named Thurston—Mitchell Thurston—was considered a dangerous aspirant for the hand of Sara Law. He was exceedingly well fixed in a money way—a sort of dilettantish architect, with offices in the Metropolitan tower. One day at high noon he left his desk to go to lunch at Martin's; crossing Madison square, he suddenly fell dead, with a bullet in his brain. It was a rifle bullet, but though the square was crowded, no one had heard the report of the shot, and no one was seen carrying a rifle. The conclusion was that he had been shot by somebody using a gun with a Maxim silencer, from a window on the south side of the square. There were no clues."

"And now Drummond!" Whitaker exclaimed in horror. "Poor fellow! Poor woman!"

A slightly sardonic expression modified the lines of Ember's mouth. "So far as Mrs. Whitaker is concerned," he said with the somewhat pedantic mode of speech which Whitaker was to learn to associate with his moments of most serious concentration—"I echo the sentiment. But let us suspend judgment on Drummond's case until we know more. It is not as yet an established fact that he is dead."

"You mean there's hope—"

"There's doubt," Ember corrected acidly—"doubt, at least, in my mind. You see, I saw Drummond in the flesh, alive and vigorous, a good half hour after he is reported to have leaped to his death."

"Where?"

"Coming up the stairs from the downtown subway station in front of the Park Avenue hotel. He wore a hat pulled down over his eyes and an old overcoat buttoned tight up to his chin. He was carrying a satchel bearing the initials C. S. D., but was otherwise pretty thoroughly disguised, and, I fancied, anxious enough to escape recognition."

"You're positive about this?"

"The man was Carter S. Drummond. I don't think I can be mistaken."

"Which way did he go?"

"Toward the Pennsylvania station, I fancy; that is, he turned west through Thirty-third street. I didn't follow—I was getting into taxi when I caught sight of him."

"But what did you think to see him disguised? Didn't it strike you as curious?"

"Very," said Ember dryly. "At the same time, it was none of my affair—then. Nor did it present itself to me as a matter worth meddling with until, later, my suspicions were aroused by the scene in the theater—obviously the result of your appearance there—and still later, when I heard the suicide report."

"But—" Whitaker passed a hand across his dazed eyes. "What can it mean? Why should he do this thing?"

"There are several possible explanations. . . . How long has Drummond known that you are alive?"

"Since noon today."

"May I ask, what was the extent of your property in his trust?"

"A couple of hundred thousands."

"And he believed you dead and was unable to find your widow . . ."

"Oh, I don't think that!" Whitaker expostulated.

"Nor do I. We're merely considering possible explanations. There's a third . . ."

"Well?"

"He may have received a strong hint that he was nominated for the fate that overtook young Custer, Hamilton and Thurston; and so planned to give his disappearance the color of a similar end."

"You don't mean to say you think there was any method in that train of tragedies?"

"I'm not in the least superstitious, my dear man. I don't for an instant believe, as some people claim to, that Sara Law is a destroying angel, hounded by a tragic fate: that her love is equivalent to the death warrant of the man who wins it."

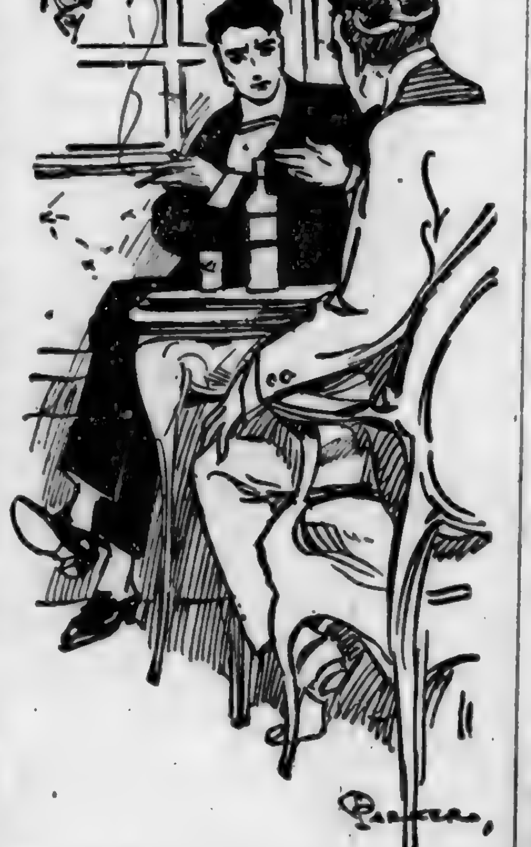
"But what do you think, then?"

"I think," said Ember slowly, his gaze on the table, "that someone with a very strong interest in keeping the young woman single—and on the stage—"

"Max! Impossible!"

Ember shrugged. "In human nature no madness is impossible. There's not a shred of evidence against Jules Max. And yet—he's a gambler. All theatrical managers are, of course; but Max is a card-fiend. The tale of his plunging runs like wildfire up and down Broadway, day by day. A dozen times he's been on the verge of ruin, yet always he has had Sara Law to rely upon; always he's been able to fall back upon that asset, sure that her popularity would stave off bankruptcy. And he's superstitious: he believes she is his mascot. I don't accuse him—I suspect him, knowing him to be capable of many weird extravagances. . . . Furthermore, it's a fact that Max was a fellow-passenger with Billy Hamilton when the latter disappeared in midocean."

Ember paused and sat up, preparatory to rising. "All of which," he concluded, "explains why I have trespassed upon your patience and your privacy. It seemed only right that you should get the straight, undistorted story from an unprejudiced onlooker. May I venture to add a word of advice?"



"They Call Her 'The Destroying Angel.'"

"By all means."

"Have you told Max of your relations with Sara Law?"

"No."

"Or anybody else?"

"No."

"Then keep the truth to yourself—at least until this coil is straightened out."

Ember got up. "Good night," he said pleasantly.

Whitaker took his hand, staring. "Good night," he echoed blankly. "But—I say—why keep it quiet?"

Ember, turning to go, paused, his glance quietly quizzical. "You don't mean to claim your wife?"

"On the contrary, I expect to offer no defense to her action for divorce."

"Grounds of desertion?"

"I presume so."

"Just the same, keep it as quiet as possible until the divorce is granted. If you live till then . . . you may possibly continue to live thereafter."

What is your opinion of this Drummond suicide report? Do you believe the man is dead—if he isn't, why the effort to create the suicide impression? Is Drummond a thief or a madman?

IN THE LIMELIGHT

ARGENTINA'S NEW PRESIDENT

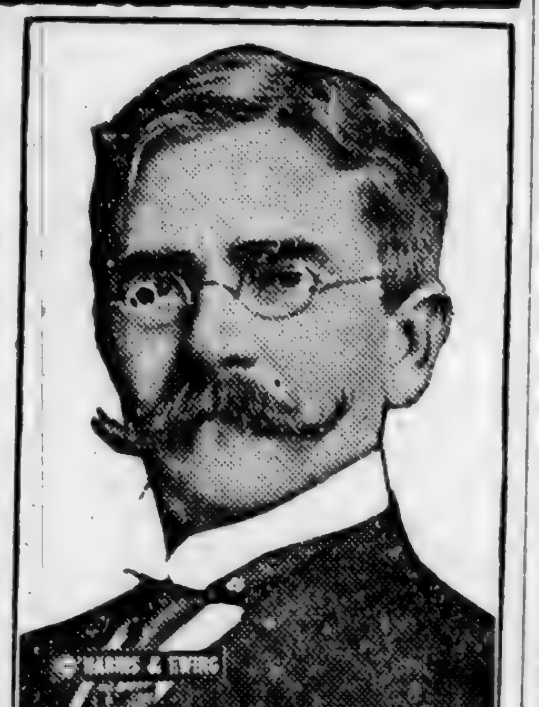
Hipolito Irigoyen, the recently inaugurated president of Argentina, heads the first radical administration in that country. He was elected president because a majority of the voters trusted him, personally, implicitly and blindly. Those who believe in him consider him Argentina's greatest man. His opponents regard him as extremely dangerous and look forward to his administration with the gravest misgivings.

Doctor Irigoyen is about sixty, a tall, powerfully built, imposing man, and very dark. His blood is Spanish Basque, with a slight Indian strain, some say.

He began life poor. He is self-educated and a highly cultivated man. He is now very rich, the result of land transactions. By occupation he is a ranchman on a huge scale, with a very modest residence in Buenos Aires.

For a long time, for pure recreation, he held the professorship of "civic instruction" at the Buenos Aires Normal School for Women. His salary for this work he turned over regularly to the United Charities of Buenos Aires. Twelve years ago a president who was his personal enemy caused his removal from this post in the normal school and he has never held it since.

BELISARIO PORRAS RETURNS



Friends both in the diplomatic corps and in residential circles have welcomed back to Washington Dr. Belisario Porras, until October 1 president of the republic of Panama, and now minister of that country to the United States. Before his presidential term Doctor Porras served his country in the same capacity here.

There are few honors that his country can confer which have not fallen into the basket of Doctor Porras, and both he and his wife, a charming Porto Rican, are pleasantly remembered for their hospitality and charm.

Shortly after Doctor Porras first was appointed minister at Washington Senora de Porras was married to him by proxy, the first marriage by proxy ever solemnized in the diplomatic corps in Washington. The minister was not able to go to Porto Rico for his bride, and the strict etiquette governing the conduct of gentlewomen of her country would not admit of her coming here before her marriage.

Therefore, an intimate friend represented the minister at the ceremony, and after that Senora de Porras sailed for New York, where she was met by her "vrai" bridegroom. Not long afterward they went to Panama that the minister might enter the campaign for president.

ADVICE FROM DOCTOR WILEY

"Food prices could be reduced 50 per cent if manufacturers would sacrifice their velvet.

"The people should get back to fundamentals. There is no sense in paying 40 cents a pound for a cereal preparation when with $2 wheat there can be no more than four cents' actual value in it."

That is what Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former chief of the government bureau of chemistry, thinks of the high cost of living, according to a talk he made in Toledo.

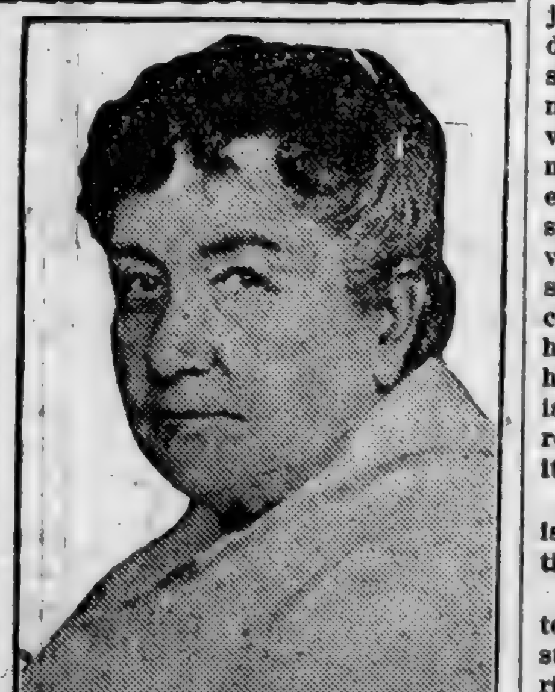
"The American people, and especially the American housewives, know little about foods," he continued.

"That is why they spend one dollar and twenty cents a pound for the nourishment they can get from a pound of meat, when they can get enough wheat to last a man a month for the same price.

"Some of the factors that tend to increase prices beyond the actual value of a commodity as food are excessive advertising of brands.

"Americans drink labels and eat brands, and it is good exercise for them—opening their pocketbooks. The value of brands often is overestimated because of extravagantly worded advertising."

MISS ANNIE R. ROE



It would be hard to find a better example of what woman's work stands for in the federal service than that supplied by the record of Miss Annie R. Roe, chief of the numbering division of the bureau of engraving and printing. Miss Roe entered the bureau in June, 1865, and has given it over half a century of service.

Amid the whir of flying machinery doing its full part in the daily output of the nation's wealth, Miss Roe sits serenely at her desk in evident obliviousness to the noise of the busy wheels. Here she directs the last stage in the many processes which turn raw pulp into United States currency.

Miss Roe superintends the numbering, sealing and separating of all United States notes, which is the final act in their creation before being taken to the treasury of the United States to become the legal tender of the nation. Miss Roe is modest almost to the point of reticence in regard to her work, and it is with difficulty that she can be persuaded to speak of it.

With the weight of responsibility which for so many years has rested upon her shoulders, Miss Roe yet looks younger than her age, and except that the tenure of her service indicates maturer years one would find it hard to believe that she had passed the half century mark. Mental and physical activity and efficiency are stamped upon her every movement, and there is hardly a doubt but that she knows every minute of the day the exact condition of the work engaged in by every one of the 229 men and women under her supervision.

Nor is it a harsh or unsympathetic surveillance she exerts. A woman of full experience and trained understanding, she knows what comprises an honest day's work for those under her. While she demands that this be given, she also appreciates the situation when conditions warrant leniency. Among all her people she is to herself the only severe taskmaster, and from herself she exacts harder and longer hours than from any of the employees under her charge.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 3

JESUS CHRIST THE FIRST AND THE LAST.

LESSON TEXT—Rev. 1.

GOLDEN TEXT—Fear not; I am the first and the last, and the living one; and I was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore.—Rev. 1:17, 18.

The lesson committee have departed, seemingly, a long way from anything like chronological order. Paul had nothing to do with the writing of the Revelation, yet this lesson illustrates the pre-eminence which Jesus Christ had in the mind and labors of the great apostle (Col. 1:18).

I. Introduction. (vv. 1-3.) We would suggest that all Bible students and teachers, if possible, read the introduction to the Book of Revelation in Scofield's Reference Bible. The book proper is "The Revelation of Jesus Christ." John, the beloved disciple, who wrote the Gospel and Epistles, was the one who saw the visions recorded therein. Many of the things are historical, others are prophetically set forth. The latter are "shortly to come to pass." (See also II Peter 3:8.) John tells not only what God said but what he himself saw. The late Doctor Brooks of St. Louis omitted this book from his study for many years until he saw the comments recorded in verse 3. The time of the writing of this book has variously been stated as from A. D. 60 to A. D. 96; the writer was certainly John the Beloved. The place of writing was the island of Patmos in the Aegean sea, not far from Ephesus. The real author, however, is Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

II. Salutation (vv. 4-8). "The servant of Jesus who records his message was John, and the message was to be to "the seven churches which are in Asia;" that is, the western portion of Asia Minor, of which Ephesus on the Aegean sea was the principal city. These churches are definitely named in verse 11. There is good reason to think that these churches represented the seven successive epochs of church history. If so, no age is exclusively Ephesian, or Philadelphian, or Laodicean. The grace, favor, loving kindness, is a free gift from Christ, who is here giving a threefold title, namely: First begotten from the dead, witness and prince.

III. Vision (vv. 9-18). What John saw on the isle of Patmos he was to write upon a parchment roll and send it to the seven churches, each of which needed a message. Under the figure of seven candlesticks are enumerated seven churches. Into the midst of these churches, actually present in them, is one like unto the Son of Man. (See also Matthew 18:20.) Like a human being, Jesus was, but now clothed with the garment of his eternal glory, girded about with the girdle worn by priests and kings, a symbol of his power and strength (Isaiah 11:5; Eph. 6:14). His head and his hands, his feet and his eyes are all referred to, each having its symbolical significance. In his right hand are the seven stars (v. 16), the angels of the churches, pastors or leaders, possibly guardian angels (v. 20). They are held in his right hand, signifying that they are protected, upheld and controlled by his wisdom and power. (See Jeremiah 22:24). From his mouth goes a sharp, two-edged sword; the spirit of the Word of God sharper than any two-edged sword (Hebrews 4:12). And his countenance was as the sun shining in its strength, the glory, such as was manifested in the transfiguration, such as Paul saw near Damascus, is here referred to.

IV. The Command. John had enjoyed a tender intimacy with the Lord during his earthly life and yet he was stricken down with the overpowering majesty and glory which had been revealed. Now he realized, as perhaps never before, the significance of the ever-living Christ, and he is hereby specifically commanded to record this vision as he had seen it and the messages which the Lord had for the churches. The word mystery (v. 20) has reference to something which has hitherto been hidden to men and which is now about to be revealed. The revelation was to these churches, and it is to us also.

Jesus is not a mere vision but he is a living reality, unveiled for the time from the unseen.

Jesus is a living fact which we are to communicate to men. The seven stars (v. 20) are messages in his own right hand.

The churches are the lamp stands, Christ himself is the light, the sun (v. 16).

The messages John is commanded to deliver have a four-fold application (1) to the churches actually addressed, but which have long since passed away; (2) to all churches in all times, admonishing them to discover their true spiritual state; (3) to individuals, "he that hath an ear," that they shall claim the promises made "to him that overcometh" and (4) they are prophetic of the different phases of spiritual history, following the days of John, the writer, (a) Beginning; (b) persecution; (c) worldliness; (d) priestly formalism; (e) reformation; (f) testimony to the word and the name.

DRUGGISTS HIGHLY RECOMMEND DR. KILMER'S SWAMP-ROOT

Satisfied With Results

I have been selling Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root for six and one-half years and my customers are always satisfied with the results obtained from the use of the medicine and speak favorably regarding it. I have used it for "pain in the back" and a bottle or two put me in good shape and made me feel fine again. I believe Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root will cure any cases for which it is recommended if they are not of too long standing.

Very truly yours,
FRANK JENKINS, Druggist.

Customers Speak Favorably

We have been handling Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root for fourteen years and during all that time we never had a dissatisfied user of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root; all of our customers speak very favorably regarding it. We know of cases of Gall Stones, Gravel, Catarrh or Inflammation of Bladder and Rheumatism where it produced the most beneficial results. We believe it is a good medicine for the diseases for which it is intended.

Very truly yours,

College Men in War.

Possibly more than any other war ever waged, the present European struggle has drawn into its vortex men of education, men of mental attainments and students. In the very nature of this war it could not be otherwise. With the possible exception of Russia there is not a nation engaged but has had to draw deeply upon its human reserve sources. It is doubtful if there is a family in France, Germany or Great Britain that does not have a representative somewhere among the fighters. What a toll this war has taken of the intellect of England is indicated by a report of Doctor Burrows, principal of King's college. From this it appears that regular men students of English birth have fallen from 800 in the year previous to the war to about 100 now. The college has contributed 512 officers to the army and navy. And the work of the college itself, especially the scientific part of it, is directed largely along lines incidental to the war.

HUMAN LIFE CHEAP IN CHINA

Natives Rarely Exhibit Great Fear of Death—Practice Horrible Method of Execution.

Human life is such a common thing in China that it is not valued much. If a man falls into the water, his friends will not put themselves out very much to rescue him. They argue that he has got to die some time and that his falling into the water indicates that the gods have decreed that his time has come, hence to interfere and save him would be acting contrary to the divine powers and would bring evil on both the saved man and his rescuer.

Capital punishment is still administered by the Chinese for numerous offenses which are punishable only by imprisonment in other countries. The Chinese executioners go about beheading in a very businesslike and unsentimental way—and even the victim seems to take it as a matter of course.

If he or his friends have any money they usually give some of it to the swordsman to induce him to do a good job. In Canton and other big Chinese cities, foreign visitors often take in the execution grounds as one of the "sights," and there is usually an execution or two to be seen at the appointed hour. The Chinese have thought up various picturesque punishments which are the very refinement of cruelty. The famous "slicing by inches" is well known. In carrying out this sentence, the executioner cuts his subject up gradually, as the term implies, and the pains of death are horribly prolonged.

It always worries a contrary woman to be allowed to have her own way without objection.

Small House Laid Out in Manner That Makes It Cozy and Homelike.

SPECIAL FEATURES IN DESIGN

Arrangements That Do Not Add Materially to the Cost of Construction Will Be Appreciated by the Housewife—Attractive Interior.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

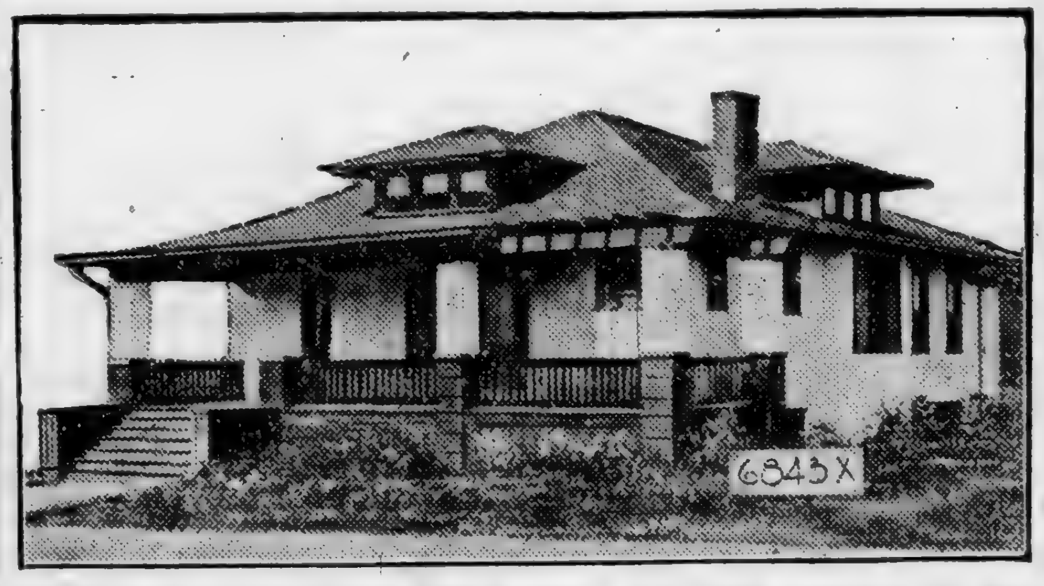
It has been said that one way to judge the character of a man is to examine the house he lives in. Although a liberal discount must be allowed in the application of such a principle, there is undoubtedly some truth in the statement, especially when it is applied to a man who lives in a house built from plans of his own selection. The least that may be said in this respect is that the foresight of the man is indicated by the manner in which the house meets the needs of his family. Comfort and convenience are the qualities which are most appreciated, but there are a vast number of considerations which affect these qualities and which must be accounted for in the selection of the house design.

One of the most common errors made by the man who is undertaking the task of selecting a design for his home is that of overestimating the size of the house which he requires. In the first place, the larger the house the harder it is to make it seem cozy and homelike. The man of moderate income who must ask his wife to keep up the house without assistance is not taking her into very deep consideration if he builds a house which is a great deal too large for the needs of the family. Further, with the same investment the smaller house may be fitted up with a number of features having convenience and comfort as their direct purpose, the cost of these features being absorbed in the cost of building the bare walls, floors, ceilings and roof of the larger house.

There are any number of ways in which a small house may be made homelike. The most important precaution to be observed in the arrangement of the rooms is that of providing space for furniture already in the possession of the owner, or about to be purchased. This applies to the larger pieces of furniture, such as the piano or divan. Each room should be given individual features which most thoroughly fit it to furnish the desired qualities. In the living room most people like a fireplace, and built-in book-cases furnish a very handy and useful feature. The housewife will no doubt appreciate a buffet in the dining room. A pantry is a great help in the preparation of meals. A clothes chute saves steps and keeps soiled linen out of the way. These and many other features are easily provided and the expense of their construction is more than paid back in the convenience and comfort which they provide.

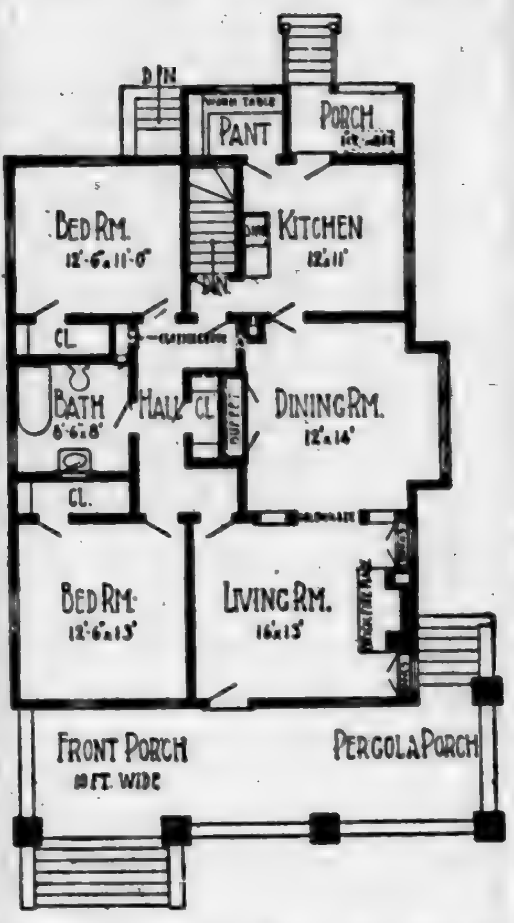
The bungalow shown in the illustration is an excellent type of home for the family that takes pride in making the various rooms of the house in which they live as cozy and attractive as possible. Of course, for such a family the house must, in itself, have the qualities of coziness and attractiveness, or no amount of labor will seem to produce just the effect that is desired. The bungalow seems to be the right type, and this particular design has many desirable features from this standpoint.

The outside walls of the bungalow are plastered in white or some light shade of gray. Wood trim is finished dark in contrast to the light walls. A hip roof is used with small dormers having their sides finished with shingles. Brick chimneys are used for the fireplace, furnace and kitchen stove. The porch is very attractive and useful. It is built across the front of the house and extends on one end so that steps along the side of the house make it accessible from the rear. The end of the porch near these steps is built in the pergola style. The general exterior design is simple but very attractive.



With very little effort the rooms of this bungalow may be made exceptionally cozy and homelike. The living room and dining room are joined together with only a colonnade between. These rooms should be finished in somewhat the same style, to produce the best effect. The large fireplace, with bookcases on each side, may be made the center of attraction in the living room. The dining room is well arranged, having a buffet built into the wall opposite the three-window bay.

A double-acting door leads from the dining room into the kitchen. The value of the arrangement of this part of the house will be appreciated by every housewife. At the rear of the kitchen are the pantry and the rear porch. Both of these may be used to very good advantage in connection with the kitchen. The pantry is fitted with shelves and a work table. A large window furnishes an abundance of light. The refrigerator may be placed on the rear porch, and, since this porch is open on one side only, a great many uses may be found for the porch during the season when the temperature will permit its use.



Floor Plan of Bungalow. Size 40 Feet by 40 Feet.

There are two bedrooms, each having a large closet, one at the front of the house and the other at the rear. A hall connects all rooms with the exception of the dining room. There is a closet in the hall which furnishes a handy place in which to keep extra bedclothes. The bath is roomy and well equipped. A special feature in this part of the house is the clothes chute, into which openings are made in both the hall and the bathroom.

The basement is entered from a nook off the kitchen. It may be made a very useful part of the house. Rooms should be divided off to provide for the furnace, coal bins, vegetable storage and laundry. The location of the laundry is preferable under the rear bedroom, since the clothes chute should terminate in this room. The floor of the entire basement should be of concrete, which is also an excellent material for the foundation of walls. If the entire substructure of the house is made of poured concrete it is certain that the basement will be dry and easy to keep clean.

The bungalow is, of all the building types used for homes, most easy to make comfortable because of the inherent coziness which is a part of the appearance of the house itself. In case the family is not too large the bungalow is a most satisfactory type of house. It is possible to preserve the appearance of the bungalow and its style in room arrangement and still furnish second-floor space in the so-called "story-and-a-half" house; which is simply the bungalow altered to provide more space. This type is excellent for the larger family.

Hamlet and Other Men.

As every man, according to Coleridge, is born either a Platonist or an Aristotelian, so there is no human being in whom some of the characteristics of Hamlet do not exist.

In this marvelous creation is presented a mirror in which the most exalted and the most contemptible of our species may catch glimpses of themselves.

Hamlet is not so much an individual as humanity individualized, not so much a man in integrity as man in solution.

Probably no poet, no artist, no philosopher has ever existed who would not recognize a kinsman in him, and who would not read more than one chapter of his own most secret history in this all-typical delineation.

He is at once the type of those to whom life owes its richest possessions and of those who strew it with wrecks.

EVERYTHING WAS "JUST FINE"

Bunch of Giggling Girls Showed a Tendency to Work That Particular Phrase Overtime.

If you happened to be near the bunch of giggling girls in the station the other day, you would have concluded that only two words were left in the English language with which to express approval, answer questions or exclaim.

You couldn't help hearing the conversation, for after the fashion of some young girls, they didn't care who heard what they said.

They opened fire when they met by asking each other: "And how are you?" The answer was invariably: "Just fine!"

Then they tackled the weather, and each of them conceded that it was just fine. It seemed that one of the party hadn't been with the others for some time, and that her special chum of other days was not present on this occasion, so one of them asked: "And how is Marie?"

"Oh, she's just fine!" was the enthusiastic reply. "She' married, you know."

"Married? Marie! Oh, hush! Did she get a nice man?"

"Yes, he's just fine!"

And they all exclaimed in chorus: "Isn't that just fine!"

THE PROFESSOR'S STATEMENT.

Prof. Aug. F. W. Schmitz, Thomas, Okla., writes: "I was troubled with Backache for about twenty-five years. When told I had Bright's Disease in its last stages, I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using two boxes I was somewhat relieved and I stopped the treatment. In the spring of the next year I had another attack. I went for Dodd's Kidney Pills and they relieved me again. I used three boxes. That is now three years ago and my Backache has not returned in its severity, and by using another two boxes a little later on, the pain left altogether and I have had no trouble since. You may use my statement. I recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills when and wherever I can." Dodd's Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

Bodily Housekeeping

(By V. M. PIERCE, M. D.)

The subject of drinking water with meals has been misunderstood.

In recent years investigation by means of X-rays, the observations of scientists such as Cannon, Grutzner, Pavlov, Fowler, Hawk, prove that an abundance of water taken during digestion is necessary in good bodily housekeeping.

If your kidneys are sick, or you suffer with lumbago or rheumatism at times, pain in the back or back of the neck, take a little Anuric before meals. This can be found at any good drug store. Therefore my advice to young or old is, always drink plenty of pure water. And for long life, occasionally take tablets of Anuric three or four times a day.

Anuric acts much more quickly than lithia. Many find that it dissolves uric acid as water does sugar.

QUIETED FOR SHORT TIME

Youthful Soldiers Had to Do Some Thinking Before They Could Find Effective Answer to Gibe.

Some young volunteers were traveling to their drilling ground and a certain noisy section of them at one station sought to pass the time by hurling ill-mannered gibes at a smart-looking officer in the "Regulars," who was waiting for his train. He stood the fire very well for ten minutes, and then, stopping near the compartment which held the rowdy volunteers, said sharply to the guard:

"Guard, what is the meaning of this train's long delay?"

"They are examining the volunteers' tickets, sir," answered the guard.

"Oh, thanks," drawled the officer; "but I always thought that children in arms never required tickets."

And the train started again before any of the volunteers had sufficiently recovered from the shock to reply."—London Tit-Bits.

"WHEN THE FROST IS ON THE PUNKIN"

When the frost is on the punkin, and the fodder's in the shock,
And you hear the kyouck and gobble of the struttin' turkey-cock,
And the clackin' of the guineas and the cluckin' of the hens,
And the rooster's hallylooyer as he tiptoes on the fence;
O, it's then's the times a feller is a feelin' at his best,
With the risin' sun to greet him from a night of peaceful rest,
As he leaves the house, bare-headed, and goes out to feed the stock,
When the frost is on the punkin, and the fodder's in the shock.

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

Pullman or Freight?

No one would think of riding in a freight car if he could enjoy the comfort of a big, comfortable easy riding Pullman parlor car.

So with automobiles. Most of the popular priced cars ride like freight cars. This is due to the old fashioned type of spring.

Many manufacturers still continue to use them.

The Overland does not. The 75 B Overland has the latest type of cantilever shock absorbing springs. As a result it is one of the easiest riding cars in the world.

Live Stock Production and the Stock Show.

If public interest in the International Live Stock Exposition was ever justified, this is the moment. Not only is commercial live stock production profitable to an unprecedented degree, but the task of rehabilitating the industry must be vigorously prosecuted if the nation is to be assured of an adequate supply of meat.

Improvement of live stock is the need of the hour. As cost of production increases, breeders and feeders cannot achieve maximum results with the inferior and mediocre grades of cattle that constitute too large a percentage of the stuff now reaching market.

It is an accepted axiom that the profit is in the gain. It corresponds with the motto of Transportation Specialists that the money is in the straps, meaning passengers who are not furnished seats.

Profit in handling scrub live stock is questionable and possibly only during periods of abnormally high prices. If cattle raising is to be placed on a permanently staple basis, the present system must be abandoned.

The management of the International Live Stock Exposition is exploiting an idea that is slowly gaining ground. Education is a proverbially slow process and progress is attained only by persistent endeavor. To insure maximum profits at minimum cost in the sphere of meat production is the mission of the International Live Stock Exposition. That mission is primarily designed to benefit the producer, incidentally it will work to the advantage of the carrier, the manufacturer and the consumer, consequently its success is desirable from many angles.

From a utilitarian standpoint the International Live Stock Exposition, which will this year be held during the first week in December, stands in the front rank of the World's educational institutions.

The History of Thanksgiving

President Washington established the custom officially in the United States, but men have fervently thanked their Gods for blessings in all ages and every clime

THE goddess of the Roman harvest was Ceres. Her festival was celebrated annually and was called Ceralia. It was a day of worship and rustic sports. Men and women formed processions and went to the fields with music. Virgil refers to this festival. He mentions the sacrifices that were offered in the temples, and alludes to the joyousness of the occasion. But Roman thanksgiving days were not confined to this annual celebration of the festival of Ceralia. Sometimes they were held in commemoration of victorious martial campaigns. Plutarch tells us of the emperor who to conceal his defeat ordered a thanksgiving, which was observed. Then when the facts of his disastrous campaign became generally known, he excused himself on the ground that he did not "wish to deprive the people of a day of enjoyment."

In one way or another, a thanksgiving day has been observed in Christian Europe for centuries before its celebration in New England. On the continent, and for a time in England, it occurred at Martinmas, which was a day of feasting and drinking. Occasionally, too, civil authorities recommended the observance of some fixed day. To celebrate the victory of King Henry V of England, at Agincourt, October 25, 1415, a public thanksgiving was held on Sunday, the feast of St. Edward, the King and Confessor. Such a day, too, was observed in Leyden, Holland, October 3, 1575, the first anniversary of that city from the siege by the Spaniards.

Many instances of a thanksgiving day can be pointed out in England during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. In 1559, the second year of Elizabeth's reign, Thanksgiving day entered Rogation day. Then it was ordered that thanks should be given to Almighty God "for the increase and abundance of his fruits upon the earth." In this reign, too, there was a great national thanksgiving day that is worthy of note. This occurred Tuesday, November 19, 1558, and was in commemoration of the great victory over the "Invincible Armada."

One legal and annual thanksgiving day, because of the long time it was such, deserves special mention. After the traitors in the Gunpowder plot had been tried and punished in 1605, it was ordered that because of their deliverance the English people should keep the fifth of November every year "as a public thanksgiving day to Almighty God; that unfeigned thankfulness may never be forgotten, and that all ages to come may yield praises to God's divine majesty for the same." The "fifth of November" continued a legal thanksgiving day for more than two centuries; but in later years it fell into disuse, and in 1833 was abolished by parliament.

Long before the advent of the Pilgrims in Massachusetts, all rituals contained expressions of gratitude to God for his mercies. In that of the Church of England, special prayers were provided for the Sunday service. This service, however, must be carefully distinguished from the Thanksgiving day of the Pilgrim fathers. Failure to make this distinction has led to the groundless claim that the Popham colonists were "the first to keep Thanksgiving day" in America. The service at Monhegan, on which this claim is based, was the regular Sunday service of the Church of England; and while it had an element of thanksgiving, the day can in nowise be regarded as a thanksgiving day as that term is understood.

The record made in his "Breeches Bible" by William White, who came over in the Mayflower, has far more significance in determining the origin of our American Thanksgiving day than the event at Monhegan. The record read: "William White married on ye 3rd day of March, 1620, to Susannah Tilly, Peregrine White born on board ye Mayflower in Cape Cod Harbor. Sonne born to Susannah White 19th ye six o'clock morning. Next day we meet for prayer and thanksgiving." This meeting "for prayer and thanksgiving" was not on Sunday, but on Tuesday. The fact that it was not a part of the regular Sunday service makes it more nearly accord with our idea of Thanksgiving day than does the Monhegan event.

The prototype of our present Thanksgiving day is found in the harvest festival at Plymouth in 1621. The long winter that followed the establishment of the colony had been so severe that less than half the settlers had survived it. "At one time during the winter only Brewster, Standish, and five other hardy ones were well enough to get about." In the spring and summer that followed, their fortunes improved, and by autumn they had cleared 26 acres and made it ready for cultivation. This industry, too, had been rewarded by a bounteous harvest. Now food and fuel sufficient for the needs of the approaching winter were laid in. Then Governor Bradford ordered a thanksgiving—the first in America.

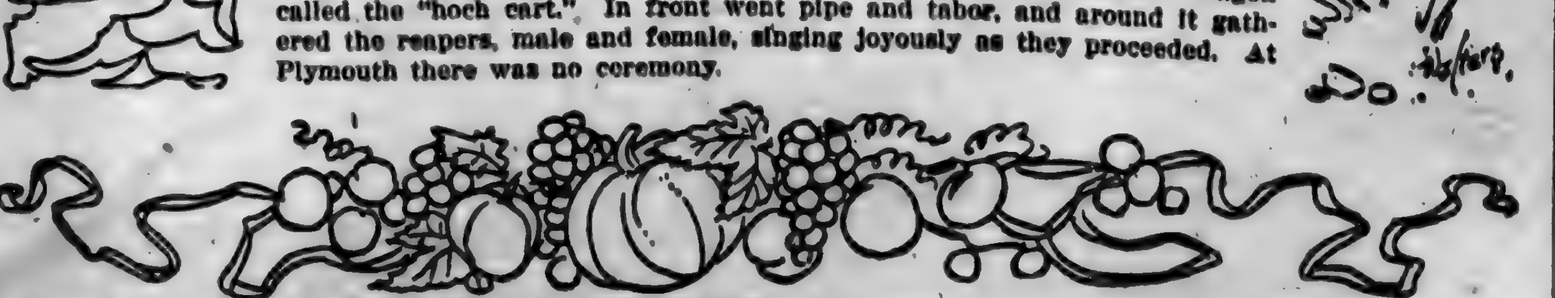
The first thanksgiving was not for a day only. It continued a week. In a letter to a friend in England, Edward Winslow has given us a brief account of the festivities. This letter bears date of December 11, and in it Winslow wrote: "Our harvest being gotten in, our Governor sent four men on fowling that so we might after special manner rejoice together after we had gathered the fruits of our labors. They killed as much fowl as with a little help beside served the company about a week. At which times among other recreations we exercise our arms, many of the Indians coming amongst us, and among the rest their greatest king, Massasoyt, with some ninety men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed five deer which they brought and bestowed on our Governor and upon the captains and others."

The records make no mention of a thanksgiving day in the next year, but in the year following, 1623, such a day was held. This, however, was not in the autumn, but in July on the arrival of provisions from England. Nearly 50 years pass before we hear of another thanksgiving day at Plymouth. There was one in 1668, and another for the accession of the Orange Stuarts, William and Mary, in 1689. An autumnal thanksgiving was held in 1690, the last in the history of Plymouth colony.

Independently of Plymouth, Massachusetts Bay colony had occasionally its own thanksgiving days. There was such a day for the "safe arrival of ships," July 8, 1630; and again the next February, when the provision ship, Ambrose, arrived. In 1632, the general court ordered a "publique" thanksgiving day in recognition of the "m'cy of God vouchsafed to the churches of God in Germany and the Pallatinate." The next year the court, because of the bountiful harvest, appointed October 16 as a thanksgiving day—the first harvest festival in the history of the colony. By 1680 the autumnal thanksgiving had become an annual festival. No doubt in its games and sports it took the place of the English Christmas, for until comparatively recent date all that savored of Rome and the episcopacy was held in disfavor in Massachusetts.

During the Revolution Thanksgiving day became national. All through the war, congress annually set apart a day for thanksgiving; but after the "Thanksgiving for Peace" in 1783, there were no more until Washington became president in 1789. On October 3 of this year at New York he issued a proclamation asking the observance of Thursday, November 26, as a day for national thanksgiving. This was the beginning of the orthodox "last Thursday" that has since been named in presidential proclamations. By this time the festival had general official recognition throughout New England, and in this year, 1789, the Protestant Episcopal prayer books recognized the authority of civil government in the appointing of thanksgiving days.

The chief differences between the two was the want of ceremony at Plymouth that characterized the English festival. In some parts of England the merry-making was around the "noddingsheaf," or "kern baby;" and in many places the last load of the harvest was drawn to the barn in a wagon called the "hoch cart." In front went pipe and tabor, and around it gathered the reapers, male and female, singing joyously as they proceeded. At Plymouth there was no ceremony.



Opinions Differ.

"Men are like wagons," remarked the man who dispenses aphorisms. "They make the most noise when empty."

"Your trolley is off the wire," rejoined the contrary person. "A man makes the most noise when he is full."

His Only Hope.

"Tell me," spake the easy mark, "what sort of a girl should I propose to?"

"She should be rich," rejoined the female fortune teller, "and if you expect her to accept you, she must also be foolish."

Advice That Failed.

Rich Uncle—What! Broke again? You ought to take Solomon's advice to the sluggard about going to the ant for—

Nephew (interrupting)—So I did, uncle, but aunt says she is in the same deplorable condition.

ELECTION OF ROAD SUPERVISORS NEXT

OFFICES TO BE FILLED IN TEN HUNDRED SIXTEEN TOWNSHIPS OF STATE.

DECEMBER 16 IS THE DATE

Only Citizens Living Outside the Limits of Cities and Incorporated Towns Are Eligible to Vote for These Candidates.

Indianapolis.—Politics is just one thing after another in Indiana, for no sooner was the presidential election over than the campaign for the election of road supervisors broke on the helpless public. This next election to be held in Indiana will take place Saturday, December 16.

The only offices to be filled are road supervisors for the 1,016 townships of Indiana, and for this reason it is not anticipated that there will be any grand flow of oratory or glittering parade of countless thousands. It will simply be a nice, quiet little election, with here and there a vote cast.

Under the law enacted by the legislature of 1915 the number of road supervisors in any township shall not exceed four. The road supervisor receives 25 cents an hour for his work, and he is not permitted to put in more than 50 days in any year, except in townships in which there is only one supervisor. In such case he is limited to 120 days.

The polls are opened at two o'clock and are kept open until five o'clock, but if all voters in the district have cast their votes before five o'clock the polls shall be closed earlier. Also, the law says that if, after the polls have been opened at two o'clock, all voters in the district have had opportunity to vote, the polls may be closed at any time when ten minutes have passed without a vote having been cast.

The township trustee is the election inspector in the road district in which he lives or the one nearest to his home. He appoints two clerks, and he and the clerks constitute the election board. The trustee appoints an inspector and two clerks in all other precincts in his township. All inspectors and clerks serve without pay, but the trustee receives pay for the day on which he posts notices of the election and the day on which he files his report of the election with the county auditor.

Voting is done with paper ballots, on which the names of candidates may be written or printed.

Only voters living outside the limits of cities and incorporated towns are eligible to vote for road supervisors.

Many Didn't Vote for Governor.

Analysis of the election figures compiled at the offices of Homer L. Cook, secretary of state, throws interesting light on the results of races made by several of the candidates at the recent election in Indiana.

For instance, although Charles E. Hughes and Charles Warren Fairbanks, Republican candidates for president and vice president, obtained a total popular vote of 341,005, which was 3,147 votes more than the total popular vote of James P. Goodrich, Republican candidate for governor, yet the plurality of the Hughes and Fairbanks ticket over the Wilson and Marshall ticket was only 6,942, while the plurality of Mr. Goodrich over John A. M. Adair, his Democratic state machine opponent, was 12,771. The figures thus show that many persons voted in the presidential contest that did not vote in the contest for governor.

In the analysis of the vote on the two United States senators in Indiana it is shown that Harry S. New, candidate for the long-term senatorship, ran closely behind Mr. Goodrich in total popular vote, with a total of 337,089. His plurality over John W. Kern, his Democratic opponent, came nearest to reaching the total plurality of Goodrich. The plurality over Kern was 11,501, the total Kern vote being 325,588.

Another peculiar feature of the figures was that Kern's total was just 11 votes ahead of that of Thomas Taggart, Democratic candidate for the short term senatorship, against James E. Watson. The total vote for Taggart was 325,577, and that for Watson was 335,193, which gave Watson a plurality of 9,616.

Watson's popular vote was 1,896 behind the total popular vote for Mr. New, and the Watson plurality over Thomas Taggart was 1,885 votes less than the plurality by which Mr. New defeated John W. Kern.

The total Democratic popular vote was only slightly changed on any of the senatorship votes or the vote for governor, the total popular vote in each of the three instances being slightly in excess of 325,000. President Wilson obtained a total of 334,063 votes in Indiana, or a total of 9,003 more than the Democratic machine candidate for governor.

The official vote, officially tabulated and made public at the office of Homer L. Cook, secretary ofs tate, shows that Ed Jackson, Republican candidate for secretary of state, obtained a plurality of 14,165 votes over Homer L. Cook, his Democratic opponent. The vote for Mr Jackson was 337,851, and the vote for Mr Cook was 323,686

The total vote for James M. Zion, Progressive candidate for secretary of state, was 4,548 The vote for Ransom Pope, Prohibition candidate for the same office, was 15,567, and the vote for Max Matthews, Socialist candidate, was 21,648

The official vote for Otto L. Klauss, Republican candidate for auditor of state, was 337,254, and the official vote for Dale J. Crittenberger, the defeated Democratic candidate, was 323,832. The vote for William C. Camp, Progressive candidate for auditor of state, was 4,598. Harry Peacock, Prohibition candidate for autditor of state, received a total of 15,926 votes, and Russell Wytenbach, Socialist condidate, received 21,717 votes.

The official vote for Uz McMurtrie, Republican candidate for state treasurer, shows he received 336,912 votes, against 324,718 for George A. Bittler, the Democratic candidate. Ward A. Smith, Progressive candidate for state treasurer, got 4,458 votes; Alexander Benham, Prohibition candidate, 15,493, and Charles R. Fenimore, Socialist candidate, 21,682.

The vote for Ele Stansbury, Republican candidate for attorney general, was 336,979, and the vote for Evan B. Stotsenburg, defeated Democratic candidate, was 324,108. John H. Kingsbury, Progressive candidate for attorney general, received 4,486 votes; Tilghman E. Ballard, Prohibition candidate for this office, 15,742, and Frank S. Lamonte, Socialist candidate, 21,591.

For Highway Department.

Luke W. Duffey, who was elected at the recent election as a member of the house of representatives at the coming session of the legislature, will go to Washington within the next few days to consult with the officials of the highways bureau of the department of agriculture in regard to the kind of highway law that can be enacted by the Indiana legislature to meet with the approval of that bureau.

Duffey is planning to introduce at the opening of the session a bill to create a state highway department, and he wishes to frame the bill along lines that will meet with the approval of the government in order that Indiana may participate in the distribution of the $75,000,000 which congress has appropriated for highway building, extending over a period of five years.

Under the federal law that carried this appropriation, $5,000,000 was available the first year; $10,000,000 will be available the second year; $15,000,000 the third year; $20,000,000 the fourth year, and $25,000,000 the fifth year.

The money is distributed among the states on a basis that would give Indiana $135,000 for the first year, $270,000 for the second year and so on, but in order to be eligible to participation in this distribution a state is required to have a state highway department that meets the approval of the federal highway bureau. Indiana has no such department, and for that reason it was not eligible to participation in the first year's distribution.

Forty states have created highway departments. Most of them were along lines that enabled them to get their shares of the first year's distribution. Some, however, did not meet the requirements. Under the law, however, states that failed to meet the requirements do not lose their rights to the money, but the money remains in the hands of the government subject to payment to the state when it creates a highway department that meets the approval of the government. Therefore, if the Indiana legislature at the coming session enacts legislation along that line that is satisfactory to the government the state will, on July 1, 1917, receive $405,000 for the first two years of the distribution.

The American Dairy company, Indianapolis, has increased its capital from $10,000 to $30,000.

Emery Petroleum company of Delaware has ceased to do business in Indiana.

SHORT STATE ITEMS.

Rochester.—The home of Mrs. Etta Hida, near Lake Manitou, burned, causing a loss of $2,500, with $1,500 insurance.

Indianapolis.—Federal officers arrested Marion J. Pierson, former postmaster at Foreman, Jasper county, who was indicted for the alleged embezzlement of $66 and for alleged failure to remit about $1,500 to the postmaster at Chicago.

Indianapolis. — The federal grand jury's investigation of vote frauds in Indiana spread to the southern part of the state when Deputy United States marshals subpenaed 40 witnesses in Bartholomew county to appear before the grand jury. Many arrests already have been made in Bartholomew county by local authorities on charges of vote-buying.

South Bend.—P. E. Castleman of Argus is dead and his two sons are injured as the result of an accident due, it is thought, to inexperienced driving on the part of Peter, the fifteen-year-old son. The car left the road and Castleman was thrown out and his neck broken. Castleman had just purchased the car and was taking it home.

Greencastle.—Lona Cox, thirty-five, suffered such severe injury to his arm when working with a corn shredder near Cloverdale, that the arm was amputated by physicians. Cox is a farmer and preacher living in the southeast part of Putnam county.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Crawfordsville.—Knights of Pythias of the Ninth Indiana district met here Thursday.

Hartford City.—Miss Nettie Cook was injured when a buggy upset in a ditch. Her condition is serious.

Elwood.—Miss Elizabeth McMullen of Mount Ayr, O., has succeeded Miss Edith Wilk of Rushville as librarian of the Elwood public library.

Greensburg.—The home of William H. Miers, near Milford, was destroyed by fire. Mr. and Mrs. Miers and their son were forced to flee in their night clothes.

Newcastle.—Walter Peck was painfully hurt when he became entangled in a belt in the machine room at the Maxwell automobile factory. He was taken to a hospital.

Laporte.—Local option elections will be held within the next ninety days in Goshen, Valparaiso and Rochester, it was announced. Goshen is dry, while saloons flourish in the other two towns.

Logansport.—An automobile driven by H. O. Packard struck a baby carriage containing the five-month-old son of Mrs. Beaver. The cab was demolished, but the baby was uninjured.

Michigan City.—Karl L. Wilcoxon, thirty-eight, master mechanic of the Chicago, Lake Shore and South Bend electric railway, was instantly killed under an electric freight locomotive.

Richmond.—Newton Chafin and his wife, Leona Chafin, who pleaded guilty to contributing to the delinquency of a fifteen-year-old girl, were taken to prison to serve terms of two to 14 years.

Laporte.—Heschel Cole is in a serious condition from lockjaw as a result of being hit by the fist of Charles Zahn in an argument over a basketball game. Cole's jaw was broken. Zahn is in jail.

Indianapolis.—Ward Morris, twenty-nine, of Kokomo, was arrested here charged with robbing a pawnshop. The police said 19 rings and four revolvers were recovered from him. He is held under high bond.

Covington.—Planning to start life anew, Dr. William R. Miller, who served a prison sentence for the murder of John Sayler, a wealthy banker of Watseka, Ill., and Mrs. Lucy M. Sayler, widow of the slain man, who served a sentence for complicity in the murder, were married here. Doctor Miller obtained a divorce from his wife, who stood by him through the trial.

Terre Haute.—Judge Fred Beal of Superior court has granted a restraining order to prevent a recount of the Australian ballots cast in the election of sheriff. The order was obtained by Joseph Dreher, Democrat, whose apparent plurality over George Kreitenstein, Republican, was nine votes. Kreitenstein had obtained an order for the recount from Circuit Judge Pullman. He also has a contest case pending.

Indianapolis. — Death from eating mushrooms is an accident, the supreme court of Indianapolis held. The court allowed Grace Griffiths to recover $6,645.83 from the United States Casualty company, on an accident insurance policy for the death of her husband, who died from ptomaine poisoning after eating the mushrooms. The court upheld the Jay circuit court. The company maintained Griffiths' death was caused by disease; the supreme court said it was an accident.

Indianapolis.—J. F. Lafollette of Portland emerged victor in a hot fight for the office of junior warden of the Indiana Grand Encampment, I. O. O. F., which was sought by seven candidates. It is the steppingstone to the highest office in the grand lodge. Other offices were filled by succession: C. H. Allison of Russiaville, became a grand patriarch; W. R. Runham of Kempton, became grand high priest; A. W. Beecher of Garrett, became senior warden, and W. H. Leedy was reelected grand scribe.

Indianapolis.—The "floating farm vote"—a new discovery in vote-fraud probes—was introduced to the federal grand jury probing Indiana vote-fraud cases here. Witnesses told of alleged buying of votes of farm hands, many of whom came into Bartholomew county not long before the election. Thirty witnesses from Columbus were here to testify. Policeman Harry Pruitt declared that frauds in the country precincts were widespread, that work in the city did not compare to the frauds in the country.

Indianapolis. — Inspectors for the public service commission reported that 75 cars of coal were held in the yards at Terre Haute from November 1 to November 10 for reconsignment by Chicago and Indianapolis brokers, for the evident purpose of speculation. The inspectors also found hundreds of coal cars throughout the state on sidetracks, many loaded with scrap iron and many in need of repairs. The public service commission has taken steps to prevent reconsignment of coal on cars which makes possible speculation.

Columbus.—Police officers are combing the county for Kenneth Maynard, thirty, who escaped from Marshal Weaver of Edinburgh, by leaping from an interurban car moving at high speed. Maynard was charged with attacking Charles Van Dorn of Edinburgh, knocking the man from a scaffold on a building.

Indianapolis.—After being given his commission as United States senator, James W. Watson let it be known that John F. Hayes, at present connected with the Advance-Rumely company of Laporte, will be his private secretary.

YANK, THE TURK

by Charles Frederick

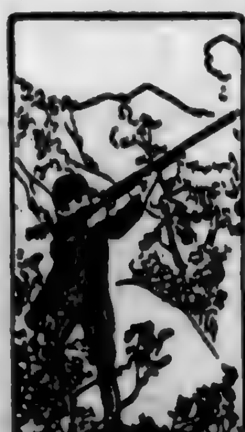
TURKEY had been a part, the principal part, of the Scott's Thanksgiving bill of fare ever since Bob could remember, real Vermont turkey that they raised on their Vermont farm and fed with corn from the Vermont hills. But the particular hill on which the Scott acres lay seemed better suited to the turkeys than to the corn; and, along in the very early spring of 1861, Bob's father decided to try a newer country to the South and West. Late March found them breaking a clearing for a new farm in East Tennessee. They got their corn in, although a little late; they bred a few hogs and a small flock of sheep; but, when they wanted turkey, they didn't go to the barnyard for it, but up into the hills; for father's trusty rifle and trusty eye were a combination no wild turkey could hope to escape.

There were plenty of rumors of war while the Yankee from Vermont was carving out a home there in the South. When war came, that Yankee made his way overland and enlisted in the company from his old valley in Vermont, leaving Bob to take the responsibility of the Tennessee farm on his young shoulders. Bob did very well; and, when November came in due course, he got the rifle down from its pegs above the fireplace and went up the hills in search of a bird. He had been up there before with his father, but this was his first turkey hunt alone.

There was a trail that led from the hog-lot up to the ridge, and along the ridge, among the granddaddy poplars and cherries and through the sweet-gum brush. Bob followed it until three that afternoon without so much as a sign of turkey; and, as he had no intention of spending a night in the hills, it began to look as though he must return empty-handed. Then suddenly he heard a racket off there to the east of the trail—

"Whir-r-r-r-"

Some great living thing swept across the ridge like a cloud. Bob's gun was up to his shoulder in an instant, although he shook with as bad a case of buck fever as a boy ever had. "Bang!" he blazed away at the flying cloud. It did not stop. He must have missed. But as the report died away he heard the whir change to a flutter, and the flutter to a thud, and the thud to a struggle in the brush down the hillside. He followed the sound of that struggle till he came upon the bird, and bird it was, a turkey not so big of body as its spread of wings had indicated, but a turkey none the less fit to grace the Scott Thanksgiving board.



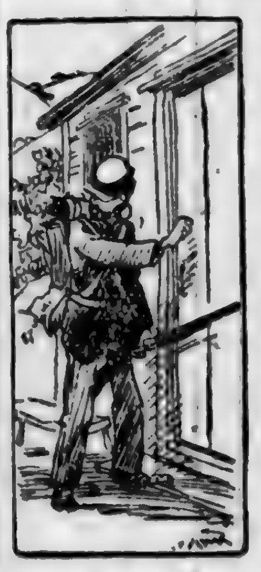
Blazed Away at the Flying Cloud.

The shot had broken its right wing. The boy decided to tote it home as it was, and he soon had it slung from his rifle barrel over his shoulder and was picking his way down the mountainside to find the trail at a lower point. It was moonlight when he reached the hog-yard, and then the house, with his trophy, which was now quite still. Having exhibited the bird to his mother and young sister, he laid it in the hay loft in the stable, and, after a full recital of his hunt, went to bed, as tired a boy as ever bagged a turkey, and probably more tired than any boy who never did.

Now, a most surprising thing happened the next morning. When Bob opened the stable door the turkey was still there, but it was standing on both feet and with one wing trailing on the ground. And, instead of fluttering away as a regular wild turkey should, it looked up at him with a look half curiosity and half appeal. It hopped a few steps away when he approached, and then allowed Bob to touch it with his hand.

"Well, fellow," said Bob, "you don't seem to be very much a-scart."

He looked at the wounded wing, then scratched his head a moment, and then was off to the cabin on a run, shutting the stable door behind him. When he returned he went to work with bandages. He may not have been much of a surgeon or a bonesetter, but what he lacked in skill he made up in good intentions. Meanwhile his enthusiasm regarding the Thanksgiving feast rather oozed away from him.



Cautious Knock on the Cabin Door.

"If it's all the same to you, ma," he said that night, "I'd a-just as soon have bacon fer dinner tomorrow."

"All right, sonny," the mother laughed and agreed. And that is how Yank became a member of the Scott family. For Yank he was named. To Southern partisans it was a term of opprobrium, but to Bob a term of affection—so everybody was satisfied.

By good financiering in the spring Mrs. Scott was able to add a small flock of fowls to the Scott possessions, including some turkeys. With these Yank mingled, not without a tinge of condescension. He never did recover the use of that wing, but he could run like a dog, using the good left wing as a plane now and then to lift him to the top of a fence. If Olive Chanute, the inventor of the aeroplane, had seen Yank, we might have had that invention a half century before we did. Yank showed no disposition to leave the Scott place, seeming to prefer the good corn to woodland pickings.

It was seldom that any word or rumor trickled through from Bob's father, and then there was a silence of months that left the Scott household very solemn indeed. The sympathies of the neighbors were Southern; but, be it recorded to their credit, they treated the Scotts with just as much kindness as if the head of the family had not gone into the Union army. But when the guerrillas began to operate in the valleys below, there was reason for some uneasiness, regardless of one's sympathies.

One morning, just at the break of dawn, there was a cautious knock on the cabin door. Trembling with apprehension, the family roused itself. The latch lifted, but the man who entered was clothed in blue. Bob could scarcely believe that this red-bearded man was his father.

His story was short and soon told. He had been wounded and separated from his regiment. When he recovered, he was assigned, quite willingly, to a detail to round up the guerrillas; and, as he was familiar with the vicinity he was now scouting on their trail. He was to lie quiet that day, gathering such information as he could, and return to his comrades that night.

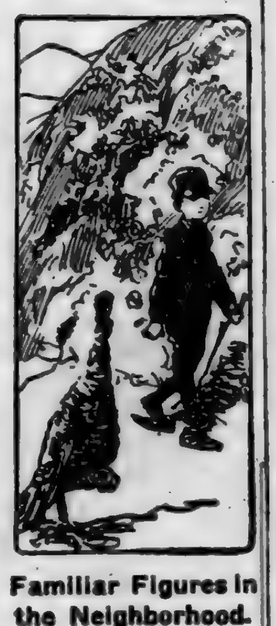
"I tell you, pop," cried Bob. "I'll go down below and see what I can see and let you know!" It appealed to the boy's desire for adventure and to the soldier's desire for information. So, after some reluctance and many cautions, the boy was allowed to go. To divert suspicion, for the turkey would attract more attention than the boy, Yank was permitted to accompany him. The boy and the bird were familiar figures in the neighborhood.

Three miles from home a voice laughed, "Here's a turk fer your dinner, captain," and Bob found he had walked into a hornets' nest. They took the two to a cabin a little back from the pike and asked the boy a few questions, without gaining any information. Nor did he loose his hold on Yank, though the bird struggled to be free. A black-browed giant entered.

"There's a Yank up on the ridge in a cabin thar, and a hundred of 'em yonder on the tother side."

"You fellahs make a ride for it at sundown," said the captain, "and grab that Yank. They are the fellahs that hung Jed Speed. We'll have a little hangin' party ourselves."

What could Bob do to warn his father? Run for it himself? That was hopeless. Then he thought of Yank. Hardly knowing why, he let go his hold. There was a squawk and a flutter, a man at the door was nearly knocked from his feet, and a feathered thing that half ran and half flew made for the pike and the woods beyond.



Familiar Figures in the Neighborhood.

"He got away!" "Thar goes your dinner, captain," and a half-dozen shots all came at the same instant. As for the boy, he poured outdoors with the rest and plunged into the woods back of the cabin.

Two hours later a turkey, both of whose wings drooped now, the left one stained with blood, fluttered into the Scott clearing. To go to the boy was the father's first thought, to go for help the second and better one. It was a bit risky, but over the ridge he went and down the mountainside.

Bob circled and crossed the pike a mile above. On a white stone by the road he saw a drop of red. "Well, they hit him but didn't git him," he said.

That evening, just as the sun dipped to the West, there was another hornets' nest on the ridge. But this time it was the enemy that walked into it. There was time for only a few shots. But the guerrilla captain heard them in the valley below and decided that it would be well to move on, leaving his missing men to join him as best they could.

But they never did. Next night, 20 miles away, the captain turned to one of his men and asked:

"Do you reckon that fool bird had anything to do with it?"

As for Yank, the battle-scarred veteran, what was one wing more or less? He lived to see peace return to the mountains, and to all Tennessee, and to the nation. And you may be sure he never played the principal part in any Thanksgiving dinner.

(Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

Cause for Thanks.

There have been times in the history of the country when Thanksgiving day was rather the occasion of expressions of hope for blessings to come than of gratitude for those being enjoyed, but even so the nation has not been unmindful of its peculiar position as the most fortunate of the countries of the earth. Much more, then, should there be thankfulness on every side today when not only are the people of the land enjoying peace while thousands mourn abroad, but with peace is plenty in contrast with the hunger that stalks elsewhere to carry out the horror that shot and shell did not complete,

MY THANKSGIVING

For all the good my days afford,
  For all the blessings on me poured,
For every kindly act and word,
  I thank Thee, Lord.

I thank Thee, Lord, for thoughts that roam
  Beyond the narrow walls of home
To gather good from days to come,
  And from the past.

I thank Thee, Lord, for length of days,
  For guidance through life's devious ways,
And in the darkness for the rays
  Of light and love.

I thank Thee e'en for hours of gloom,
  For crushing grief, and darkened room;
For in the shadow Thou didst come
  To heal and bless.

I thank Thee that the weight of things
  No longer binds my soul's free wings,
Than she can soar, and soaring sings
  Thy praise, O Lord!

That sea and mountain, flower and tree,
  Their message bring to me of Thee,
And fill my soul with ecstasy,
  I thank Thee, Lord.

And so not only on this day,
  When many hearts thanksgiving say,
But now forever and alway,
  I thank Thee, Lord!

BRONZE BEST LIKED

Beautiful Plumage and Large Size Has Given This Turkey First Place.

THE bronze turkey holds the place of honor among its tribe. It is a cross between the wild and the tame turkey. Its beautiful, rich plumage and its size have come from its wild progenitors. To maintain these desirable qualities crosses are continually made. In this way the mammoth size has been gained. Their standard weight ranges from 16 to 36 pounds, according to age and sex. Probably more of this variety are grown each year than of all others.

The coloring of this variety is a ground of black, blazoned or shaded with bronze. This shading is rich and glowing, and when the sun's rays are reflected from these colors they shine like polished steel.

The Narragansett turkeys are next in size to the bronze. They are of black ground color, each feather ending with a band of steel gray, edged with black. This imparts a grayish cast to the entire surface plumage. Mixed with this is the finish of metallic black and bronze luster.

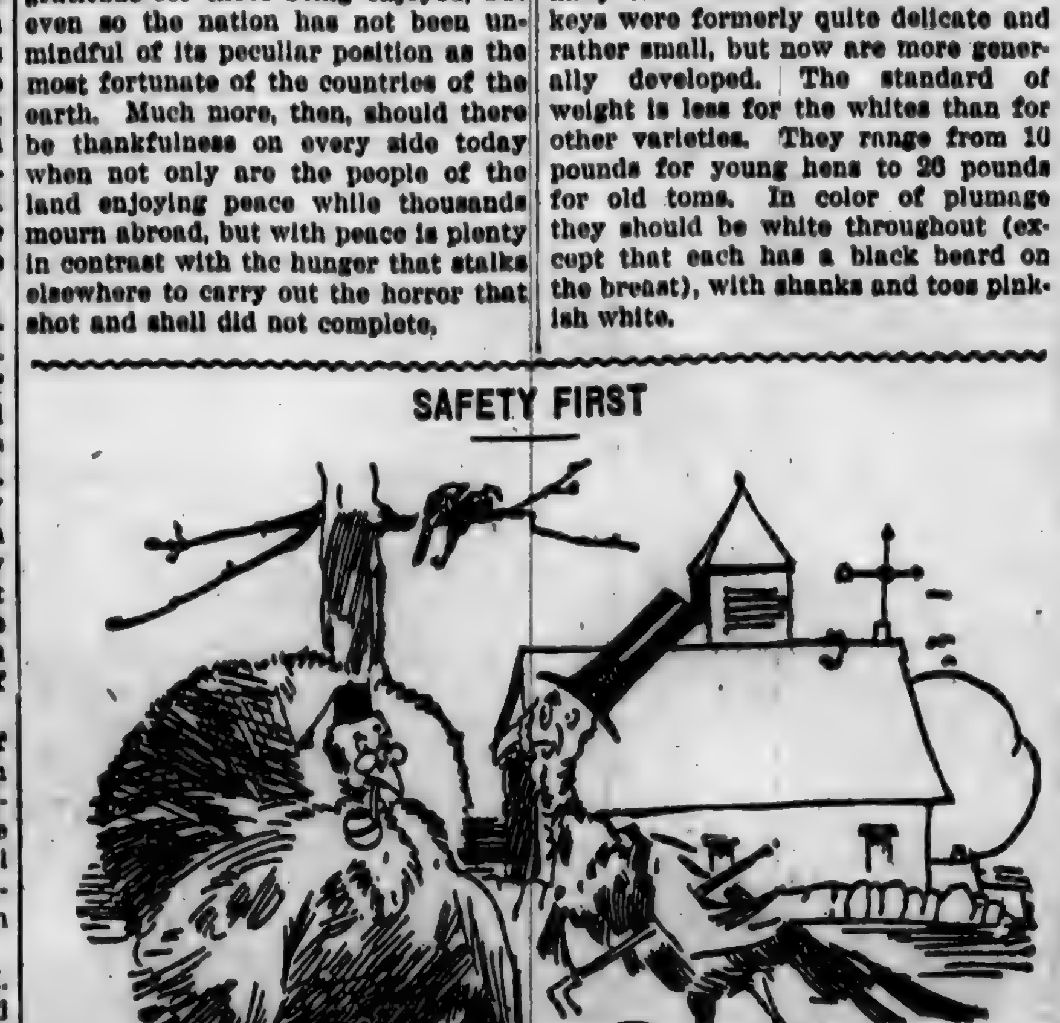
The standard weights of this variety are, for males, from 24 to 30 pounds; for females, from 12 to 18 pounds. Some old males of both this and the bronze variety weigh over 40 pounds.

The buff turkey is not generally known throughout the country. In many localities it is almost unknown. The standard calls for a pure buff color throughout, but this shade of coloring is seldom seen. As bred for market these turkeys are of a reddish buff or light chestnut color mixed with white and some dark shadings. They are highly valued in some localities for their quick growth and for their attractiveness when dressed. Their average weight is several pounds less than that of the Narragansett.

The slate turkey might be called a blue turkey. They about average in size with the buffs and blacks. They range from 10 to 25 pounds, according to age and sex. The black color ranges from small spots to larger markings, but the less of this the better for exhibition purposes. It might be surmised that the slate turkey originated from a cross of white and black turkeys.

In America the white turkey is called the white Holland turkey. The reason for this is not apparent, though some think it is so called because it originally came from Holland. White turkeys were formerly quite delicate and rather small, but now are more generally developed. The standard of weight is less for the whites than for other varieties. They range from 10 pounds for young hens to 26 pounds for old toms. In color of plumage they should be white throughout (except that each has a black beard on the breast), with shanks and toes pinkish white.

SAFETY FIRST



"I see by the market reports that turkeys are going to be higher."
"You can bet your life we are. We're going to be as high as the tallest trees we can find."

Temperance Notes

"PERSONAL LIBERTY" EXHIBIT.

An antialcohol exhibit in a certain town faced several saloons located just across the street, the proprietors of which were reported to bitterly resent the prohibition facts presented. Threats were said to have been made by them, so that the special night watchman employed gave much of the time to careful guarding of this exhibit. The town appears to be something of a rendezvous for personal liberty agitators. These people were the first to "size up" the exhibits, and continually some of them were circulating among the people ready for a discussion.

One day a foreign-born citizen stood at the W. C. T. U. booth and fell into conversation. He professed to believe in temperance all right, but he had a right to do as he pleased in his own home, etc. Presently he was joined by another man who talked loudly after the same fashion. Soon quite a little company had gathered to listen and occasionally take part in the "free for all." Suddenly right into their midst lurched a man who immediately began to take part in the discussion. He was drunk and said so, but informed them that liquor was the worst curse in the world; that though he was a drinking man he meant to vote dry every time. He was allowed to talk until everyone present realized the situation, then the director of the exhibit turned to the two defenders of personal liberty and remarked, "Gentlemen, here is a sample of the product of what you are advocating and defending. How do you like the exhibit?" There was no reply and soon they had disappeared, seeming to just melt away in silence.

BAD JOKE.

"Alcohol as a food is a joke, and rather a bad joke at that," affirms Dr. Woods Hutchinson.

"Alcohol does not do for us a single one of the things we think it does, and it does a score of other things which we have no idea of when we drink it.

"Thirty years ago we were blandly confident that alcohol was a food because it could be burned in the body. Now, we know that the total amount of alcohol which can be burned in the body in 24 hours is only two ounces, which would be about the same amount of energy as one good slice of bread and butter; that is to say, about one-tenth of the fuel required to keep us alive.

"If we were to attempt to use alcohol as a serious source of nourishment we should be blind drunk before we had taken more than one-fifth of the amount needed for a day's rations.

"Moreover, even in the small amount which can be daily consumed and burned up in the body, its poisonous effects are at least 50 per cent greater than its food value.

It throws the body engine out of gear almost twice as much as it puts fuel into its fire-box. The amount of malt taken with it in beer and fruit-sugars in wine are so trifling as to be not worth counting in our day's food supply."

WORK FOR EVERYBODY.

"I saw not a single man who was looking for a job as the result of the closing of the saloons, breweries and distilleries," said a former resident of Seattle, after a visit to that city. "On the contrary, I heard on every hand that there was more work than laborers to do it. I was told by someone from the Industrial Brotherhood, a refuge for 'down and outs,' that there was actually nobody without employment who was able to work. You know that for two winters preceding the going into effect of the prohibitory law, we had in Seattle what they called 'Hotel Liberty,' at which, during the last winter there were housed about 2,500 men out of employment. That has now ceased to exist; in fact I am told by those who know, that last winter there was no bread line in the city at any point."

EVEN PENNSYLVANIA.

That supposedly impregnable stronghold of liquordom, the state of Pennsylvania, is, like every other state of the Union, giving way before advancing prohibition sentiment. Five years ago it had two dry counties; today it has eleven. In 1911 there was one saloon for every 681 persons; today there is one for every 737. In 1911 there were about 700 square miles of dry territory; today there are 12,300. In 1911, 60,000 people of the state lived in no-license territory; today there are 1,500,000, nearly one-fifth of the total population. It is stated that of the 1,700 saloons in Philadelphia, 200 are on the market. One broker advertises that he has 100 for sale.

WHAT SALOON SAYS.

Today the saloon says to the government, "Don't bother me. The wage-workers of this country have $2,000,000 in their pocketbooks that I want to pick. You let me get at it and I'll divide the swag with you."—Billy Sunday.

UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENT.

"I have a boy (or girl) at home" ought to be the unanswerable argument against the legalized liquor traffic for every man who is privileged to be a father.

Not a Breath of Suspicion.

Many men, although they may not care to confess it, need to guard against lapsus linguae. A case in point is that of a prisoner who was addressing a court over which Lord Russell was presiding. A very nice story the prisoner was telling of an offense alleged against him of which he was wholly guiltless—he, a man against whom there had never before been a breath of suspicion.

"Prisoner, pardon me one moment," interrupted Russell. "You must speak a little louder! I cannot catch what you say. What was your last sentence?"

And "Six months, m' lord," came the amazing reply from that fatally facile tongue.

IT'S YOUR KIDNEYS

You have swollen feet and hands! Stiff, achy joints! Sharp-shooting, rheumatic pains torture you. You have aching back, pain in the lower abdomen, difficulty when urinating! Look out! These are danger signals. Trouble is with your kidneys. Uric acid poisoning, in one form or another, has set in. It may lead to dropsy or fatal Bright's disease if not checked.

Get some GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. They are an old preparation, used all over the world for centuries, combining natural healing oil and herbs, well-known to physicians and used by thousands in their daily practice. The Capsules are not an experimental, make-shift "patent medicine," or "salt," whose effect is only temporary. They are a standard remedy, and act naturally, gently and quickly. But when you go to the druggist, insist on getting the pure, original Haarlem Oil in Capsules. Be sure the name GOLD MEDAL is on the box, and thus protect yourself against counterfeits. Adv.

Very Much So.

"Is this really cut glass?"

"I should say so! Cut from $1.25 to 98 cents."

To keep clean and healthy take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate liver, bowels and stomach.—Adv.

A preacher's life would be awfully tame if it wasn't for weddings.

We all squander money on schemes that won't work.

Getting Old Too Fast?

Late in life the body shows signs of wear and often the kidneys weaken first. The back is lame, bent and achy, and the kidney action distressing. This makes people feel older than they are. Don't wait for dropsy, gravel, hardening of the arteries or Bright's disease. Use a mild kidney stimulant. Try Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands of elderly folks recommend them.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. Louis Melcher, 608 E. North St., Crown Point, Ind., says: "Heavy lifting weakened my kidneys and my back grew so lame I could hardly get around. My kidneys acted irregularly and dizzy and nervous spells came on. My sight often blurred, too. I got so bad, I thought I would die. Soon after I used Doan's Kidney Pills, I improved and continued use completely cured me."

School Fair Big Success

The Coburn's Corners School Fair was held Thursday, Nov. 23, in the afternoon and evening. The attendance was good at both sessions One dialogue "Everybody Helped" was dramatized by the sixth grade, Owen and Harold Waltz, and was very well played. The display was divided in two departments:-the Domestic Science department and Agriculture department. The entries were numerous in both departments One thing very noticeable was the entries in Domestic Science by the boys, and in Agriculture by the girls.

The prizes awarded in the Domestic Department were as follows:—Handkerchiefs, 1st. prize, Lucy Place, 2nd., prize, Harold Waltz; Needle work, 1st., prize, Alto Headley, 2nd., Olen Waltz, 3rd., Garnett Headley; Skirt Hangers, 1st., Violette Dermott, 2nd. PREPARES REPORT ON STATE'S INSANE

NEW LAWS RECOMMENDED TO PERMIT DEFECTIVES TO VOLUNTARILY ENTER HOSPITAL.

BASIS FOR RECOMMENDATIONS

Figures Based on a Survey Shows That One Per Cent of the Population of Indiana Is Epileptic or Feeble-Minded.

Indianapolis.—Enactment of a statute to provide for vountary admission to a state insane hospital is one of the recommendations that will be made to Governor Ralston by the committee on mental defectives which the governor appointed a year ago to study the subject, and to prepare a report, with recommendations to be submitted to the legislature.

The members of the committee are Rev. F. H. Gavisk, member of the board of state charities, chairman; Dr. George S. Bliss, superintendent of the school for feeble-minded youth, Fort Wayne; State Senator D. Frank Culbertson, Vincennes; Dr. George F. Edenharter, superintendent of the Central Hospital for the Insane, Indianapolis; Dr. Charles P. Emerson, dean of the Indiana university school of medicine, Indianapolis; Representative Charles A. McGonable, Muncie; Dr. Samuel E. Smith, superintendent of the Eastern Hospital for the Insane, Richmond, and Dr. W. C. Van-Nuys, superintendent of the village for epileptics, Newcastle. Amos W. Butler, secretary of the board of state charities, is secretary of the committee.

The recommendation for a law to permit voluntary admission to insane hospitals is based, on the need for some institution where a person who believes his mentality affected may go voluntarily for treatment, avoiding the stigma that attaches to being declared insane by a commission under legal proceedings. It is pointed out that there should be a place for treatment of mental patients of that class, just as there are hospitals to which a sick person may go voluntarily for the treatment of bodily ills. Such a system is in effect in several states.

The committee, in making its investigation of the subject of mental defectives in Indiana, began by selecting two counties which were regarded as typical Indiana counties. A complete survey and study of these two counties was made, and on the results of this survey the committee based its estimates for the state.

Judging from the figures produced in the two counties, the committee says the ratio of epileptics in Indiana is 1.85 for each 1,000 population. This means that there are about 5,000 epileptics in Indiana. Only about 1,000 of these are under the care of the state. It is estimated that there are about 1,300 insane persons outside of the state institutions who need state care. There are, according to the report, about 20,000 feeble-minded persons of all grades in Indiana. Six thousand of these, it is said in the report, should be under state care, but there is at present provision for only 1,400 at the school for feeble-minded youth at Fort Wayne.

The report says much of the retardation of pupils in schools, and much pauperism, dependency and crime is due to mental defectiveness.

In the two counties in which the committee made its survey it was found that the mental defectives inhabit the poorer lands, and another peculiar feature was that most of them live on poor lands near streams. In one county the committee found a township of poor land in which a small percentage of the inhabitants were normal mentally. This condition, it was said, was due to the fact that many persons who were normal moved away, leaving mentally deficient persons remaining in the community. The latter intermarried and reared families, and the strain of mental defectiveness was traced among them.

The committee says in its report that it found the following facts:

1. That other states are taking up the same subject and giving it careful study.
2. One per cent of the general population of the state is insane, epileptic or feeble-minded.
3. That 9,662 persons, or 37 per cent of the entire population, is dependent on public support, and is cared for by the state.
4. That mental defectiveness is a large factor in the cause of crime, delinquency, pauperism, inefficiency and many other social ills.
5. That further study of the cause of mental defectiveness is imperative.

The committee makes the following recommendations in the report:

In the general hospitals of the state, such as St. Vincent's, the Methodist and the Deaconess in this city, there should be wards for the intensive treatment of cases of insanity, because early treatment of persons mentally diseased is more effective.

Voluntary admission to state insane hospitals for the treatment of the chronic insane.

Additional colony facilities should be provided at the School for Feeble-Minded Youth at Ft. Wayne.

The gradual development of the village for epileptics at Newcastle.

Laws respecting the marriage of insane and feeble-minded persons should be more strictly enforced.

There should be mental examination, as well as a medical examination, of pupils in the schools.

Special schools in connection with the public school system should be established for mentally defective pupils.

Good Roads Men to Meet.

A second meeting of representatives of state organizations that are interested in the movement for a state highway department, to consider a tentative draft of a bill providing for such a department, is planned by the leaders of the movement, according to a letter which is being sent out to the heads of those organizations.

The meeting will be held in Indianapolis some time next month. The men who are urging this proposal desire that it be emphasized that there is no factional control of the movement, and that their only desire is to formulate a measure that will insure the best highway department, and will represent the wishes of all the organizations interested.

The letter is signed by a committee, appointed at the meeting, November 2, and composed of Charles A. Bookwalter of Indianapolis, William M. Jones of Fairmount and A. G. Lupton of Hartford City. It says:

"The Indiana state organization highway committee is to be made up primarily of one representative from each statewide organization in this state that is interested in good roads for Indiana. This committee was arranged for at a meeting in the Claypool hotel, November 2, which was attended by representtives from various motor clubs and state-wide organizations, of which, all told, there were about 30. It was further arranged that this committee be selected by the undersigned.

"The duty of the Indiana state organizations highway committee is to draft a bill for presentation at the next general assembly to create a state highway department for Indiana. At the meeting November 2, a set of resolutions was adopted to serve as a guide to the committee in drafting the bill, and when it is completed another general meeting will be held, so as to give all interested parties a chance to express their opinions.

"We believe that you are interested, and ask that either you personally represent your organization or send us within the next few days the name of someone who can. It is desired that every good roads interest in the state, so far as practicable, be represented in this committee."

2,001 Students at I. U.

The statistics of Indiana university, prepared annually for the magazine Science, have been completed, and they show a number of interesting figures. The enrollment for this semester is 2,001. The total enrollment for the year, which includes the summer session and the present semester, and excluding all duplications, is 2,855. The total enrollment for the summer session was 1,121. Of the 1,121 in the summer session, 267 are in the university this semester.

The total attendance for last year was 2,669. The total attendance at present for this year is 2,855, an increase of 186 over the grand total of last year. As the spring semester is always the largest of the year, it is now certain that the enrollment for the year will considerably exceed 3,000.

The attendance of 2,855 for this year includes the following: College of liberal arts, men, 969; college of liberal arts, women, 722; law, 89; medicine, 107; graduate school, 114; fine arts, 81; commerce, 74; education, 285; journalism, 71; literary science, 7; music, 107.

Praises Utilities Commission.

Leonard Metcalf of Boston, Mass., authority on public utilities questions, told the members of the Saturday Lunch club Saturday noon that the Indiana public service commission ranks among the six most important in the United States and explained something of the problems which such state organizations must solve. Mr. Metcalf, who is an expert witness in the water company hearing before the Indiana commission, spoke at the club luncheon on "General Questions of Public Utilities and Their Control." The other state commissions he mentioned as important were those of New York, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, California and New Jersey.

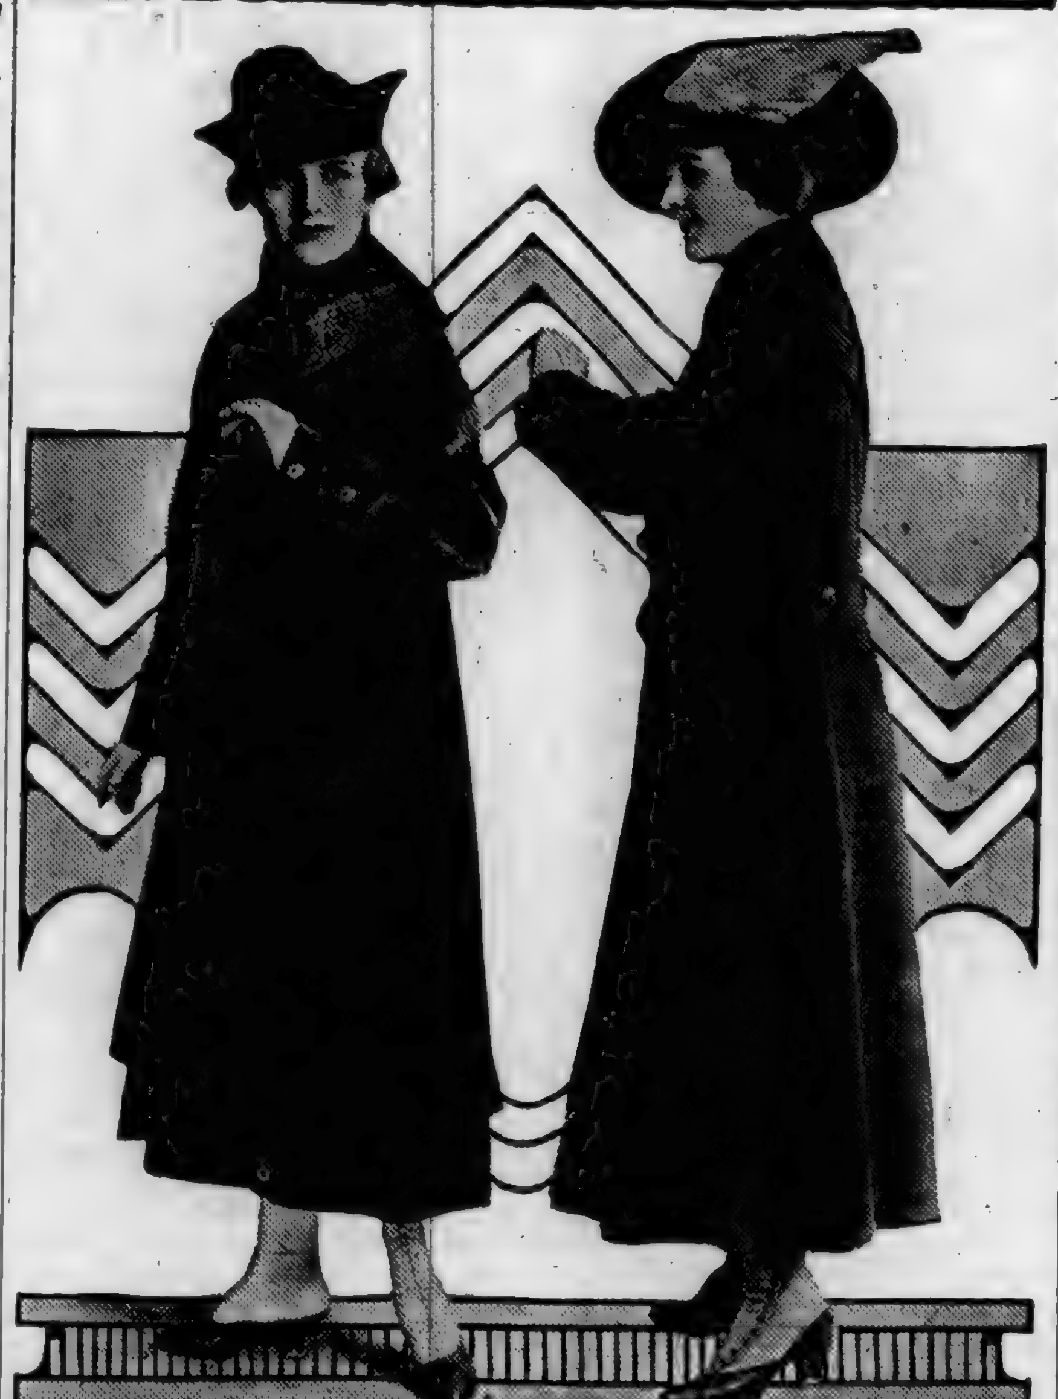
Distinction in Plain Coats



The plain coat, like the tailored suit, is in perfect taste when, with the means at hand, it arrives at distinction. Its success depends upon choice of material and color, to begin with, and on beautiful and sensible lines and faultless workmanship. These set off and emphasize such fashions of the hour as are incorporated in the details of its finishing, as, at the present time, the muffler collar or accepted novelties in buttons.

There is diversity enough in materials and styles to suit everyone. Velour cloth, zibeline, Bolivia, and other cloakings, velvet, velveteen, and plushes, promise a triumph of those who understand adapting fabrics to style. There are colors that would save the plainest coat from tameness, as the burgundy, fieldmouse, and mustard shades, that vie with the browns, blues, and greens of this season.

Two models of exceptional excellence in plain coats present themselves in the picture. One is a coat of striped plush in brown. It hangs straight from shoulder to hem and has a convertible collar. Its wide belt extends only across the front and is finished with a single large button. By way of ornament nothing is allowed except two buttons on each cuff and two on each side of the collar.

The other coat, of heavy velour cloth, is long enough to cover the dress and is shaped to define the figure vaguely by a very original and clever management of the belt. Belts that fail to find their way entirely round the figure are a fad of the season. This one starts at each side of the back and fastens with a button at the front. It slips through slashes in the cloth and gathers up the fullness about the waist in this way. All the ends are pointed and fastened down with buttons.

Three rows of machine stitching provide the tailored finish of the cape-collar, cuffs, and belt, and the cuffs are allowed an adornment of three buttons.

Now That Christmas Is Near

Just now Christmas fills the horizon and empties the pocketbooks of shoppers, who find a greater number of novelties than ever to tempt them. There is a furore for chick bags of all kinds. Shopping bags, opera bags, and vanity bags for personal use, and bags for holding nearly all their belongings, make it easy to please woman friends. But, not to overdo this particular luxury, there are other dainty receptacles made to be decorative, while they are useful on table or dresser.

Here are two pretty gifts which can be made at home or bought in the shops. One of them will serve as a gift to a man, who will find some use for a small basket in a world given to swallowing up collar and cuff buttons, tie clasps and pins. It may be made large enough to hold handkerchiefs. It is a wicker basket in the form of a small hamper with a lid, and it is gilded and decorated with a band and bow of narrow bright green satin ribbon.

Although the lid is on, a small impish doll appears to be escaping through it, or else holding it down. The doll is dressed in skating cap and coat of white eiderdown and makes a rollicking-looking pin cushion.

An elegant and utterly feminine belonging appears in the round box, which may serve to hold handkerchiefs or veils or ribbons or others of the many accessories of dress which must be kept within easy reach on the well-ordered dressing table. It is a pasteboard box with a lid and is covered first with rose-colored silk or satin. The top is interlined with cotton batting, and the satin covering and lining are glued to place.

After the silk covering is adjusted it is covered with fine knife-plaited val lace sewed to the silk. Gold braid is sewed about the side of the lid and just below it on the box. An ornamental braid of tiny green leaves and pink roses is used to form a star on top, with a little bouquet of ribbon flowers at the center. The same braid is placed below the gold braid on the box.

Inside the Fur.

Many women object to the unbecomingness of fur worn close against the face. To counteract this effect one can make very attractive white collars to be worn just inside the fur. Something on the turnover idea is in the mind of the writer. Of course, the collar for this purpose should be somewhat wider than the ordinary turnovers. A very pretty collar might be made with three or four points. By using such a pattern the introduction of white would not be so pronounced as it would be if a solid strip of white fell over the fur collar. The points might be finished with a crocheted edge. Or it might be hemmed and each point ornamented with an embroidery design. Do the work in white, or introduce the suit color on the collar if you wish, but avoid a combination of colors.

Substitute for Fur.

A curious and effective substitute for fur invented by an American designer is a cloth made of angora yarn crocheted into a fabric such as is often used for babies' caps. In soft gray this makes very effective banding, and the model for which it was first designed, a smoky gray Russian costume of heavy, soft silk, with high collar, cuffs, wide coat band and several narrow skirt bands, is exceedingly good-looking and original.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 10

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH.

LESSON TEXT—Rev. 2:1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life.—Rev. 2:10.

This passage most wonderfully illustrates that dominating purpose of Paul's life. More than most lessons a map will be necessary to locate distinctly the places mentioned. There are interesting stories in connection with each of the seven cities and churches. It might be wise to give to seven different people the task of bringing information to the class regarding each one mentioned.

I. Ephesus, whose love is waning (vv. 1-7). The key word to these messages is the word "overcometh." In each of the messages our Lord describes himself in a different way according to the peculiar needs of that particular church. Here he is represented as holding the stars (messengers of the churches, Ch. 1:20) in his right hand, and keeping them secure, controlling them while he walks in the midst of the seven golden lamp stands, literally churches. The symbolism of "lamp stand" is used because the churches were intended to be light bearers as they held forth the light given by the oil of the Spirit (Math. 5:16; Phil. 2:16; Zech. 4:2-6). Ephesus was the capital of a province said to be one of the richest in the Roman empire. In it was the great temple of Diana. Here Paul had labored and had various experiences, and to Ephesus he had written a letter (See lesson 8, third quarter), but there were good things to be found in this Ephesian church (vv. 2,3). Forty years after being founded, John writes this message. He knew their "works," their general moral conduct, especially its active and passive sides through its trials, its dealing with impostors and its practical energy and enterprise; and its patience (literally steadfast assurance) in bearing witness for Christ. Jesus knew of their never wearying endurance. Surely these things would indicate pretty nearly a model church. Jesus says, "No, there is something seriously wrong," so seriously wrong that unless repented of he would remove them out of their place.

II. Smyrna, the church with a crown of life (vv. 8-11). Smyrna was 40 or 50 miles from Ephesus, and at this time a city of 250,000 inhabitants. To this church the Son of Man (Ch. 1:11) sends another message. It is interesting to note that this church and the one at Philadelphia received from the Master unqualified praise. It had works, activities; it also had tribulations, riches and poverty (for thou art rich) rich in good works, rich toward God, rich in treasures laid up in heaven; however, it was in the midst of persecution. It was here that Polycarp labored, who afterward, as bishop of Smyrna, was martyred (see v. 10). Of Polycarp it is said that rather than save his life by renouncing Christ he cried out, "Eighty and six years have I served him, and he has done me no ill; how then can I blaspheme my king who hath saved me." The crown is eternal life, the crown of victory. The second death is the final condemnation which sinners undergo at the judgment seat of God.

III. Pergamos, the church in a stronghold of faith (vv. 12-17). Our glorified Lord knew that the church in Pergamos was in a peculiarly difficult situation, that it was Satan's headquarters, his "throne" (v. 13); hence they were in especial need of a defender and the Lord is represented as "he that hath a sharp, two-edged sword," the word of God (Heb. 4:12-13; John 5:22). Pergamos was almost fifty miles north of Smyrna, a city of about 17,000 inhabitants, and the capital of the province. To it were brought many of the early Christians who were compelled to suffer martyrdom. Again we have a church whose works are commended, whose steadfastness is mentioned in that they "held fast to my name, and not denied the faith"—martyrs (vv. 13). However, dangers threatened them for there had been a compromise with the world and with other systems of faith, what we would call to-day liberality in doctrine and breadth in view in teaching: (1) Some of their number had accepted and practiced the doctrine of Baalim (Jude 11; Num. 31-16). (2) These teachings cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel (v. 14). This was done by persuading the Israelites to join in the idolatrous feasts and revelings of the heathen, and also their impurity of worship.

In the remaining part of the chapter we have some glimpses of the remaining four churches, the good that was to be cherished and the evil that was to be overcome.

Perhaps the most suggestive of all is that of Laodicea, the lukewarm church.

Lukewarmness is one of the most deadly evils to overcome, and hence the highest and most glorious of all the promises suggested ends with "I will give him to sit down with me in my throne as I also overcame and sat down with my father in his throne" (Am. R. V.)

NEW BELGIAN ARMY PREPARING FOR GREAT OFFENSIVE

The newly equipped Belgian army is completing preparations for a great offensive. The soldiers are the equals of the troops of the other warring powers, and furthermore they are imbued with the desire to avenge the invasion of their country. The photograph shows sublieutenants of cavalry jumping over the barriers on their mounts at one of the military field instruction camps.

TRAINS TOO SLOW FOR HIM

Representative-elect O. D. Bleakley of Franklin, Pa., couldn't get to Washington fast enough, so a few days ago he chartered an airplane and made the trip in record-breaking time. His sky chauffeur was Sergeant Ocker of the flying corps of the United States army. The trip, which was made without mishap, marks the first time in the history of the capital that a congressman has arrived via the air route.

Kilauea.

When the Hawaiian islands decided to become a part of the United States we acquired, besides our first royal family and our most beautiful and exotic tropic garden spot, the largest active and up-to-date volcano in the world. Kilauea has not been advertised like Vesuvius and Pelee, by virtue of recent destructive eruptions, nor like Popocatepetl, by a jewel of a name that would have made the fortune of anybody perspicacious enough to apply it to a new brand of chewing gum. Retiring by disposition, of recent years at least, and attending to business in a good-natured way, with only a few minor eruptions to show that he is still on the job, Kilauea needs advertising.

GUN THAT PROTECTS THE TOURAINE

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

With a 75-millimeter gun mounted on her forward deck, the French liner Touraine made a warlike appearance as she steamed up New York harbor, once again in safe waters after a dash through the German submarine net. This is the first picture taken of the gun, which heretofore has been jealously guarded from neutral eyes.

Temperance Notes

NEW ATHLETE.

The following is from an article in Association Men, contributed by L. C. Reimann, left tackle in the University of Michigan:

The day of the "bottle-scarred" hero is gone, and the new type of athlete is taking his place. The first question the student body asks of a football hero is: "Do you drink?" His popularity will hang upon his general manner of living. All the best coaches and trainers in the country absolutely forbid drinking of intoxicants during the training season and keep a watchful eye on their men the year round. The first infraction of the rule against drinking is dealt with harshly by the coach and athletic directors. The second means unqualified dismissal from the squad. This has been found the only way to deal with such cases, for Coach "Hurry-Up" Yost says he has no time to waste trying to train a drinker, and nothing tries a man's staying powers like football.

* * * * * * *

While the old type of athlete is passing out, the "new athlete" is coming in rapidly and is aligning himself in the fight for dry territory. He is typified by such men as Jack Watson, captain of the Illinois football team and president of the Y. M. C. A.; "Cub" Buck, captain of the Wisconsin football team and president of the Y. M. C. A.; Rutherford, the football star and president of the University of Nebraska Y. M. C. A.; Mike Dorizas, University of Pennsylvania, champion strong man of the East and all-round athlete; Hobson of Yale, Brickley of Harvard, and hundreds of the foremost athletes of the United States. Such men are forming a line of offense against booze and all forms of dissipation, because they know that no man can combine drink and good playing. Eddie Collins, the White Sox star, says: "You can't bat .300 if you bat around all night," and one of his ten commandments to young athletes is: "Don't drink alcoholic drinks." Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, said in 1910 of the team which won the world's baseball championship, that 15 of the 25 players "did not even know the taste of liquor," and predicted that in five years 90 per cent of all baseball players would be strictly temperate.

SALOON AND WORKINGMAN.

Saloon politicians are the worst enemies of the laboring man's rights. They get plenty of money to buy free beer and whisky to debauch the electorate. They raise the cry of "personal liberty," and with solid saloon support, the honest workingman has no show against them.

The saloon fills workhouses and penitentiaries with its victims, and their labor is brought into competition with free labor, to the injury thereof.

The saloon is labor's worst enemy. The sooner working men realize the fact, the better it will be for them. The corrupt politician thrives through the saloon and corrupt politicians are bleeding this country to death, bringing it down to conditions of older and less resourceful countries. The abolishment of the saloons will not bring labor immediately all that labor ought to have, but it will be the removing of the greatest obstacle to labor's success.

The working people of the United States earned more money each year for the distillery and brewery kings of America than was paid to all the kings and emperors of Europe.

Working people are now asserting their rights and are freeing themselves from slavery to the inhuman liquor traffic and the dominance of an aristocracy of beer.—John F. Cunneen, Labor Leader, Chicago.

RAILROAD TRAVEL SAFER.

To guard over 450,000,000 passengers for a total distance of over 10,000,000,000 of miles (400,000 times around the world) without the loss of the life of a single passenger, is a railway record of which to be proud. These figures are given by a certain eastern railroad system as a total record in announcing also the fact that in the first six months of 1916 over 92,000,000 were carried on the system without the loss of a single passenger's life.

A WANT AD.

Johnson, the drunkard, is dying today,
With marks of sin on his face;
He'll be missed at the club, at the bar, at the play;
Wanted—a boy in his place.
Boys from the fireside, boys from the farm,
Boys from the home and the school,
Come, leave your misgivings, there can be no harm
Where "drink and be merry's" the rule.
Wanted—for every lost servant of men
Someone to live without grace;
Someone to die without pardon divine,
Have you a boy for the place?

WHAT RUM MEN WANT.

The rum men declare that they want their business licensed, restricted and hampered and curtailed and lessened in various ways, but they don't want it prohibited, because that would surely bring them so much more business that they could not attend to it.—Exchange.

AIR FULL OF STRAWS.

"The air is full of straws and they are all of the same color," says an antiliquor journal. They are all blowing the same way, too.

Uric Acid Poisoning?

The most eminent physicians recognize that uric acid stored up in the system is the cause of rheumatism, that this uric acid poison is present in the joints, muscles, or nerves. By experimenting and analysis at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y., Dr. Pierce discovered a combination of native remedies that he called Anuric—which drives out the uric acid from the system, and in this way the pain, swelling and inflammation subside. If you are a sufferer from rheumatism, backache, pains here or there, you can obtain Anuric at any drug store and get relief from the pains and ills brought about by uric acid; or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. Anuric which you will find many times more potent than lithia and eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. A short trial will convince you.

A PROMINENT MARION WOMAN.

Marion, Ind.—"All last winter I suffered from a terrible pain in my back. I felt miserable all over, and could not walk but a short distance. Was unable to work and did not sleep well at night, as I was obliged to arise frequently. I learned of Dr. Pierce's Anuric, that cures such troubles, and sent to him for a trial package. This medicine relieved me in a short time of getting up at night, and I have gained considerable. I am better now than I have been for some time—sleep better, have less rheumatism and do quite a lot of work for a woman of my age. I had brickdust settings in my urine before using 'Anuric,' now there is none. I thank Dr. Pierce very much for this medicine which has done me lots of good.

"That man's argument," exclaimed Jorkins, "as put forth in this printed page, has not a leg to stand on."

"Why, pa," interupted his better half, "look at the footnotes."

Don't Neglect Kidneys

Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Prescription, Overcomes Kidney Trouble

It is now conceded by physicians that the kidneys should have more attention as they control the other organs to a remarkable degree and do a tremendous amount of work in removing the poisons and waste matter from the system by filtering the blood.

The kidneys should receive some assistance when needed. We take less exercise, drink less water and often eat more rich, heavy food, thereby forcing the kidneys to do more work than nature intended. Evidence of kidney trouble, such as lame back, annoying bladder troubles, smarting or burning, brick-dust or sediment, sallow complexion, rheumatism, maybe weak or irregular heart action, warns you that your kidneys require help immediately to avoid more serious trouble.

An ideal herbal compound that has had most remarkable success as a kidney and bladder remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. There is nothing else like it. It is Dr. Kilmer's prescription used in private practice and it is sure to benefit you. Get a bottle from your druggist.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper. Adv.

DON'T QUIT MEAT

Don't stop eating meat for fear of kidney trouble. The sturdy Dutch are the heartiest livers in the world. They keep in good shape by using GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. This is a time-honored National Remedy of Holland for warding off the danger of meat eating, gout, rheumatism, uric acid poisoning, incipient Bright's disease and all liver, kidney and bladder complaints.

For over 200 years the genuine GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil was put up in vials with the ancient skin top. Modern science encloses it in Capsules, which makes it convenient to carry and pleasant to take. It soothes the irritated membranes, strengthens weakened organs and gives impulse to all the functions. It is harmless, and its effect is wonderful. Genuine GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules represent one of the most valuable remedies in history. If you want a good, healthy stomach, kidneys and liver, ask your druggist for genuine imported GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules, and take three capsules daily. Price per package, 25c, 50c and $1.00. Money back if they do not help you. Look for the name GOLD MEDAL on the box. Adv.

The Pin and the Needle

I read some time ago of a pin and needle; neighbors in a workbasket, and being both idle folk, began to quarrel as idle folk are apt to do.

"I should like to know" said the pin, "what you are good for, and how you expect to get through the world without a head."

"What is the use of a head," said the needle, sharply, "if you have got no eye."

"What is the use of an eye," said the pin, "if there is always something in it."

"I am more active and can go through more work than you can," said the needle.

"Yes but you will not live long because you have always a stitch in your side," said the pin.

"You are a poor crooked creature," said the needle.

"And you are so proud that you can't bend without breaking your back."

"I'll pull your little head off if you insult me again," said the needle.

"I'll pull your eye out if you touch me," said the pin, "remember, your life hangs on a single thread."

While they were thus quarrelling, a little girl entered, and undertaking to sew, soon broke off the needle at the eye. She then tied the thread round the neck of the pin, and attempting to sew with it, pulled off his head and threw it into the dirt by the side of the broken needle.

"Well, here we are," said the needle. "We have nothing to fight about now," said the pin. "It seems that misfortune has brought us to our senses."

"A pity we had not come to them sooner," said the needle. "How much we resemble human beings who quarrel about their blessings till they lose them, and never find out they are brothers till they lie down in the dust together as we do."

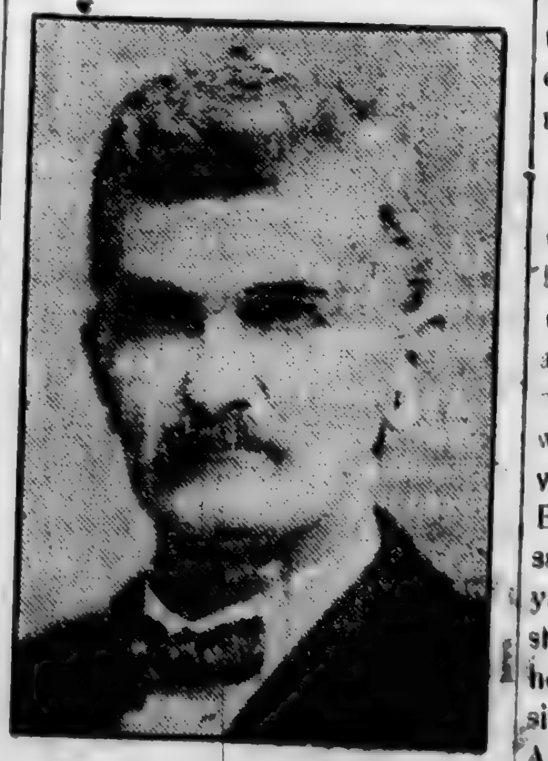
Auction Was A Big Success

Again Northern Indiana's largest implement dealer has proven to the trade, that he means business and that he does just exactly as he advertises. Last Saturday, for the first time in the history of his business, Wm. Curie, placed on sale a mammoth stock of staple merchandise at Public Auction, such as will be found in an up-to-date implement store. People who were his competitors made light of the sale and did all they could to discourage people from attending Saturday morning dawned bright and by eleven o'clock a dandy large crowd, entirely of farmers, had come to St. Joe to see "Curie's pile of Junk" as was said. Mr. Curie has been in business for years and his reputation for square dealing has been deeply fixed in the minds of the farmers all over this country, and whatever any other dealer may say, cannot change their minds as to Mr. Curie.



This Is "BILL"

The sale amounted to a little over $3,000.00. Every article put up at the sale was absolutely sold. 36 sets of single and double harness, 200 horse blankets, 10 Turnbull wagons were sold while only 5 were advertised for sale. Monday you could not have bought a set of harness in St. Joe at any price—sold out completely. This was one of the greatest money saving sales for the farmers, and they again have learned that whatever Curie says, he will do.

If your chicks are not doing well something is wrong. Look out for lice and for worms in the intestines.

Two-year-old hens had better be sent to the market. They seldom pay for their feed if kept over a third season.

Grit and oyster shell should be included in the ration for both young and old. To neglect this would be poor economy.

Young stock will do better if not compelled to pick their living with the old. There will also be less trouble from lice.

Shade is one of the most important essentials during the hot months. Get the chicks into the orchard and cornfield. It is not too late to plant sunflowers.

A growing chick will not thrive on short rations. If the right kind of food is fed, there is little danger of overfeeding, especially if they are given plenty of range.

Supplement the regular feeds with a wet mash—fed crumbly. Feed all the chicks will clean up before going to roost, but none should be left in the trough, for it will sour.

Mark the pullets this fall so that you will know just how old your hens are. A leg band on the right leg one year and on the left leg the next will assist in culling the flock. A hog ring will serve the purpose.

Boy Constructs a Phonograph Out Of an Ordinary Shingle.

A phonograph recently constructed by a high school boy has as its reproducing part nothing more pretentious than an ordinary shingle, with the point of a darning-needle securely fastened in one corner. A steel knitting-needle, clamped in a laboratory ringstand is thrust through a hole in the shingle to support it as it is carried over the record. The record is mounted upon a wooden turntable constructed as follows:

A disk made of three-quarter inch wood, with a groove in the edge, is mounted on the hub and axle of an old bicycle wheel, so that it can turn easily. This is connected with an ordinary battery motor by means of a cord belt. Pressure of the thumb and finger on the shaft of the motor regulates the speed of the disk. Records can be played backward simply by twisting the belt.—From the Popular Science Monthly.

Two Golden Days

Robert J. Burdette.

There are two days of the week upon which and about which I never worry, two care-free days kept sacredly free from fear and apprehension.

One of these is Yesterday. Yesterday with all its cares and frets, with all its pains and aches, all its faults, its mistakes and blunders, has passed beyond the reach of my recall. I cannot undo an act that I wrought. I cannot unsay a word that I said on Yesterday. All that it holds of life, of regret and sorrow, is in the hand of the Mighty Love that can bring sweet waters out of the bitterest desert—the love that can make the wrong things right, that can turn weeping into laughter, that can give beauty for ashes, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, joy of the morning for the woe of night.

Save for the beautiful memories that linger, sweet and tender like the perfume of roses, in the heart of the day that is gone, I have nothing to do with yesterday.

And the other day is Tomorrow. Tomorrow, with all its possible adversities, its burdens, its perils, its large promises and poor performance, its failures and mistakes, are as far beyond my mastery as its dead sister—yesterday. Its sun will rise in roseate splendor, or beyond a mask of weeping clouds. But it will rise. Until then the same love and patience that held yesterday, and holds tomorrow, shines with tender promise into the heart of today. I have no possession in that unborn day of grace. All else is in the infinite keeping of that Infinite Love that holds for me the treasure of yesterday, the love that is higher than the stars, wider than the sky, deeper than the seas.

There is left for myself, then, but one day of the week—today. Any man can fight the battles of today Any woman can carry the burdens of just one day.

A Surprise Thanksgiving

Mrs. Emma Woodcox was very pleasantly surprised last Thursday by her children, when they all came with well filled baskets of Thanksgiving good things to eat. Those who spent the day with her besides the grandson, Gray Woodcox, who resides with her, were Oscar Eicholtz, wife and two daughters, of Warsaw; Cadmir Woodcox, wife and two children, of Garrett; and C. A. Woodcox, wife and two sons, of just east of town.

IF

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

Not a Bite of Breakfast Until You Drink Water

Says a glass of hot water and phosphate prevents illness and keeps us fit.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completly eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and ptomain-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, billiousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

Here's Grandmother's Recipe to Darken and Beautify Faded Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for 50 cents a large bottle, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requiste for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

WILSON'S MESSAGE TO THE CONGRESS

Senate and House in Joint Session Hear Address of the President.

HE MAKES FEW SUGGESTIONS

Further Legislation for Settlement and Regulation of Railway Labor Disputes Held Imperatively Necessary by the chief Magistrate.

Washington, Dec. 5.—The senate and house met in joint session today and heard President Wilson's message, which was as follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress:

In fulfilling at this time the duty laid upon me by the Constitution of communicating to you from time to time information of the state of the Union and recommending to your consideration such legislative measures as may be judged necessary and expedient I shall continue the practice, which I hope has been acceptable to you, of leaving to the reports of the several heads of the executive departments the elaboration of the detailed needs of the public service and confine myself to those matters of more general public policy with which it seems necessary and feasible to deal at the present session of the congress.

I realize the limitations of time under which you will necessarily act at this session and shall make my suggestions as few as possible; but there were some things left undone at the last session which there will now be time to complete and which it seems necessary in the interest of the public to do at once.

In the first place, it seems to me imperatively necessary that the earliest possible consideration and action should be accorded the remaining measures of the program of settlement and regulation which I had occasion to recommend to you at the close of your last session in view of the public dangers disclosed by the unaccommodated difficulties which then existed, and which still unhappily continue to exist, between the railroads of the country and their locomotive engineers, conductors, and trainmen.

Railway Troubles First.

I then recommended:

First, immediate provision for the enlargement and administrative reorganization of the interstate commerce commission along the lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the house of representatives and now awaiting action by the senate; in order that the commission may be enabled to deal with the many great and various duties now devolving upon it with a promptness and thoroughness which are, with its present constitution and means of action, practically impossible.

Second, the establishment of an eight-hour day as the legal basis alike of work and of wages in the employment of all railway employees who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation.

Third, the authorization of the appointment by the president of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight-hour day in railway transportation alike for the men and for the railroads.

Fourth, explicit approval by the congress of the consideration by the interstate commerce commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the adoption of the eight-hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Fifth, an amendment of the existing federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding to it a provision that, in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, a full public investigation of the merits of every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lockout may lawfully be attempted.

And, sixth, the lodgment in the hands of the executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such portions and such rolling stock of the railroads of the country as may be required for military use and to operate them for military purposes, with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use.

Renews His Recommendations.

The second and third of these recommendations the congress immediately acted on: it established the eight-hour day as the legal basis of work and wages in train service and it authorised the appointment of a commission to observe and report upon the practical results, deeming these the measures most immediately needed; but it postponed action upon the other suggestions until an opportunity should be offered for a more deliberate consideration of them. The fourth recommendation I do not deem it necessary to renew. The power of the interstate commerce commission to grant an increase of rates on the ground referred to is indisputably clear and a recommendation by the congress with regard to such a matter might seem to draw in question the scope of the commission's authority or its inclination to do justice when there is no reason to doubt either.

The other suggestions—the increase in the interstate commerce commission's membership and in its facilities for performing its manifold duties, the provision for full public investigation and assessment of industrial disputes, and the grant to the executive of the power to control and operate the railways when necessary in time of war or other like public necessity—I now very earnestly renew.

The necessity for such legislation is manifest and pressing. Those who have intrusted us with the responsibility and duty of serving and safeguarding them in such matters would find it hard, I believe, to excuse a failure to act upon these grave matters or any unnecessary postponement of action upon them.

Not only does the interstate commerce commission now find it practically impossible, with its present membership and organization, to perform its great functions promptly and thoroughly, but it is not unlikely that it may presently be found advisable to add to its duties still others equally heavy and exacting. It must first be perfected as an administrative instrument.

The country cannot and should not consent to remain any longer exposed to profound industrial disturbances for lack of additional means of arbitration and conciliation which the congress can easily and promptly supply. And all will agree that there must be no doubt as to the power of the executive to make immediate and uninterrupted use of the railroads for the concentration of the military forces of the nation wherever they are needed and whenever they are needed.

This is a program of regulation, prevention and administrative efficiency which argues its own case in the mere statement of it. With regard to one of its items, the increase in the efficiency of the interstate commerce commission, the house of representatives has already acted; its action needs only the concurrence of the senate.

For Control and Operation.

I would hesitate to recommend, and I dare say the congress would hesitate to act upon the suggestion should I make it, that any man in any occupation should be obliged by law to continue in an employment which he desired to leave. To pass a law which forbade or prevented the individual workman to leave his work before receiving the approval of society in doing so would be to adopt a new principle into our jurisprudence which I take it for granted we are not prepared to introduce. But the proposal that the operation of the railways of the country shall not be stopped or interrupted by the concerted action of organized bodies of men until a public investigation shall have been instituted which shall make the whole question at issue plain for the judgment of the opinion of the nation is not to propose any such principle. It is based upon the very different principle that the concerted action of powerful bodies of men shall not be permitted to stop the industrial processes of the nation, at any rate before the nation shall have had an opportunity to acquaint itself with the merits of the case as between employee and employer, time to form its opinion upon an impartial statement of the merits, and opportunity to consider all practicable means of conciliation or arbitration.

I can see nothing in that proposition but the justifiable safeguarding by society of the necessary processes of its very life. There is nothing arbitrary or unjust in it unless it be arbitrarily and unjustly done. It can and should be done with a full and scrupulous regard for the interests and liberties of all concerned as well as for the permanent interests of society itself.

Other Legislation Urged.

Three matters of capital importance await the action of the senate which have already been acted upon by the house of representatives; the bill which seeks to extend greater freedom of combination to those engaged in promoting the foreign commerce of the country than is now thought by some to be legal under the terms of the laws against monopoly; the bill amending the present organic law of Porto Rico; and the bill proposing a more thorough and systematic regulation of the expenditure of money in elections, commonly called the Corrupt Practices Act. I need not labor my advice that these measures be enacted into law. Their urgency lies in the manifest circumstances which render their adoption at this time not only opportune but necessary. Even delay would seriously jeopard the interests of the country and of the government.

Immediate passage of the bill to regulate the expenditure of money in elections may seem to be less necessary than the immediate enactment of the other measures to which I refer; because at least two years will elapse before another election in which federal offices are to be filled; but it would greatly relieve the public mind if this important matter were dealt with while the circumstances and the dangers to the public morals of the present method of obtaining and spending campaign funds stand clear under recent observation and the methods of expenditure can be frankly studied in the light of present experience; and a delay would have the further very serious disadvantage of postponing action until another election was at hand and some special object connected with it might be thought to be in the mind of those who urged it. Action can be taken now with facts for guidance and without suspicion of partisan purpose.

I shall not argue at length the desirability of giving a freer hand in the matter of combined and concerted effort to those who shall undertake the essential enterprise of building up our export trade. That enterprise will presently, will immediately assume, has indeed already assumed, a magnitude unprecedented in our experience. We have not the necessary instrumentalities for its prosecution; it is deemed to be doubtful whether they could be created upon an adequate scale under our present laws. We should clear away all legal obstacles and create a basis of undoubted law for it which will give freedom without permitting unregulated license. The thing must be done now, because the opportunity is here and may escape us if we hesitate or delay.

Porto Rico's Needs.

The argument for the proposed amendments of the organic law of Porto Rico is brief and conclusive. The present laws governing the island and regulating the rights and privileges of its people are not just. We have created expectations of extended privilege which we have not satisfied. There is uneasiness among the people of the island and even a suspicious doubt with regard to our intentions concerning them which the adoption of the pending measure would happily remove. We do not doubt what we wish to do in any essential particular. We ought to do it at once.

There are other matters already advanced to the stage of conference between the two houses of which it is not necessary that I should speak. Some practicable basis of agreement concerning them will no doubt be found and action taken upon them.

Inasmuch as this is, gentlemen, probably the last occasion I shall have to address the Sixty-fourth congress, I hope that you will permit me to say with what genuine pleasure and satisfaction I have co-operated with you in the many measures of constructive policy with which you have enriched the legislative annals of the country. It has been a privilege to labor in such company. I take the liberty of congratulating you upon the completion of a record of rare serviceableness and distinction.

Cut Trees by Exploding Dynamite.

Instead of an ax and saw to remove the tops of trees that are to be used as masts in logging operations, dynamite is used to shoot off the tops. After the branches have been removed, a rigger climbs the tree, with a set of irons, to the point where it is necessary to cut off the top. Here the trunk is usually about 12 inches in diameter. The rigger ties a string of dynamite cartridges, fastened end to end like sausages, around the trunk at this point, inserts a blasting cap with about 20 feet of fuse in one of these sticks, lights the end of the fuse, and descends before the explosion takes place. The tree top pumps into the air with the explosion and the trunk is left ready for attaching the rigging for dragging in and loading the logs.—Engineering Record.

All He Saw of Battle.

The bluejacket had been in the battle off Jutland, and in the railway compartment every one addressed him respectfully. Incidentally he was the recipient of numerous fine cigars. He conducted himself with becoming dignity, and when the foreign-looking gentleman who had kept silent went out at a roadside station the audience settled down to hear the yarn. Nodding his head toward the dark stranger on the platform, the bluejacket remarked with a grin, "'E thinks 'e 'as lost somethink 'e'd like to hear, 'e 'as. But hall Hi saw of the bloody battle was coal—nothing but coal. Hi'm a stoker, you see, that's what Hi am."—London Mail.

Not to Be Thought Of.

Unsatisfactory Remedy.

Heiny—A doctor tells me that if a man works steadily he never worries.

Omar—Pshaw! It's working steadily that gets my goat.

Unusual Experience.

"Man," remarked Sandy, "I did a thing last nicht what I've no dune this twenty year. I went to ma bed pairrfectly sober, but I'm richt thankful to say I got up this mornin' none the waur!"

Few Beggars in Panama.

Although the city of Panama is a most cosmopolitan place, practically every race being represented in its 60,000 inhabitants, there are no beggars, except a few blind men.

Most Fishermen Have Done It.

"Simple Simon went a-fishing in his mother's pail." "Not so simple, at that," declared the amateur sportsman. "I've spent time and money getting to a place where the likelihood of catching fish was no whit greater."

Nothing New.

"I see some scientific sharp has discovered a substitute for bread." "He needn't think he's so much. Our cook has been turning that out for years."

Remain the Same.

Progress is observable in most directions, but we have the same cheap, vulgar and disgusting old forms of profanity that the English-speaking peoples always have had.—Houston Post.

A Certainty.

There is nothing certain in the world, except that when you start in saving money for one thing you are going to spend it for something else.—Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Peru.—Fire destroyed the car and paint department of the Chesapeake and Ohio here at a loss of $75,000. Three other fires occurred at the same time, causing the police to believe incendiaries were at work.

Bloomington.—William M. Graham has bought the Tourner hotel here from Dr. John P. Tourner for $40,000. Graham was defeated in the recent election for joint senator from Monroe, Johnson and Brown counties.

Warsaw.—The Warsaw Gas company has announced that it has 25 carloads of coal coming and will fill orders. Dealers are holding the price at a new record, and are refusing to deliver full orders because of lack of coal.

Indianapolis.—Kipp Cowan, former postmaster at Bobo, was brought here from Liwa, O., and held to face a charge of embezzling $238.91 and failure to report other amounts received on money orders while he was postmaster.

Evansville.—Mayor Ben Bosse began making arrangements to buy potatoes and cabbages in carload lots to be sold at cost to consumers. He also declared he would put the city in the coal business if the price went beyond 12 cents a bushel.

Hammond.—W. H. Gostlin, a former state senator and pioneer real estate dealer, is dead. He was sixty-three years old. He served in the senate from 1892 to 1897 and was postmaster here for eight years. A widow and one son survive.

Veedersburg.—This town unexpectedly is in the coal business. About 500 tons of coal was dumped in a freight wreck on the C. & E. I. railroad and Mayor Detson and the city council bought all of it. It is being sold for $3.25 a ton. The market price is $5.50 a ton.

Indianapolis.—A. D. Spurlin, production manager for the Central Serum company, is under arrest charged with shooting George Porter, who is near death in the hospital with a bullet wound in his head. The shooting was the outcome of a fight between the men, when, it is said, Spurlin and Claude Brown called at the Porter home, owned by the Serum company, and attempted to eject him. Spurlin pleads self-defense.

South Bend.—One South Bend and two Mishawaka firms have granted their employees a raise in wages. More than 5,000 workers will benefit. The Oliver Chilled Plow company, which employs 3,000 men, granted 10 per cent increase effective December 1. The Mishawaka Woolen Mills company, employing 2,500 men, and the Rubber Regenerating company of Mishawaka, employing 500 men, have granted a 10 per cent increase.

Indianapolis.—The women of this city, where Lew Shank, when mayor, used his office to bring down potato prices, have quiet plans under way to form a "Don't Buy It" club. The plan of the Woman's Department club is to make a "Don't Buy It" club out of every branch of the Parent-Teachers' association and then attack the prices of different articles of food by boycotts. The women charge that there is price-fixing at the city market.

Indianapolis.—The supreme court reversed the decision of the St. Joseph circuit court in which it held that George A. Thomas could not enforce a lease on property in Elkhart, which was deeded to Miss Etta K. Heddon after the lease was made. The higher court holds that Miss Heddon must perform the provisions of the lease, which provided Thomas was to pay $85 a month rental, to make repairs, erect a building worth $5,000 and then was to have an option to purchase it at $17,000 when the lease expired.

Indianapolis.—The blame for the shortage of Indiana coal within the state is placed on the railroads by Governor-elect Goodrich. Speaking to the Economic club here, Mr. Goodrich declared that but for the shortage of cars, the output of the Indiana mines would be greater than ever before. The burden of correcting such a condition, he placed on the public service commission. Mr. Goodrich opposes the extension of the power of the federal interstate commerce commission to the interstate activities of carriers.

Indianapolis.—Franklin L. Bridges, adjutant general of the Indiana National Guard, said he had received notice from the war department to disband Company I of Indiana university and Battery B of Purdue university, whose members recently returned from service on the Mexican border. Bridges said he knew of no reason for the orders. He said it possibly was done because these companies were not up to their proper strength. Arrangements will be made, he said, to organize another company of infantry in the state. The Purdue students recently petitioned to be relieved from the Guard service, but the Indiana company, it is understood, desired to remain in the Guard.

Indianapolis.—Harry S. New, United States senator-elect, has returned from a hunting trip in northern Michigan, where he went to recuperate after a strenuous campaign. Mr. New will, it is understood, begin closing up large business interests before he takes his seat in the senate.

Newcastle.—The "first lady of the land" has showered her blessings on a Hoosier baby, Edith Bolling Keoly, Mrs. John Ricker, aunt of the baby, who selected the name of the wife of President Wilson, proudly displays a letter from Mrs. Wilson wishing the baby may be "a child of happiness."

BRAVE OR CURIOUS?

If you received information that a mysterious murderer threatened you, would you call the bluff by staying where you were and defying the Mystery—or would you hurry into hiding?

Whitaker, thinking he was soon to die, married young Mary Ladislas to protect her good name, and sailed for parts unknown at once. Supposedly long dead, he turns up in New York several years later, healthy and wealthy, and finds his wife, "Sara Law," noted actress, in the midst of a performance. The play stops abruptly. She refuses to see him. Drummond, Whitaker's former law partner, engaged to marry the supposed widow, is reported a suicide. Whitaker's friend, Martin Ember, former detective, doubts the report.

Read how Whitaker acted when warned of violence—in this installment. It's thrilling and puzzling!

CHAPTER VIII.

Entr'acte.

Dawn of Sunday found Whitaker still awake. Alone in his uncheerful bedchamber, his chair tilted back against the wall, he sat smoking and thinking, reviewing again and again every consideration growing out of his matrimonial entanglement. He turned in at length to the dreamless slumbers of mental exhaustion.

The morning introduced him to a world of newspapers gone mad and garrulous with accounts of the sensation of the preceding night. What they told him only confirmed the history of his wife's career as detailed by the gratuitous Mr. Ember. There was, however, no suggestion in any report that Drummond had not in fact committed suicide. There had been, apparently, but a single witness of the felo de se, who in the subsequent confusion had vanished. No one dreamed of questioning the authenticity of the report. Several sensational sheets ran exhaustive resumes, elaborately illustrated, of the public life of "The Destroying Angel." It seemed to be an unanimous assumption that the news of Drummond's suicide had in some manner been conveyed to the woman while on the stage.

In the course of the forenoon a note for Whitaker was delivered at the hotel.

The heavy sheet of white paper, stamped with the address in Fifty-seventh street, bore the message in a strong but nervous hand:

> I rely upon the generosity you promise me. This marriage of ours, that is no marriage, must be dissolved. Please let my attorneys—Landers, Grimshaw & Clark, 149 Broadway—know when and where you will accept service. Forgive me if I seem ungrateful and unfeeling. I am hardly myself. And please do not try to see me now. Some day I hope to see and thank you; today—it's impossible. I am going away to forget, if I can.
> Mary Ladislas Whitaker.

Before nightfall Whitaker had satisfied himself that his wife had, in truth, left her town house. The servants there informed all who inquired that they had been told to report and to forward all letters to Messrs. Landers, Grimshaw & Clark.

Whitaker promptly notified those attorneys that he was ready to be served at their convenience. But beyond their brief and businesslike acknowledgment, he heard nothing more of the action for divorce.

He sought Max several times without success. When at length run to ground in the roulette room of a Forty-fourth street gambling house, the manager was grimly reticent. Warned by the manager's truculent and suspicious tone that his secret was, after all, buried no more than skin deep, Whitaker dissembled artfully his anxiety, and abandoned Max to his pet vices.

The newspapers reported Sara Law as being in retirement in several widely separated sections of the country. She was also said to have gone abroad, sailing incognito by a second-class steamship from Philadelphia.

The nine-days' wonder disintegrated naturally. The sobriquet of "The Destroying Angel" disappeared from the newspaper scare-heads. So also the name of Drummond. Hugh Morten Whitaker, the dead man come to life, occupied public interest for a brief half-day. By the time that the executors of Carter Drummond and the attorneys representing his clients began to make sense of his estate and interests, their discoveries failed to command newspaper space.

Drummond had appropriated to his own uses every dollar of the small fortune left in his care by his erstwhile partner. No other client of his had suffered, however. His peculations had been confined wholly to the one quarter whence he had had every reason to anticipate neither protest nor exposure. In Whitaker's too-magnanimous opinion, the man had not been so much a thief as one who yielded to the temptation to convert to his own needs and uses a property against which, it appeared, no other living being cared to enter a claim. The monetary loss was an inconsiderable thing to a man with an interest in mines in the Owen Stanley country. He said nothing. Drummond's name remained untarnished, save in the knowledge of a few.

Of these, Martin Ember was one. Whitaker made a point of hunting him up. The retired detective received confirmation of his surmise without any amazement.

"You still believe that he's alive?"

"Implicitly," Ember asserted with conviction.

"Could you find him, if necessary?"

"Within a day, I think. Do you wish me to?"

Ember permitted Whitaker to consider the matter in silence for some moments. Then, "Do you want advice?" he inquired.

"Well?"

"Hunt him down and put him behind the bars," said Ember instantly.

"What's the good of that?"

"Your personal safety."

"How?"

"With you out of the way, he could come back without fear."

Ember permitted another pause to lengthen, unbroken by Whitaker.

"Shall I try to find him for you?" he said quietly, in the end.

"No," Whitaker decided. "No. Let him alone—poor devil!"

Ember disclaimed further responsibility with a movement of his shoulders.

"But my wife? Could you find her as readily?"

"Possibly," the detective admitted cautiously. "But I don't mean to."

"Why not?"

"Principally because she doesn't want me to. Otherwise she'd let you know where to look for her."

"True."

These fragments of dialogue are from a conversation that took place in the month of June, nearly seven weeks after the farewell performance at the Theatre Max. Interim, Whitaker had quietly resumed his place in the life of the town, regaining old friendships, renewing old associations. The mild excitement occasioned by his reappearance had already subsided; he was again an accepted and substantial factor in the society of his kind.

Gradually he began to know more hours of loneliness than suited his tastes. His rooms—the old rooms overlooking Bryant park regained and refurnished much as they had been six years before—knew his solitary presence through many a long evening. July came with blistering breath and he took to the Adirondacks, meaning to be gone a month. Within ten days he was home again, drawn back irresistibly by a strange, insatiable craving of unformulated desire. Town bored him, yet he could not seem to rest away from it.

He wandered in and out, up and down, an unquiet, irresolute soul, tremendously perplexed. . . .

There came one dark and sultry night, heavy beneath skies overcast, in August. Whitaker left a roof-garden in the middle of a stupid performance, and walked the streets till long after midnight, courting the fatigue that alone could bestow untroubled sleep. On his return a sleepy hall-boy with a wilted collar ran the elevator up to his tenth-floor landing and, leaving him fumbling at the lock of his door, dropped clankingly out of sight. Whitaker entered and shut himself in with the pitch-blackness of his private hall.

He groped along the wall for the electric switch, and found only the shank of it, the hard rubber button having disappeared. And then, while still he was trying to think how this could have happened, he sustained a murderous assault.

A miscalculation on the part of the marauder alone saved him. The blackjack (or whatever the weapon was) missing his head by the narrowest shave, descended upon his left shoulder with numbing force. Notwithstanding his pain and surprise, Whitaker rallied and grappled, thus escaping a second and probably more deadly blow.

But his shoulder was almost useless, and the pain of it began to sicken him, while the man in his grip fought like a devil unchained.

For some minutes the night was rendered wild and violent with the crashes of overthrown furniture and the thud and thump of struggling bodies. Then Whitaker broke free and plunged in what he imagined to be the direction of a dresser in which he kept a revolver. His foot slipped on the hardwood floor, the ankle twisted, and he fell awkwardly, striking his head against a table leg with such force that he lay half stunned. An instant later his assailant emptied five chambers of a revolver into the darkness about him, and then, alarmed by a racket of pounding on the hall door, fled successfully by way of the fire escape to adjoining roofs and neighboring backyards.

By the time Whitaker was able to pull himself together and hobble to the door, a brace of intelligent policemen, who had been summoned by the hall-boy, were threatening to break it down. Admitted, they took his safety into their care and, simultaneously, the revolver which he incautiously admitted possessing. Later they departed, obviously disgruntled by the unprofessional conduct of the "crook" who had left no "clues," with a warning to the householder that he might expect to be summoned to court, as soon as he was able to move, to answer for the crime of keeping a weapon of defense.

Whitaker took to his bed in company with a black temper and the aroma of arnica.

He entertained, the next day, several persons: reporters; a physician; a futile, superfluous, unornamental creature misleadingly designated a plain-clothes man; finally his friend (by now their acquaintance had warmed to real friendship) Ember.

The retired investigator found Whitaker getting into his clothes—a ceremony distinguished by some profanity and numerous grunts.

"Afternoon," he said, taking a chair and surveying the sufferer with slightly masked amusement. "Having a good time?"

"You go to thunder!" said Whitaker in disgust.

"Glad to see you're not hurt much,' pursued the other, unabashed.

Whitaker withered him with a glare.

"You're lucky to be alive," observed Ember, exasperatingly philosophic.

"A lot you know about it! I suppose you could lay this thug by the heels in a brace of shakes?"

"Just about," Ember admitted placidly.

Whitaker stared aggressively. "You mean . . . Drummond?"

The answer was a nod.

"I don't believe it."

"You'll at all events do me the credit to recall that I warned you two months ago."

"All the same, I don't believe it was Drummond."

"You haven't missed any property, I believe?"

"No."

"So presumably the fellow had some motive other than a desire to thieve. Besides, if he'd been on the loot he might much more easily have tried one of the lower floors—and more sensibly."

"Well . . ." Whitaker temporized.

"And I'd like to know what you mean to do."

"About what?"

"Unless you're hell-bent on sticking around here to get your head mashed in—I venture respectfully to suggest that you consign yourself to my competent care."

"Meaning—"

"I've got a bungalow down on Long Island—a one-horse sort of a bachelor affair—and I'm going to run down this evening and stay awhile. There's quiet, no society and good swimming. Will you come along and be my guest until you grow tired of it?"

"Done with you!" declared Whitaker with a strong sense of relief.

As a matter of fact, he was far less incredulous of Ember's theory than he chose to admit.

Do you believe that Drummond is dead? Who assaulted Whitaker? What was the motive?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Earthquake Caused Changes.

An effect of the Nevada earthquake of the last quarter of 1915 has been an increase to three or four times the former amount in the flow of streams and springs throughout the northern part of the state. Observers have pronounced this earthquake more violent than the one that caused such disaster in San Francisco in 1906, but in the thinly settled region the damage was small. Beginning October 2, there were more than 500 shocks within three months. The most notable mark of the disturbance has been left on the east side of Pleasant valley, where the alluvial detritus at the base of the Sonoma range has settled away for a vertical height of 5 to 12 feet and a horizontal width of 8 feet over a distance of nearly 25 miles.

ORLEANS ALWAYS A FLIRT

Cablegrams telling of the intention of the duke of Orleans to seek annulment of his marriage to Archduchess Maria Dorothea, who left him long ago on account of his fondness for other women, recall a well-founded story of the duke's flirtation in this country more than 20 years ago.

In the early nineties the duke and his younger brother were brought to America by their father the Comte de Paris. They were handsome, high-strung young fellows, out for adventure and romance. When en route from Norfolk to Richmond on a river steamer both young men were attracted by the beauty of two Richmond girls, the Misses Bullington, who were aboard the boat. One of the girls was a dainty blonde, the other a vivacious brunette.

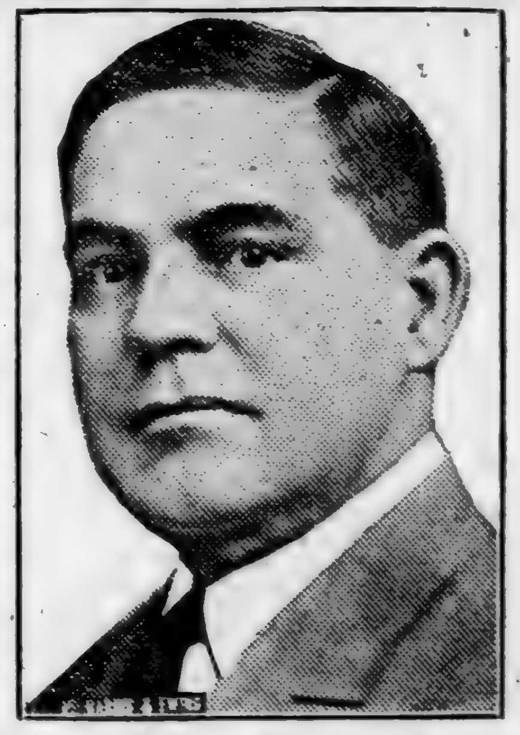
They soon suspected the distinguished young aristocrats desired to meet them, and cleverly encouraged the wish, but the stern old Comte de Paris kept a keen eye on his sons and prevented the meeting between them and the bewitching daughters of Virginia.

A reporter for a Richmond newspaper who happened to be aboard the boat knew the girls and arranged with them to bring the duke and his brother for a call at their home in Richmond that evening.

The distinguished visitors took rooms at the old Lexington hotel. A problem was to get the count to sleep so the party could slip out for the evening. Finally when he was tucked away the trio took a cab, called on the girls and returned to the hotel before midnight.

One of the young men stumbled just across the hall from the old count's rooms, and he appeared in the doorway as his sons were attempting to sneak into their apartments. He took them to Washington that night.

LOOKS LIKE JIM JEFFRIES

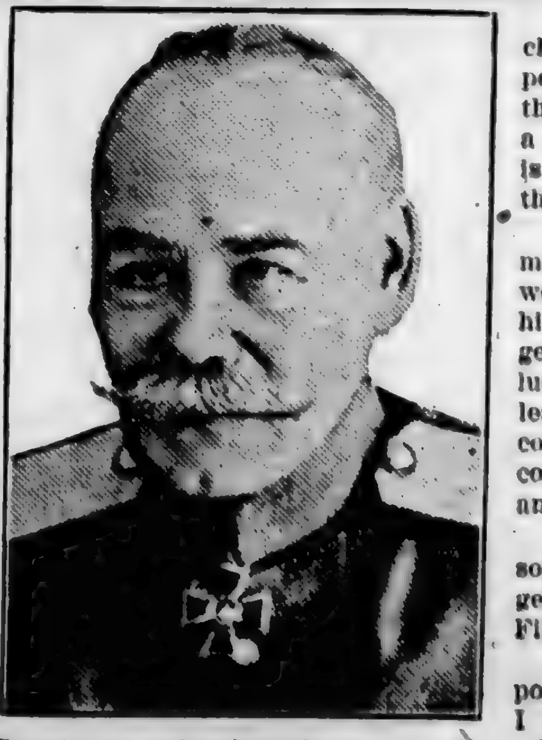


Mr. "Wild Bill" Gordon, one of the representatives in congress from Cleveland, O., impresses one and all with his resemblance to a certain large, two-fisted man who once figured prominently in the public prints, to wit: Mr. James J. Jeffries. And they do say that the resemblance does not stop with mere looks, either. The story is that when Bill Gordon was a young chap out in Oak Harbor, O., where he was brought up, he was regarded as a person of much prominence in the fistic way.

One night Gordon made a little run over to Toledo to take in a boxing tournament. The hefty young man who won the championship of the evening was obliged to lick three other able-bodied men, one after the other, and this was a task that entailed some little fatigue. Just when the champion thought his work was over for the evening, a large, well-knit man arose in the audience and declared that he was prepared to knock the eternal smithereens out of the winner right then and there, without fear, favor or failure.

Now, the proposition appealed to young Bill Gordon as unsportsmanlike in the extreme. So he announced he would fight the volunteer, which he did, and whipped him thoroughly.

RUSSIAN CHIEF OF STAFF



Gen. Michel Alexieff, Nicholas II's chief of staff, and, next to the emperor, responsible for operations along the whole Russian front, is the son of a preacher and a self-made man. He is at the top because he put himself there by hard work.

When the emperor assumed command of the army and General Alexieff went to work with him the czar and his chief of staff always lunched together at the czar's quarters. The lunches naturally were of a more or less formal nature, ending up with coffee and smokes and the inevitable conversations, in all consuming about an hour and a half.

General Alexieff stood this for some days, but it was apparent he was getting more and more ill at ease Finally one day he went to the czar.

"Sire," he said, "I realize it is impossible to cut the lunch shorter. But I am losing a lot of time every day. Permit me to lunch with my officers at their mess. I will be very grateful."

The emperor laughed. "Of course, it shall be as you wish, general," he said, recognizing by his knowledge of his officers' personalities, the general's motive. And from that day on the chief ate with his men.

Glando Did It.

Interesting Statement Given by Paulding Man.

Mr. C. A. Hughes, of Paulding, Ohio, said: "I had suffered so much from backache and kidney trouble that I was hardly able to drag around. After taking one treatment of Glando Tonic I was so improved that I took another treatment to make it a cure. I am now a well man and can heartily recommend Glando Tonic to all suffering from backache or kidney trouble."

A sluggish glandular system is responsible for most serious illnesses. Such a condition should not be neglected. The wonderful cures affected by Glando, the Great Gland Tonic, is due to the fact that it acts directly upon the glandular system. The three treatments which each package contains being necessary to effect a cure. Treatment No. One starts glandular activity. Treatment No. Two throws off the accumulated poisons and prepares the system for a tonic. Treatment No. Three is a splendid tonic that builds up the entire system. For sale by All Druggists.

Spayd-Kannel Neptual.

Miss Lucia Spayd, only daughter of Rev. and Mrs. L. W. Spayd, of this place, and George Kannel, of Hamilton, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, Thursday at high noon. The ring ceremony was used, being performed by the bride's father. The only witnesses being the Misses Fanny Beecher and Meda Dargue and Mr Paul Dargue, all of Hamilton; and the mother of the bride. Miss Spayd was beautifully attired in light blue taffeta trimmed with beads. The bridal flowers were white and yellow carnations. Immediately after the ceremony the party were seated to a turkey dinner, and later the party except Rev. and Mrs. Spayd left by automobile for Hamilton where a home awaits them. They will reside in the house recently vacated by Rev. and Mrs. Spayd when they came to St. Joe; so the bride will only be returning home after an absence of a few weeks.

HARVESTING TREES

An Important Winter Industry in New England.

Balsam Fir Most Popular Because of Its Symmetry and Almost Perfect Shape—Shipped to Big Eastern Cities.

THROUGHOUT New England, and especially in Maine, where, a study by the forest service shows, balsam firs grow to best advantage, the annual cutting and shipment of this ideal Christmas tree is an important early winter industry. Most of the hundreds of thousands of tinsel-covered trees that are set up each Christmas season in the homes of Boston, New York and Philadelphia are balsam firs, and many of the selected specimens are even shipped from their places of growth to such cities as Baltimore, Washington, Chicago and the cities of the middle West.

The reason for the great popularity of the balsam fir as a Christmas tree is its symmetrical and practically perfect conical shape.

That the aid of this Christmas tree par excellence in carrying out the customary observance of Christmas may be had for a number of seasons yet is indicated by the report of the forest service, which estimates that the total stand of balsam fir throughout its range of commercial occurrence in the United States is in the neighborhood of 5,000,000,000 board feet. In addition there is a larger quantity in Canada. There is a growing demand for the woods, however, for a variety of uses, and it is figured that something like 175,000,000 board feet are being cut in the United States annually. Many thousands of feet of this cut go to satisfy the Christmas demands.

Sorting the Trees.

But it is not only as the burden bearer of gifts that the balsam fir contributes to Christmas observances. It also serves in less easily recognized forms. Its white, straight-grained wood has come to be used more and more in the manufacture of toys that hang from the branches of its younger fellows and from the branches of the other evergreens that are widely used in many parts of the country. The wood of the balsam fir is used to a large extent, also, in the manufacture of excelsior, of which thousands of tons are used each holiday season for packing gifts that are sent by express and mail.

Balsam fir is the source, too, of the wood from which are made many of the food containers, such as fruit baskets and butter boxes, in which materials for the Christmas dinner are brought to the market, the tastelessness of the wood making it unsurpassed for such uses. Finally, the balsam fir is being increasingly used for the manufacture of paper, and this, wrapped around thousands of holiday packages, adds still another chapter to the list of the tree's almost indispensable usefulness as a factor in Christmas observances.

Juvenile Sophistication.

"I told my youngest son there wasn't any Santa Claus."

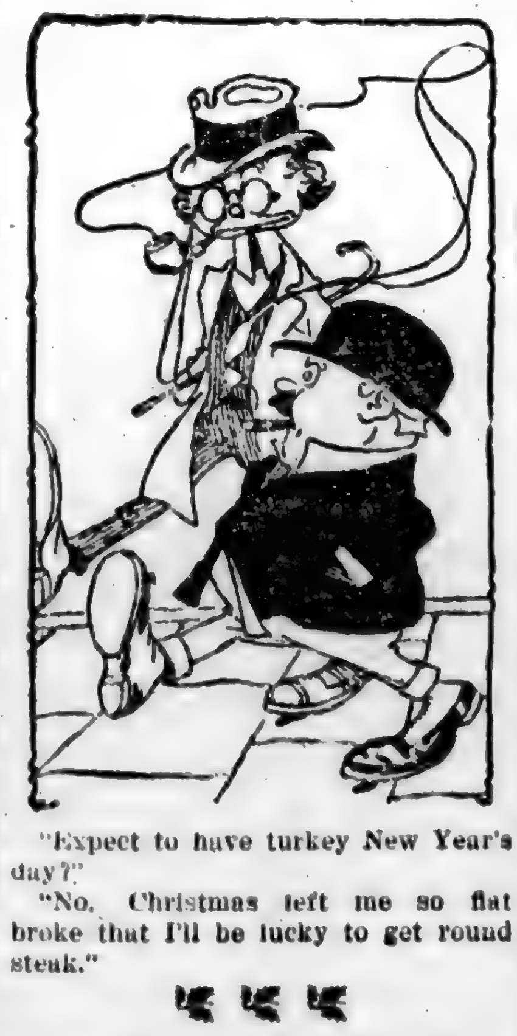
"Did he seem sorry?"

"No. Said he knew it all the time, but was trying to keep it from me so as not to spoil my Christmas."

Useful Christmas Plant.

Cyclamen is one of the most useful Christmas plants. It comes in various colors and if kept in a room that is not too dry or warm will bloom several weeks.

AWFUL



"Expect to have turkey New Year's day?"

"No. Christmas left me so flat broke that I'll be lucky to get round steak."

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

By PEARL C. MILLER.

The whole world is a Christmas tree,
And stars its many candles be.

The spirit of Christmas should be one of love, charity, sympathy and hospitality. Christmas means the anniversary of the birth of Christ, and only the best impulses of the human heart should characterize the season of rejoicing and giving.

Perhaps, when we are puzzled and worried about our Christmas gifts, we may not be wholly unselfish ourselves, or we may be striving to give to him that hath. If you are doubtful about the appreciation your little gift may receive try giving it to someone more needy, and the doubt will quickly vanish. Oftentimes the gifts most easily selected and bestowed express the truest spirit of giving. Cease to give when it becomes a task, for it is

Not what we give, but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare.

Is there a Santa Claus? The German named Krist Kindlein, Christ child, finally became corrupted into Kriss Kringle, a being now identified with Santa Claus. Saint Nicholas, a synonymous term, was a Greek, who died about 343 A. D. He was considered a patron of the children and a good genius of the gift season. Santa Claus means the spirit of Christmas.

The custom of hanging up stockings on Christmas eve originated in England and was brought to this country by the Pilgrim Fathers.

Decorations and music are indispensable for the Christmas season, and these are within the reach of all. It is an ancient belief that the mistletoe contains medicinal properties, and it was supposed to have the power to dispel any evil spirits.

Since Christmas symbolizes the birth of the Christ child what a grievous custom it is to make the contraction Xmas stand for all that is so good and beautiful. Surely we can take time to write the word out fully and portray a picture of beauty and dignity in commemoration of the holiday (holy day).

Oh, sing a carol joyfully,
The year's great feast is keeping.

FORGET IT.

By JUDD MORTIMER LEWIS.

The Christmas tree is all alight between us and the trenches; beyond it lies a grevous fight and suffering and stenches; this side of it are all things good, and little folks are singing, and over field and stream and wood their joyous tones are winging. So let us pull the curtain down on periscopes and dying, and spread our smiles all over town, and cut out sobs and sighing. The little folks know naught of war, and little folks are happy; they have no notion what it's for nor why the kings are scrappy; and we know no more than they do of the outlandish reason; so let us sing: "The skies are blue, it is the Christmas season!" So let us bring the turkey in and tote in wood for mother, and polish up our Christmas grin and try to love our brother. The world is full of friendships yet, the world is filled with loving, and love outshines a coronet, and sympathy beats shoving. So let us load the Christmas tree and let us wear a posy and join the children in their glee at ring-around-a-rosy!—Houston Post.

Truth Is Paramount.

God promised the people of Jerusalem that he would save the city from destruction if they should find "a man that executeth judgment and seeketh the truth." Each of us in our individual capacity may be the saving power of all our associates. "It behooves us to seek the truth, and, after learning it, to execute judgment in putting into effect that truth. As we approach Christmas time, we are looking for the coming of him who will save the world.

VOL. XXX — ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY DEC. 14 1916 — No. 50

No. 6 Will Not Stop.

A new schedule on the B. & O., went into effect Sunday and the changes are as follows effecting St. Joe traffic:—

WEST BOUND TRAINS.

No. 65 .... 10:35 a. m.
No. 35 .... 9:15 p. m.

EAST BOUND TRAINS.

No 66 .... 10:02 a. m.
No. 32 .... 4:58 a. m.

The one most needed train for the community is No. 6, and that has been taken off entirely, while before the new schedule it was for Auburn Junction passengers. Sunday evening, 7 passengers from the Junction were left there according to the reading of the new timecard, and it is a fact that St. Joe should again make a complaint to the Inter-state Commerce Commission for action.

Admitted to the "Bar."

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 11.—R. E. Peters, of Fort Wayne, Ind., secretary to Representative Cyrus Cline, was to-day admitted to the bar of the United States supreme court. Mr. Peters received his legal training at Georgetown university in this city. Admission to the bar of the United States supreme court entitles the person admitted to practice in the federal courts throughout the country."—Tuesday's Journal Gazette. Earl is known in St. Joe by a number of citizens, occupying at one time the position of Editor of the Auburn Courier.

Ready For New Year.

The Christian Sunday School elected the following officers, Sunday, to serve for the year 1917:—Superintendent, Paul Perry; Asst. Supt., Howard Borthwick; Secretary, Walter Keesler; Asst. Secy., Vernie Monroe; Treasurer, Frank Johnston; Chorister, Miss Norma Brown; Assistant, Mrs. Nellie Perry; Organist, Mrs. Lena Meek; Assistant, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick; Librarians, Ralph Brown and Miss Grace Milliman.

It Isn't Just Right Now.

Governor Goodrich does not favor a prohibition amendment NOW, he has the election. Thinks it wrong to submit it to the legislature. He did not say this before election, but rather left the impression that he was square on the proposition and he is, AGAINST IT.

CHRISTMAS CREED UNIVERSAL

Adjusts Itself to All Conditions and All Places—It's Magic Influences the World.

The festival called Christmas has come to have a creed wider than any ritual. Its magic has influenced the world in a degree more profound and far-reaching than that of any other recurring incident marked by the history of mankind. Its sentiment has, indeed, overflowed all boundaries, both of sect and of social condition. Its high, clear note of cheer and charity has appealed to an unbounded degree wherever human ideals have had sway. Pessimism halts at its portal.

The creed of kindness adjusts itself to all conditions and all places. It seems to be a good working creed, despite the unattractive phases of perfunctory giving and taking. It is a cheerful creed. It strews life with gayety and color. It is a culmination to sentiments of fair play, to active sympathy, to the do-it-now impulse.

Christmas has no climate. It glows where life is green and where it is white. In city and in country, in the hills and on the desert, among the pines and among the palms it finds a voice. It is holy day and holiday. It drapes the altar and the hearth. It has many American versions, and many races add their varying symbols to its tenderness and to its animation.

Above all, the call of Christmas is "Peace on Earth." In the present grievous crisis of the world there is significance in this call beyond that of any crisis mankind ever before was called to read. That war has darkened Christmas for so much of the world may well seem, at the moment, the crushing condemnation of all such conflicts.

Yet it will remain true that the full beauty of the day and the time is due those who may find that beauty. Children of every land seize it for their own. And, "except ye become as one of these," life loses its saving luster.

We have on the way one car of stove coal, two cars of Hocking. Inquire at elevator for details. Don't forget that car of Schumacher Feed that is on the way.

Always Welcome At The

Dear Santa Claus:
I will let you know,
What I want for Xmas, so
If you should happen to come my way,
With a lot of toys in your reindeer sleigh.
Please bring me a great big doll,
Two feet and a half, or so tall;
A dress, an orange, some nuts and candy,
I am also sure will be just dandy;
So come to my house and please leave,
The things I want on Xmas eve.
Your little friend,
Dorothy Milliman.

Deear Santa claus?
I wish you would bring me a doll at Xmas night, and pleas bring me a doll that goes to sleep and please bring me a big doll and lots off clothes, and a cradle, and lots off candy. You are a kind man if you bring me the things I want. I will wash the clothes and keep them clean. I will try not to break the doll. I wish you would kindly give me a doll that would have hair on. You will be avery kind man, A kind man is good. And please bring me a banana. You dear Santa Claus.

MANY DEFECTIVES LACK GOOD CARE

Commmission's Report Discloses Appalling Conditions in Many State Institutions.

WEAK-MINDED NUMBER 9,484

Glaring Need for Careful and Scientific Attention to This Problem at the Hands of the State Is Shown.

Indianapolis.—Some of the figures and statistics contained in the report of the committee on mental defectives, which was appointed by Governor Ralston to make a study of this problem and report for the information of the legislature, are appalling, for they disclose a deplorable lack of care of the several thousand defectives outside the state institutions. The report shows a glaring need for careful and scientific attention to this problem at he hands of the state. The report contains a table showing the number of mental defectives in state and county institutions. The total number is 9,484. The report says:

"The figures for insanity vary. A fair estimate indicates that there are between 7,000 and 8,000 insane in the state. The great majority of these, over 5,300, are now cared for in state hospitals for the insane, besides 400 patients on furlough from and still under the supervision of the hospitals. In addition, there are 278 insane in the hospital for insane criminals at Michigan City.

"The problem of the defective becomes apparent when the figures for feeble-mindedness are considered. This figure lies somewhere between 7.6 and 13.9 persons per 1,000 of the population. It is impossible to attempt to estimate the number of feeble-minded in the state. A fair estimate will place it at about 20,000, including all grades. It is estimated that 6,000 of these should be under state custodial care, and only 1,350 are now receiving it.

"The total number of epileptic, insane and feeble-minded in Indiana then can be assumed to be about 32,000, or 1.2 per cent or 12 to 1,000 of the general population. It is evident from these data that while more research and information is necessary in order to know exactly the problem of the mental defective in this state, yet it is very clearly evident that the state should make immediate provision for many more of its defectives than it is now making.

"The committee on mental defectives, through the superintendent of public instruction, sent out inquiries to the county superintendents of schools of Indiana requesting a report of the number of feeble-minded, epileptic and insane children in the schools. Seventy-three of the 92 counties of the state reported 1,245 feeble-minded, 196 epileptic and 13 insane children in the schools.

"The field investigators of the eugenics record office found, after study, that about 66 per cent of the children reported as feeble-minded and the other 36 per cent were either doubtful cases or normal. All of the cases of epilepsy in this county reported were found to be true cases of epilepsy. Assuming that 66 per cent of the total number of 1,245 reported were feeble-minded, there would be at least 833 feeble-minded children now in the public schools of Indiana. These children are defective enough to be a problem to the schools, otherwise they would not have been reported.

"There are 17,447 inmates in the state and county institutions of Indiana. Nine thousand four hundred and eighty-four of these are classed by the institutions as epileptic, insane or feeble-minded. One thousand and ninety are epileptics. Three hundred and five of these are in the state village for epileptics, 307 in the state hospitals for the insane, and the rest are scattered among the other institutions. There are 5,794 insane, the majority of whom are in the state hospitals for the insane. This does not include 349 insane who are also epileptic and are classed in the table as epileptic. Two thousand six hundred are feeble-minded. A large proportion of these are in the School for Feeble-Minded Youth; 791 are in the county poor asylums scattered throughout the state. The rest are found in the orphans' homes, the boys' school and girls' school, and other institutions. This number (2,600) does not include 297 feeble-minded who are also epileptic and are classed in the table as epileptic. It is readily seen from this table that the state is at present caring for a large number of defectives in the institutions built for that purpose, but there are also many defectives in institutions of a correctional or eleemosynary nature where they should not be, considering the nature of the institution. These 9,484 mental defectives now on public support form .35 per cent of the total population of the state.

"A study of pauperism shows that $1,321,264.58 was spent in the state of Indiana in the care of paupers during the last year—$435,389.88 for poor relief and $885,774.70 for maintenance in poor asylums and orphans' homes. There is no doubt that much of this perpetuates poverty. Almshouses are places where prostitutes and feeble-minded women may go to have illegitimate children, and in many cases the feeble-minded women recuperate their physical condition and go out again, only to return later and again have an illegitimate child and complete the cycle. Every poor asylum has its proportion of feeble-minded men and women as inmates. There is no law compelling their stay at the asylum and they can go out when they will and reproduce their kind, as many of them do. It is a common sight to see whole families of feeble-minded people in a poor asylum at the same time. This is especially true during the winter, when travel on the roads is poor."

Indiana's Millionaires.

How many millionaires are there in the state of Indiana? The annual report of the commissioner of internal revenue, just made public, indicates that Indiana has 81. Many of these are of the multimillionaire class, judged by the income taxes which they pay to the government.

Counting 5 per cent as an average rate of income Indiana has at least 81 millionaires and multimillionaires, for 81 Indianians paid income taxes this year on incomes of $50,000 and over.

The annual report of the commissioner of internal revenue, just made public, shows that 5,607 citizens of Indiana paid income taxes this year. Of these, 4,640 were married, 681 were single men, 286 were single women and 37 were married women who gave separate returns.

The following figures made public by the commissioner of internal revenue show the incomes in Indiana on which taxes were paid this year:

Incomes of $3,000 to $4,000	1,358
Incomes of $4,000 to $5,000	1,090
Incomes of $5,000 to $10,000	2,062
Incomes of $10,000 to $15,000	532
Incomes of $15,000 to $20,000	215
Incomes of $20,000 to $25,000	106
Incomes of $25,000 to $30,000	71
Incomes of $30,000 to $40,000	61
Incomes of $40,000 to $50,000	41
Incomes of $50,000 to $75,000	29
Incomes of $75,000 to $100,000	11
Incomes of $100,000 to $150,000	10
Incomes of $100,000 to $150,000	19
Incomes of $150,000 to $200,000	6
Incomes of $200,000 to $250,000	4
Incomes of $250,000 to $300,000	1
Incomes of $300,000 to $400,000	[illegible]
Incomes of $300,000 to $400,000	[illegible]
Incomes of $400,000 to $500,000	2
Incomes of $500,000 to $1,000,000	[illegible]
Incomes of $1,000,000 and over	[illegible]

A very striking increase in the number of large fortunes in the country at large is indicated by the report. A special column is included in this year's report for incomes of $1,000,000 and over. Last year the highest classification was of incomes of $500,000 and over, of which there were only 174. This year taxes were paid on 209 incomes of $500,000 to $1,000,000, and on 120 incomes of $1,000,000 and over. In other reports the incomes of $500,000 and over increased in the year from 174 to 329.

Lauds Farm Colony.

That the state may eventually find that the best way of caring for her insane is on the farm colony plan is the opinion of Representative Charles A. McGonagle, one of the three members of the general assembly appointed by Governor Ralston to constitute a visiting committee for the investigation of state institutions. Mr. McGonagle with the other two members of the committee, Senator Walter Chambers of Henry county and Joseph M. Cravens of Jefferson county, had just returned from a trip to three of the state's five hospitals for the care of the insane, and he was particularly impressed by the success of the farm colony arrangement in the Richmond hospital, where about seventy-five patients are being housed in cottages and special dormitories particularly adapted to farm work.

The arrangements in these places are so complete that the patients are able to lead a normal life, while their labor makes them practically self-supporting. The men, by working the farm, produce considerable food used in the institution. Mr. McGonagle says that Superintendent Smith is anxious to have accommodations arranged for about 175 more patients in farm colony buildings.

From all institutions come the reports of being forced to reject applicants for admission to the asylums because of lack of room. "Even though they may be insane, the healthiest body of persons I believe I ever saw at one time," said Mr. McGonagle, "was in the Southern Hospital for the Insane at Evansville when the inmates sat down to dinner. Dr. Charles E. Laughlin, the superintendent of that institution, also makes free use of the patients in doing farm work."

SHORT STATE HAPPENINGS

Sullivan.—Robert Ritter, who gave his age as fourteen and his home as Olney, Ill., was arrested at New Lebanon for the theft of an automobile from a construction engineer living in Danville, Ill.

Indianapolis.—Eighteen saloons in the First ward here were closed by a remonstrance, which marked the beginning of the biggest fight the anti-saloon forces have ever made to drive saloons out of the city.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Terre Haute.—Crawford Fairbanks, millionaire brewer, and his brother, Edward, have offered to give a 24-acre tract south of the city for park purposes.

Logansport.—John Woodward, forty-seven, has escaped from the Northern Indiana Hospital for the Insane. He was sent to the institution from Wabash.

Warsaw.—An alleged "blind tiger" operated by Frank Compton, seventy-years old, in a small shack near the heart of the city, was raided. Compton was arrested.

Bloomington.—The Monroe county grand jury was summoned to meet Tuesday to investigate liquor law violations. Judge Miers and Prosecutor Barclay have charge of the inquiry.

Greenfield.—The county commissioners appointed Elmer E. Bussell county attorney; Oscar Heller, physician; John Turk, custodian of the courthouse; George Hammer, engineer.

Lafayette.—Conrad Huff of Danville, Ill. who died here under peculiar circumstances, committed suicide according to a verdict rendered by Coroner Van Reed. An autopsy was held and arsenic was found in the stomach.

Anderson.—Fred Marhanka, age seventy-three, is in jail here, charged with assault and battery with intent to kill as a result of stabbing Chester Puckett, twenty-four, during a fight. Puckett is in a serious condition, it is said.

Decatur.—French township, Adams county, voted wet Tuesday, 93 to 43.

Muncie.—Wesley Coffee, colored, thirty-four, was killed when he fell into machinery he was operating in the Muncie foundry and machine works.

Goshen.—A large house on the William Lewis farm, east of Goshen, burned. The fire started from a defective flue. Mrs. Gustavus Rosentrager, wife of the tenant and her three small children were in the house when the fire was discovered. The loss was about $4,000.

Connersville.—Three persons are in serious condition as the result of a close-range battle between Robert Agee and son and two patrolmen who tried to eject the Agees from their home. Robert Agee was probably fatally injured and his sixteen-year-old son was badly shot. Patrolman Harry Daniels has a bullet wound in his thigh. Patrolman Adams shot the Agees after the father had shot Daniels. It is said Agee had sworn to kill anyone who attempted to force him to leave his house.

Indianapolis.—Many alleged violations of the election laws in Logansport will undergo the close scrutiny of the federal grand jury, it was reported here. Investigators have made a report concerning charges that negroes were registered illegally. Many of them, it was reported, were laborers and were living in railroad box cars.

Indianapolis.—David R. (Bat) Masterson, convicted of perjury in connection with the civic troubles in Muncie, was sentenced to two to twenty-one years in prison by Judge Weir. He will appeal.

Indianapolis.—The township trustees of Indiana in the closing session of their convention decided to recognize the need of reorganization of the country school system of the state. The action of the trustees, who voted to name a committee of five to confer with educational authorities, came after a heated debate. Many of the leading educators have advocated the abolition of the office of township trustee in the school system. The trustees will ask the legislature to raise their salary to $3.50 per day. All the officers were re-elected.

Indianapolis.—Prodded by special instructions from Judge Anderson of the federal court the federal grand jury began a re-investigation of the alleged intimidation of colored voters by the police, and other alleged frauds in the 1914 primary and election in Indianapolis. Twenty-five politicians were summoned as witnesses. Judge Anderson's order of an immediate probe into these alleged violations will delay the investigation into the 1916 election in Indianapolis and the grand jury's report in the investigation in Lake county.

Gary.—Drastic enforcement of dead letter blue laws was threatened by Mayor R. O. Johnson as his reply to demands that he eliminate vice in Gary or face impeachment proceedings. Among other things he announced that the Sunday lid on saloons would be clamped down tight. "The aldermen who are demanding an unneeded cleanup are insincere and grandstanders," said the mayor. "In public they demand a cleanup. In my office they tell me they want only reasonable regulation. They will get what they demand publicly. The city is as clean as it ever was and their charges are untrue."

Indianapolis.—Capt. Paul Stutesman, Company D, Indiana National Guard, now in service at the border, has resigned.

Gary.—A bond issue of $60,000 has been recommended by the Gary park board to improve sites donated to the city by the United States Steel corporation.

Laporte.—Rev. E. S. Shathelf, formerly pastor of Lutheran churches at Belvidere, Ill., St. Joseph and Lansing, Mich., and pastor of St. Paul's church of this city, has designed and will leave the ministry because of ill health.

America's Rat Population.

The board bill for American rats is about $182,000,000 annually. Dr. Richard H. Creel, who has earned big laurels as an expert in figures, estimates the rat population as equal to the human population. But unless proper preventive measures are taken speedily, the rats in the country will make a charge on our resources far in excess of the present figure. As rapid breeders, rats leave the guinea pigs far in the rear. From ten to eighteen rats arrive in a litter. Litters are bimonthly events in rat nests, and the young rats begin to multiply when they are from three to six months old. Rats have become a real national menace.—Boston Globe.

A Mother's Burden

A mother who suffers kidney trouble, finds it hard to keep up her daily work. Lameness, backache, sharp pains when stooping and "blue", nervous or dizzy spells, make home life dreary. Active kidneys bring back vigor, health and a pleasure in family duties. If the kidneys are weak try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. C. A. Mayhew, 1442 N. Third St., Logansport, Ind., says: "I was bothered by disordered kidneys. My back was weak and ached as if it would break. When I tried to straighten after stooping, sharp pains darted through me. Often I could hardly stand, I was so dizzy. I didn't rest well and felt tired and worn out. Finally I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they rid me of all these troubles."

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

CHRISTMAS IN FAIRYLAND.

"The Fairies," said Daddy, "decided that they should give a Party during the Christmas Season.

"'Everything looks so like Christmas, and feels so like Christmas,' they said, 'that we should give a Special Ball.' And so they asked the other little Wood Creatures who had not gone to Bed because of the Cold and they asked the Brownies, Elves and Gnomes.

"The Evening came and the Fairy Queen was sitting upon her High Throne. It was built of Snow and Ice, and from the High Chair in which she sat were tall Icicles which reached the Ground.

"It was not a Cold Throne for the Fairies had covered it with soft white Wool, and besides the little Fairies do not mind the Heat or Cold, or Rain or Snow. They are always Happy, and Think there is something to be done on every sort of a Day.

"Around the Fairy Queen sat the other Fairies on a High Platform. They were Dressed in Gay, Red Gowns which were Decorated with Silver Trimmings. Their Crowns were of Bright Red and Silver. And their Wands were of Silver with Red Stars.

"The Fairy Queen wore a Gown which looked like a most Perfect Icicle and it Sparkled and Glistened in the Bright Starlight.

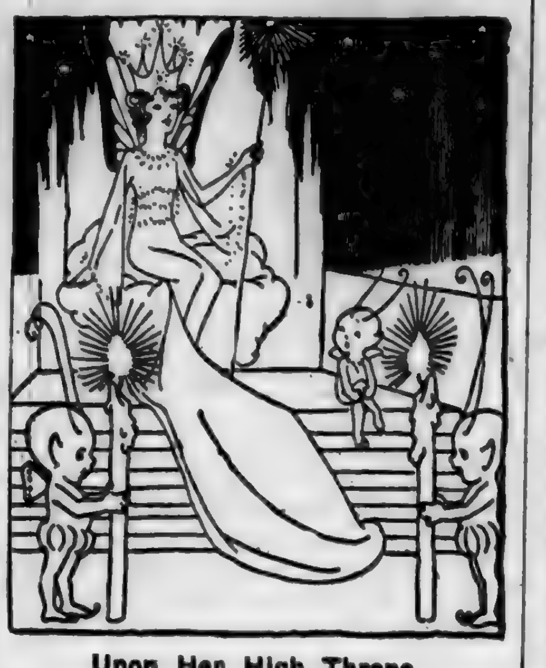
"Every single Star was out, for the Fairies had asked them to come to the Party, and Mr. Moon was there too looking very Happy and Beaming down upon everyone.

"The Brownies wore their Snow Suits, and the Gnomes wore Suits of Christmas Tinsel with Bells Jingling from them as they moved.

"It was indeed a Bright and Jolly Evening and the Fairies were very Happy.

"Fairyland was Decorated too with Christmas Holly and Red Berries of all sorts and on the tall Pine Trees were Red Candles and Tinsel. Everything was really Lovely and the Fairies, Brownies and Elves Danced in the Moonlight over the White Snow.

"While they were Dancing, some more Snow fell and it stayed on the great Pine Trees, making them droop down.



Upon Her High Throne.

"'We want to see the Dancing,' said the Snow Flakes.

"'And you must Dance, too,' said the Fairies.

"So the Snow Flakes Danced with the Fairies, and the Brownies and the Gnomes, while some of the Flakes still stayed on the Trees, bending them down and Whispering to them, 'Bend and Sway, that, you know is the Dancing Way.'

"And the Trees Whispered back,

"It's Christmas Time,
"We'll Sing in Rhyme."

"And though no one could have Understood the Poetry of the Trees, that night, the Fairies did, and it made them very happy.

"'But we mustn't have just a good time Ourselves,' said the Fairy Queen.

"'What would you have us do?' asked the little Fairies. 'We would Love to give others a good time, too.'

"'We will go around Tonight,' said the Fairy Queen, 'and to every little Girl and Boy Sleeping so soundly we will Whisper a Secret.'

"'What will be the Secret?' asked the Fairies.

"'We will tell them that we hope Santa Claus will be good to them, and they will Smile in their Sleep—for every Child knows of Santa Claus' Goodness. But our Secret will be to tell them that they will be ever and ever so much Happier on Christmas Day if they—will do something Kind for some little Children they know who are perhaps Poor or Sick or Unhappy.'

"'Oh, we'd Love to do that,' said the Fairies. 'Shall we get Started?'

"'Yes, right away,' said the Fairy Queen, and off they Scampered in this direction and that."

"Daddy," interrupted Nancy.

"Yes?" said Daddy.

"I know a little Girl who is sick. May I take some of my Christmas Money and get her a Present? It must be so hard to be in Bed on Christmas Day."

"And I'd like to buy a Boat for a Boy I know," said Nick.

"Good," said Daddy. "You'll enjoy Christmas far more as the Fairy Queen says, and not only will you be Happier yourselves, but you will give her a great deal of Delight that you hear her message."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 17

THE HOLY CITY.

LESSON TEXT—Rev. 21:1-7, 22-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people.—Rev. 21:3.

As we approach the end of the year, our minds turn from the imperial city, where last we have any authentic record of Paul, to the eternal city in which he has so long resided. In lesson ten we studied Jesus Christ in his resurrection glory, the source of all power, King of Kings and Lord of Lords for the redemption of the human race. In Lesson 11 we studied the glorified Christ who is actually working through his churches as the representatives of his kingdom upon earth. The succeeding chapters describe in symbols and pictures the discipline and training of God's people during the long generations that followed. In the lesson for today, we have a vision of the final triumph of Christianity when it shall have accomplished its work of redemption in this world.

I. The New Heaven and the New Earth (vv. 1-7). John in vision saw the consummation of the work of Christianity, the visible answer to the prayer which Jesus Christ taught his disciples to pray, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven." Heaven, as well as earth, has been invaded and polluted by sin, but both alike are to be made new. (I Peter 3:10, 11, 13). The true Jerusalem, of which Solomon's was but a type, is of heavenly and divine origin. It comes down out of heaven from God. We know nothing of the inhabitants of the universe of which we are a part, but here we have some scriptural indication of that place where God's children are to be with him eternally. The kingdom of God is among you, but it is eventually to be with God and Jesus in a peculiar and beautiful way. John's announcement came from out of heaven and out of the throne. (1) It was a tabernacle of God with men; rather he shall tabernacle with men. He is to pitch his tent among us (John 1:14 R. V. marg.) It is to be done eventually and permanently. This dwelling of God among us lies at the foundation of the blessedness and glories which are to follow. (2) They shall be his people. Israel had been his people; all nations are to be his people in the fullest sense. (3) God himself shall be with them, not only his tabernacle but he, himself visibly, personally. (4) He shall be their God, acknowledged in all his infinite claims, and he to them all that God is of love, power, wisdom, holiness and glory. (5) He shall wipe away every tear from their eyes. There will not be a single grief or heartache, unsatisfied longing or tear, for God shall wipe them away, and they will stay wiped away. (6) Death shall be no more. Of all the enemies, death is the last one which shall be taken from the earth. It is sweet to know that this last enemy is to be conquered. (7) There shall be no mourning, crying or pain any more. Every sorrow, agony, remorse, gloom, disappointment gone forever; death, tears, mourning all passed away. It is hard for us to comprehend the majesty and sweep of this great and glorious promise. (See I Cor. 15).

II. The Coming Light and Glory (vv. 22-27). The intervening verses are a wonderful description of the foundation walls and gates of the city. There will be no temple in that city for it will not be needed. Instead of the temple which stands for the temple of earth there is to be the presence of God, himself, but the lamb is also in the midst of it. Nothing can more forcefully impress upon us the deity and preeminence of Jesus Christ, the atoning lamb, slain before the foundation of the world. This city is to be a city of light and glory. It will not be an illumination by gas nor electricity, for the glory of the Lord shall lighten it.

Summary. What are the lessons for our day from this vision of the new heaven and the new earth? First: That the golden age of the Bible has not yet taken place. There are better times to come than anything the world has yet seen. Second: We have here the positive assurance of the success of our leader and the victory of Christianity in its conflict with evil. Third: The golden ideal of heaven is the means by which we can test our daily lives and the whole course of our conduct. The question we should constantly ask is, "Are we going to this heavenly ideal?" Fourth: The gates of that city are open; an angel is at each gate, and shall keep out all evil.

God desires that all men everywhere should repent, and is not willing that any should perish.

When the final assize shall have passed, no one will say that God did not give him a chance nor seek to inspire him to a place of eternal joy at his right hand.

Again there is to be federation of the forces of good. Today we too often find Christian people divided.

Invitation. "And the Spirit and the bride say come, let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely."

STOP AND THINK.

From a bulletin issued by the Chicago health department:

"You had a glass of beer or three fingers of rye today, didn't you? You think that it puts snap in your wits and steam in your cylinders. You feel fine and you think you are ready to tackle your job and meet any problem in sight with a clear head and a strong hand. But your feeling has deluded you. The fact is that the drink you took actually diminished your power to add numbers, to memorize, to associate ideas and to see, hear and think quickly.

"This statement is not the result of guesswork or a question of antithis or antithat on moral grounds. It is based on experiments made by an eminent scientist, Professor Kraepelin of Vienna, who has devised a series of tests and applied them to many individuals before and after they have taken alcoholic liquor. His findings have been duplicated by other scientific men.

"In all cases the ability to add, to memorize and to think quickly were greatly reduced within a few minutes of taking the drink, and the handicap lasted for as long as three days. The more difficult the task, the greater was the handicap, and the more numerous were the mistakes made by the one tested.

"This should make you think before you order another stein; for while you may drink another fellow's health in it, you are hurting your own brain power. And who does not need all the mind he can muster in these days?"

BEWARE OF SNAKES.

Beer is the diamond rattler of the liquor snake family. Some think it is innocent, while in fact it is more vicious than the rest. This is one reason why it bites so many. There can be no such thing as a harmless solution of a poisonous ingredient, no matter whether that poisonous ingredient is placed directly in the solution or engendered there by fermentative processes. Beer contains about 3½ per cent alcohol. This amount of alcohol is always poisonous to human tissue, the rapidity of destruction being measured by the quantity taken. The brewer reduces the percentage of alcohol in beer to quiet the alarm of his customer and then increases the volume of the drink without apparent detection. The drinker then plays his money for his share of imaginary sunshine on the basis of the old familiar game: Head up, the brewer wins; tail up, the drinker loses.

The opinions of the medical profession on the liquor traffic ten years or more ago are practically worthless, because those opinions were based on popular beliefs since known to be false. Our opinions now are based on unanswerable scientific demonstrations.—Dr. R. E. Minahan, Green Bay, Wis.

ALCOHOL AND MEMORY.

Professor Vogt of the University of Christiania made tests upon himself to determine the effects of alcohol upon memory. He daily committed to memory 25 lines of Greek poetry and recorded the number of minutes required to learn them. On the days when he took as much alcohol as one would get in from one and one-half to three glasses of beer, it took him on the average 18 per cent longer to learn the lines than when no alcohol was taken. Six months later, when he reviewed and relearned the same lines, he found that the lines learned on the alcohol days required more time for relearning.

AUTHORITIES ON BEER.

Beer comes next to brandy as a poison drink. It limits the capacity and lowers mind, soul and body. The soldier who abstains altogether is the best man.—Count Von Haesler, Late Commander of the Sixteenth Army Corps, Germany.

There is no justification for calling beer "liquid bread." A glass of heavy beer costing 25 pfennigs has no more nourishment than a piece of cheese costing one pfennig. . . . Beer is not the harmless drink it is supposed to be.—From a German Army Pamphlet.

WHAT IS INTEMPERANCE?

"Intemperance does not necessarily mean only obvious and palpable drunkenness. From the very moment in which alcohol has disturbed the healthy exercise of the mental faculties, or has impaired the moral sense by unduly exciting the animal passions or has in any way unfitted a person for discharging his duties in the proper struggle for survival, from that moment has there been guilt of intemperance."—T. B. Hyslop, M. D. Royal Hospital for the Insane, England.

BOOZE PRIMER.

Booze makes bums.

Bums make business for jail builders.

Jail builders make the people pay higher taxes.

Bums, jails and high taxes heap burdens on innocent people.

Get rid of booze and you get rid of bums.—Cole's Michigan Review.

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND DON'T KNOW IT

Weak and unhealthy kidneys cause so much sickness and suffering and when through neglect or other causes, kidney trouble is permitted to continue, serious results may be expected.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys should have attention first because their work is most important.

If you feel that your kidneys are the cause of your sickness or run down condition commence taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because if it proves to be the remedy you need and your kidneys begin to improve they will help all the other organs to health.

Prevalency of Kidney Disease.

Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalency of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are among the most common diseases that prevail, they are almost the last recognized by patients, who usually content themselves with doctoring the effects, while the original disease constantly undermines the system.

A Trial Will Convince Anyone.

Thousands of people have testified that the mild and immediate effect of Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized and that it stands the highest for its remarkable results in the most distressing cases.

Symptoms of Kidney Trouble.

Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you suffer from annoying bladder troubles, frequently passing water night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment, headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, poor digestion, sleeplessness, nervousness, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood, neuralgia, rheumatism, lumbago, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, may be loss of flesh or sallow complexion, kidney trouble in its worst form may be stealing upon you.

Swamp-Root is Pleasant to Take.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at all drug stores.

SPECIAL NOTE—You may obtain a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root by enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. This gives you the opportunity to prove the remarkable merit of this medicine. They will also send you a book of valuable information, containing many of the thousands of grateful letters received from men and women who say they found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed in kidney, liver and bladder troubles. The value and success of Swamp-Root are so well known that our readers are advised to send for a sample size bottle. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

With an Eye to the Future.

Valuable Farm Implement.

A German farm implement does the work of a plow, disk harrow and roller in a single trip over a field.

TO PREVENT OLD AGE COMING TOO SOON!

"Toxic poisons in the blood are thrown out by the kidneys. The kidneys act as filters for such poisons. If we wish to prevent old age coming too soon and increase our chances for a long life, we should drink plenty of pure water and take a little Anuric," says the famous Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y.

When suffering from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, or that constant tired, worn-out feeling, the simple way to overcome these disorders is merely to obtain a little Anuric from your nearest druggist and you will quickly notice the grand results. You will find it many times more potent than lithia, and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

NEWS OF GOSHEN

Goshen, Ind.—"One week's use of Dr. Pierce's Anuric has proved wonderfully beneficial in relieving me of dizziness and stiffened joints. These two things had caused me serious annoyance and I am very grateful to have been cured in so short a time."—MRS. F. M. VANCE, 321 N. Main St.

Simply ask your druggist for Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. Every package of Anuric is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic and reconstructor; or send Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for trial package.—Adv.

Iconoclasm.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "you can say anything you like nowadays about George Washington, can't you?"

"Yes. The lid seems to be off."

"Well, I never liked to mention it before, but I have my doubts about his being incapable of an effort to deceive. His picture looks to me as if the old gentleman wore a wig."—Washington Star.

They Were All in It.

The teacher was giving her pupils a lesson in honesty and told them that it was wrong to play marbles for "keeps" or to make bets.

"My father bet $200 on the 'lection," called out a cheerful voice.

"My father bet a hat," another voice replied, and before the teacher could call for order there was a chorus to the effect that election bets at least were allowable in the best families.

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

JES' 'FORE CHRISTMAS

They're acting mighty funny up at our house nowadays,
They're different than they used to be an' changed in many ways;
Not long ago if I should want some toy upon a shelf,
They used to make me get a chair and hunt for it myself!
Las' night I wanted building blocks and went to get 'em, too,
An' three of 'em got up an' said: "I'll get 'em down for you."

I used to have to hunt for things that somehow went astray,
They let me open bureau drawers without a word to say;
Ma would sew and sis would play, an' pa would read his book,
An' never think of gettin' from their chairs to help me look.
But las' night when I started in to find my 'lectric car
They all exclaimed: "We'll hunt for it; you stay right where you are!"

I've never known 'em be so kind in all my life before;
They'll jump to wait on me an' find the things I'm huntin' for;
Although they used to grumble an' to say I was a pest,
I'm not a bother any more—but why, I haven't guessed.
I only know that when I want some toy that's on a shelf,
They're mighty quick to see that I don't hunt for it myself.

—Edgar A. Guest, in Chicago Daily News.

HIS SCHEME.

"I'm going to dabble a little in stocks to buy Christmas presents."

"But suppose you lose?"

"In that case I'll have a good excuse for not making any."

Report of Convention

The Second Quarterly Convention of the Concord Township Sunday School Association was held Sunday afternoon beginning shortly after 1:30 o'clock at the Christian Church with township president, Frank Provines, presiding. Opening song, "Let a Little Sunshine In." Prayer by Rev. L. W. Spayd. Song "Beulah Land". Devotional led by Mrs. George Johnson, who read the first ten verses of the first chapter of Revelations and offered prayer. The next few minutes were devoted to songs, prayers, and talks. Three Sunday School workers said they had been in the work of 60 years or more, which were Sol Barney, Dr. B. S. Sheffer and Mrs. Mary Bowman.

The first subject under discussion was "The Relation of the Superintendent to the Sunday School" which was ably handled by Mrs. L. W. Spayd, who likened the superintendent to a contractor putting up a large building. He is the overseer of the whole thing and the work is all sublet, or subdivided under different heads or departments and each one is expected to attend to the department to which he is given or it spoils the work. The department superintendents must help with the work. The superintendent must be a Godly consecrated man. She suggested that there be variety in the opening and closing exercises, and spoke of a school she knew that had the scholars learn the Golden Texts each Sunday throughout the year, the one being able to repeat the 52 texts at the end of the year be given a bible.

The next subject was taken up at once it being "What is the School's Duty to the Superintendent"? and in the absence of Fred B. Leighty, the subject was handled by John George. He said the school must work in harmony with superintendent if any thing is accomplished. The discussion was led by John Knight in which several took part bringing out many good things. Song, "Onward, Christian Soldiers". The last subject was "The Training of Sunday School Workers" by Dr. B. S. Sheffer. The Sunday School should have efficient worker, he said, and to be that they should be trained. Efficiency in all the departments being necessary for a well regulated school. The discussions following each subject were good and brought out many good things. The departmental reports followed. The first being by the Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. Ethel Cheek, who reported between 70 and 75 babies enrolled at the five Sunday Schools. Elementary Department, Mrs. S. W. Tustison, reported classes in working order but thought the work not quite up to the state's requirements. Earl Wyatt, Supt. of Secondary Division, reported 8 organized classes. The Supt. of Adult Dept., J. R. Shilling, had no report. Mrs. Eva Sheffer reports Home Departments in all schools except Fairview, and they were working for one there. Dr. B. S. Sheffer reports one good Teachers' Training Class. Samuel Fellers, Temperance Supt., was not present. Frank Scholes, Supt. Missionary, reports all schools working along missionary lines. Collection $1 23. Benediction Rev. Spayd.

Obituary

Mary Adeline Keyes was born in Carroll County, Ohio, October 21st 1846, and after a brief illness of ten days passed from this life, Sunday morning December 3, 1916. Aged 70 years, 1 month and 12 days. On March 30, 1870, she was united in marriage to John M. Henderson. To this union were born five children, three of whom have preceeded her to the better land. Her husband and two children, Glen G. Henderson, of Woodburn; and Kathryn Lindstrom, of Pleasant Lake; one grandchild; five brothers, William L., of Clarksburg, W. Va., James W., of Leesville, Ohio, Tom H., and Harry L., of Canton, Ohio, and Jason E., of Ft. Wayne; and two sisters, Mrs. Sadie Butler, of Spencerville, and Mrs Samantha E. Singer, of Canton, Ohio, with a large circle of friends are left to mourn their loss.

All of her married life was spent on the farm to which she came as a bride, and there as the years passed by she labored and toiled and reared her family. Faithful and efficient, industrious and untiring, thoughtful and helpful, she did well her part even "unto the end." The funeral services were held from the M. E. Church, Tuesday forenoon at 10 o'clock. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Burial in the White City cemetery.

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

An Inside Bath Makes You Look and Feel Fresh

Says a glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast keeps illness away.

This excellent, common-sense health measure being adopted by millions.

Physicians the world over recommend the inside bath, claiming this is of vastly more importance than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing ill health, while the pores in the ten yards of bowels do.

Men and women are urged to drink each morning, before breakfast a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of helping to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Just as soap and hot water cleanse and freshen the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the eliminative organs.

Those who wake up with bad breath, coated tongue, nasty taste or have a dull, aching head, sallow complexion, acid stomach; others who are subject to bilious attacks or constipation, should obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to demonstrate the value of inside bathing. Those who continue it each morning are assured of pronounced results, both in regard to health and appearance.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK AND BEAUTIFUL

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

The STAR

By

Douglas Malloch

UPON the East appears a shining star,
Pinned like a jewel to the purple night,
One glowing star that lights
a waiting world,
One gleaming star, a beacon and a lamp.

FIVE points it has, five points like lesser stars:
One looks to Heaven, and its name is Faith.
Two follow the horizon: one is Love,
The other world-encircling
Brotherhood.
Another, Kindness, burning on unchanged,
And Charity, the fifth, are set toward Earth
To bring it nearer Heaven.

OUT from them all, from every shining point
Pour forth such rays!—a glory radiant
That seeks and finds the heaven's highest dome,
That seeks and finds the deepest vale of Earth,
The hearts of princes melts,
the beggars' warms.

BEHOLD the Star," they cry, "of Bethlehem!"
The Star of Faith and Love, of Brotherhood,
Of Charity and Kindness!
And behold
Around, about, its fair, efful-
gent rays—
The Christmas Spirit—lighting all the World!
Now "Peace on Earth," they cry, "Good Will to Men!"

BUYING A GIFT FOR HIS WIFE

This Man Had Plenty of Help While on a Shopping Tour.

THE male shopper walked up and down the aisle of the big store looking about him with an expression of despair. He knew what he wanted to buy all right. It wasn't that. But he kept wandering about looking at the saleswomen behind the counters with all the perplexity of a dog trying to recall where he had buried a soup bone.

He stood off to one side staring intently at a busy young creature with dark bay hair behind the ribbon counter, and at last walked up within talking distance.

"Don't suppose you can leave here for a few minutes, can you?" he began in a low tone."

"W-h-a-t?"

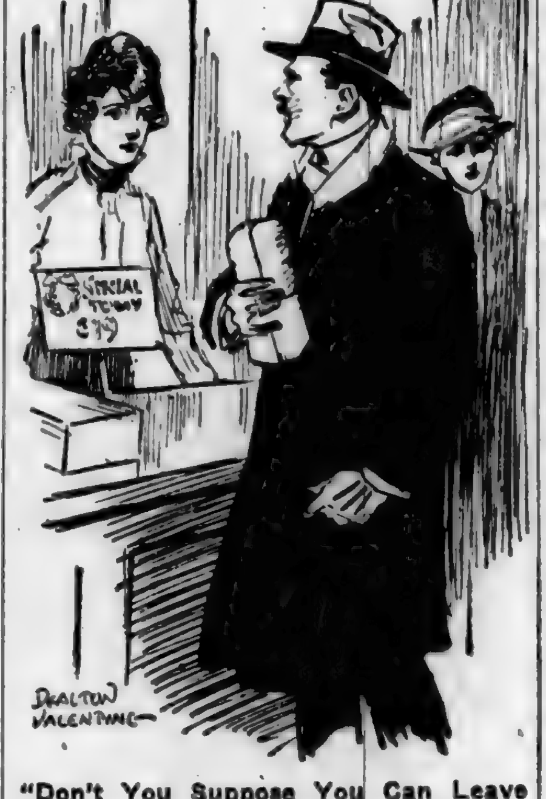
"I say—never mind. I mean wait a minute I'll be back."

And he rushed away to hide his confusion from the other shoppers. He did not return, but went over to another aisle and began sizing up people there, both in front and behind the counters.

Was the man bughouse? No. Just be patient and you'll hear all about it.

He kept looking and looking, and at last his gaze took in a tall young woman—reasonably young—with a bunch of small packages tucked under her arm. He walked up to her, hesitated, and then blurted: "Beg pardon, madam, but may I speak to you a moment?"

She gave him a look and started to hurry away, but he was obliged, having gone that far, to make good and convince her of the innocence of his motives.



"Don't You Suppose You Can Leave Here for a Few Minutes?"

"Don't be alarmed," he said, catching up with her. "I'm not trying to flirt or get fresh. Honestly, now, I'm not in the habit of speaking to women I don't know. Look me over and you'll see that I'm well-meaning enough. But the fact is you-ah, you-ah, you're just the same size as my wife—apparently! And—"

The woman gasped. 'I don't see—" she began.

"Oh, but I want to ask a favor of you," went on the male shopper, more at ease now. "I've looked all over the saleswomen and the only one that would do was busy behind the ribbon counter, but you're just precisely what I need—oh, I beg your pardon, I mean you're just exactly my wife's size and can tell me what to ask for. You see, I came here to buy her a shirtwaist that she's been dropping little hints about, and now that I'm here it's just struck me that I haven't the remotest idea about her size. I'm the densest person you ever saw about such things—don't even know my own waist measurement. I'm positive, though, that whatever your size is would do for her. You may be an inch taller than my wife, but that's about the only difference."

"It's a little unconventional, isn't it?" the woman smiled not unpleasantly. "Still I don't see why I shouldn't tell you that my size is—that my shirtwaists are usually size thirty-six."

They had been walking down the aisle and were now right by the shirtwaist counter.

"I had a blue one picked out there," remarked the man, "that seemed to be about what I wanted to get, but I didn't know what size it was. See' That'n lying over there on top of that pink outfit."

"Does your wife like that shade of blue?" the woman asked significantly, after biting her lips for a moment.

'Why—er—well, of course she hasn't seen it," replied the male shopper. "Do you suppose she'd like some other color better?"

"You see," pointed out the kind woman in considerate, half-sympathetic tones, "that particular shade of blue doesn't go with any other color. Now, if I were receiving a shirtwaist for Christmas I should want a white waist. Of course your wife may have expressed a preference for some other color. No? Well, now you understand it's none of my affair—and this is certainly rather informal, me helping you to select something for your wife, whom I don't even know, to say nothing of not even knowing your name—but I should think any woman would be delighted with something like this one, for instance." And she reached over to pick up one with a lot of lace and mosquito netting on the front of it.

The male person inquired the price. It was $4 more than the blue one he had selected, but he said he would take it, and no questions asked.

"Send it out to number so-and-so Such-and-such street, and—oh, that won't do. It might be delivered when she was at home and that would queer the whole thing. Better send it to my office. Thomas J. Wingett is the name, in the Pretentious building. I'd carry it, but I've got a lot of stops to make."

"Wingett," repeated the woman after hearing his name; "there's a Mrs. Wingett in our card club. You don't happen to be Mrs. Alice Wingett's husband, do you?"

"I sure am," grinned the man. "She's the girl that's going to get that shirtwaist off the pine tree next Monday."

"Well, of all things," gasped the kindly disposed woman. "I don't know Alice Wingett so very well, but I've met her at the club, and it does seem funny that I should be helping her husband to pick out a Christmas present for her. My name is Cummins. I don't suppose you know my husband. He travels most of the time."

"Seems to me I've heard Alice speak of a Mrs. Cummins," says Wingett. "Er—by the way, mebby you'd better not say anything to Alice when you see her about—about how informally we were introduced. She might think it funny. Like as not she'd think I'd been walking up and down the aisle staring at folks."

"I have a notion to tell her what you just said," gurgled Mrs. Cummins. "I guess I won't though. Seems to me the joke would be partly on me. Well, I hope Alice likes the shirtwaist."

"If she doesn't she hasn't good taste," grinned Wingett. "I certainly am obliged to you. If you can't make up your mind what to get your husband, let me know, and mebby I can help you out."

And he bowed gracefully as his new acquaintance gathered up her packages and tripped on her way.

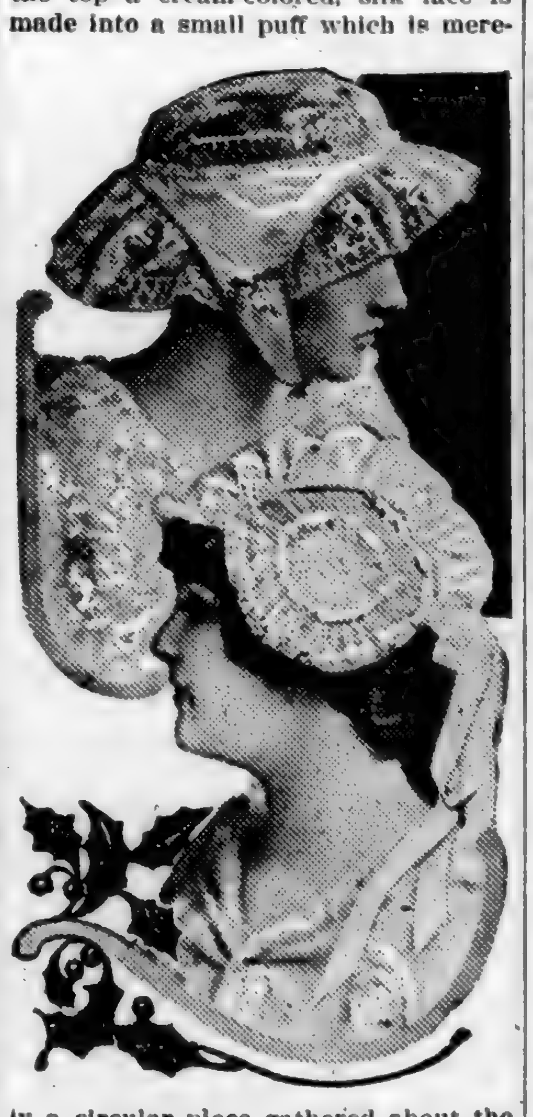
HOME MADE CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

Pretty Cap for Christmas

Boudoir or breakfast caps are among the pretty luxuries that women delight in and every year at holiday time they flourish anew. It seems that they are more captivating than ever this year and it is certain they were never shown in so great a variety of designs. There is no end to the original and beautiful combinations of ribbon and lace and tiny flowers, made of ribbon or chiffon, that go to make up this most fanciful headwear.

Two of the prettiest of the new caps are shown in the picture and it is evident that they are easy to make. At the top a cream-colored, silk lace is made into a small puff which is merely a circular piece gathered about the edge to fit over the top of the head. A frill of the same lace is sewed to the puff. Over this little lace cap a shaped piece made of ribbon or silk or satin is slipped. It is made of two pieces wide at the top and narrowing to a bridle under the chin, and is lined with silk. A narrow, corded piping finishes the edges, set between the outside and the lining. The bridle fastens with snap fasteners under a prim little bow of two loops. Millinery flowers are tacked on at the sides.



The cap below is made of two wheels of fine net joined by a gathered band of satin ribbon, about five inches wide. The wheels are made of straight strips of net shirred together and edged with narrow val lace. This lace extends around the cap.

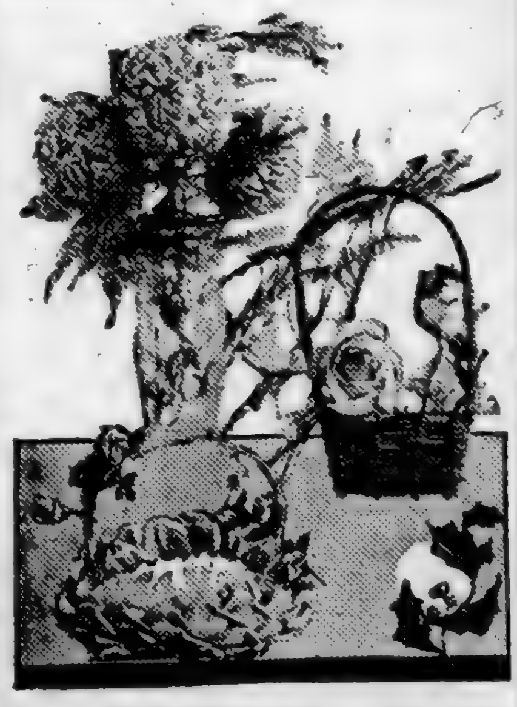
Baby ribbon is gathered and set about the wheels where the strips of net join and inside the lace edging. At the back a bow with long loops and ends is made of narrow ribbon matching the cap in color.

Pretty Table Decorations

Table decorations ought to come in for much attention as Christmas gifts this year, for there is a fad for artificial flowers as centerpieces. And the dining room is not the only one boasting beautiful touches of color in wonderfully life-like flowers made of ribbon or paper or bought from the milliner.

As a centerpiece for a luncheon table a little basket of ribbon roses sets in the midst of rose petals scattered over the cloth. Each rose petal, made of satin ribbon, is a tiny sachet.

In the picture three chrysanthemums are shown with sprays of preserved maidenhair ferns. These chrysanthemums are in yellow and saffron colorings and are made of paper. They have wire stems wound with green paper. At a little distance they cannot be told from the gorgeous real flower.



At the right a small dark willow basket bears asparagus fern and a half-blown rose, together with two buds made of satin ribbon. This is the most elegant of artificial flowers for the table.

A basket made of rose petals and a lace paper dolly is shown at the bottom of the picture. The foundation is of pasteboard, with a handle of green silk-covered wire. The petals, which may be of either satin ribbon or paper, are glued to the foundation, which is a circular piece of cardboard. Millinery rose foliage and two buds either of paper or satin ribbon trail over the handle. The heart of every housekeeper will rejoice over such gifts as these.

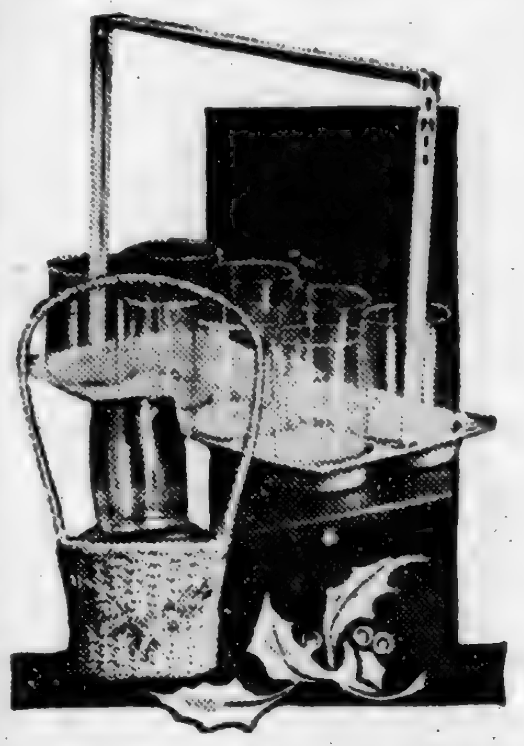
Gifts Every Woman Likes

A lemonade and a water server are among the pretty and easily made gifts that every woman will like to receive.

At the top of the picture above, an attractive lemonade server is made of an ordinary set of tin muffin rings, to which the tinsmith has added a handle.

The server is painted with white or blue or other colored paint and allowed to dry. Flowers or leaves cut from printed paper napkins are then glued to it at each corner, at the sides and along the center. Finally a coat of shellac is brushed all over the server. When this dries the server is ready for a set of thin glasses.

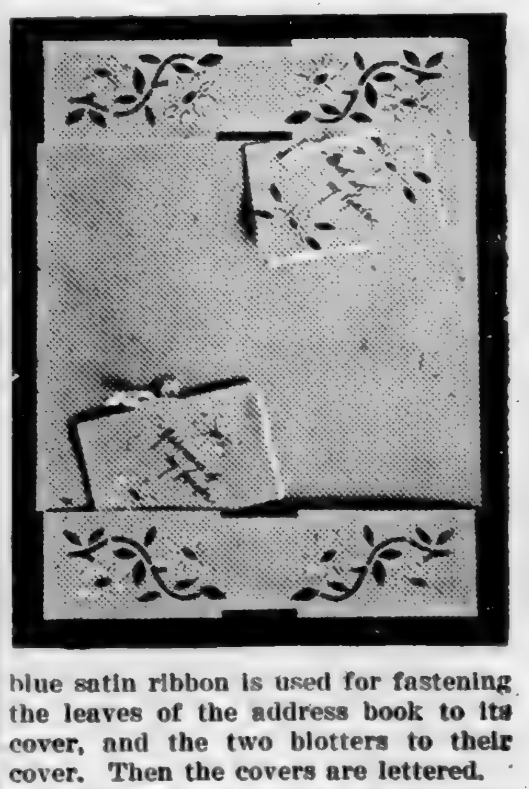
A small basket makes the water server, which carries a water bottle with a glass turned over its neck. The basket is first painted white and allowed to dry. Then it is decorated with a festoon of roses and leaves made of white sealing wax and tinted with paints—the roses pink and the foliage green. Finally the basket is varnished with shellac.



Set for My Lady's Desk

Just how attractive a desk set may be when it is made of heavy, delft-blue paper and ornamented with white flowers and black foliage, may be gathered from the picture above.

An oblong the size of an ordinary desk blotter is provided with two pockets extending across each end. They are fastened to it by means of black passepartout binding which extends along all sides of the oblong. Two smaller oblongs are cut from the heavy blue paper, to cover an address book and two white blotters. Narrow blue satin ribbon is used for fastening the leaves of the address book to its cover, and the two blotters to their cover. Then the covers are lettered.



The flowers and foliage are cut from printed paper napkins and pasted down. They look exactly like stencil painting. This is a convenient and pretty set, which costs next to nothing to make.

Absorbed.

"You look sleeply this morning."

"Blame Santa Claus."

"What did he do?"

"He brought my youngsters a puzzle and I stayed up until after two o'clock this morning trying to solve the blamed thing."

Good Christmas Motto.

"Peace on earth, and good will to men," is the Christmas motto, and the Christmas spirit should ring in our hearts and find a kindly expression in acts and words. What a joyful thing for the world it would be if the Christmas spirit of peace and good will could abide with us all every day of the year. And what a beautiful place this world would be to live in. And it might be so if each one of us would resolve in our hearts that peace and good will should be our motto every day, and that we, individually, would do our best to make the Christmas spirit last all the year round.

Benevolence Vs. Extravagance.

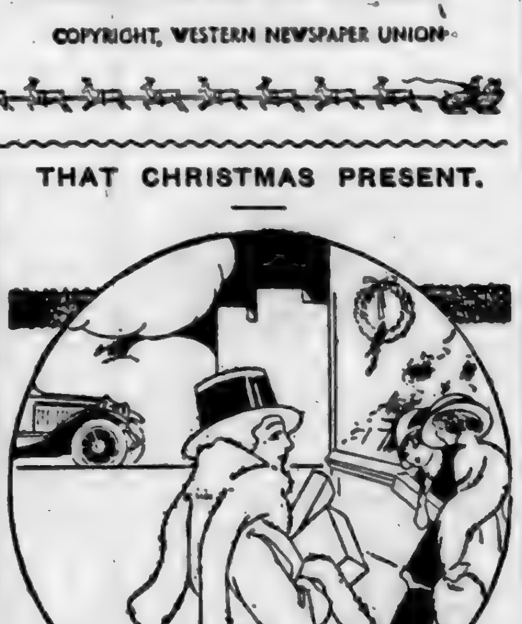
The greatest obstacle to charity in the Christian church today is the fact that men expend so much on their table and women so much on their dress, they have got nothing left for the work of God and the world's betterment.—Talmage.

Always New.

"You surely don't give your husband a necktie every Christmas?"

"Oh, yes, I do! And the poor dear never seems to know that it is the same [illegible]!"

THAT CHRISTMAS PRESENT.



"She's afraid I wasn't going to give anything to her."

"What makes you think that?"

"She sent in her present to me yesterday."

What He Missed.

Groans—Old Adam was a lucky man in one respect, anyway.

Grins—What's the answer?

Groans—Eve never gave him a box of bargain-counter cigars for Christmas.

Everything Matters.

Christianity is not man's confessior to God that nothing matters, since man is what he is. It is God's shout to man that everything matters, since God sees in man what man may become.—W. H. Blake.

A Christmas Plot.

She wanted some Christmas cigars and the dealer sold her a box of hay perfectos for 40 cents.

"Her husband will give you fits when he gets those," remarked a bystander.

"No; he told me to do it," explained the dealer. "Why, his wife would sue for divorce if she knew he pays $5 a box for his cigars."

Holiday Thought.

Give the Lord his due; the devil is certain to take his.

Always a New Lot.

About Christmas, consider this: There are at least four thousand kids who were too young to take note last year who are just old enough to be surprised when the tree lights up this year. Always there is a new bunch of Christmas come-ons.

Howdy, Uncle?

To keep the Merry Christmas from turning out a botch when the girls hang up their stockings poor dad hangs up his watch.

Restoring Lost Hearing.

The newest therapeutic machinery on record is that now being tried out in a French hospital to restore the hearing of soldiers who have lost it in battle. The machine is a phonographic instrument which pronounces vowels forcibly. These vowel sounds cause a vibration which acts upon the sensitive drum of the ear like massage, overcoming its numb paralysis. A number of tests have already demonstrated the power of the instrument to restore hearing to soldiers who are totally deaf. It must be tried continuously for several hours a day for two weeks at least.

Knowledge Extraordinary.

A group of Chinese boys were discussing the relative merits of two billboards—one advertising Carnation Milk, the other Bull Durham. One of the boys was explaining the signs to the others, so: "In America they have he cows and she cows. The she cows give milk, and the he cows give tobacco."

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

HAVE YOU ANY "SAND?"

If you should be mysteriously beaten up when you stepped into your home some night, and the following day should be warned that you would be killed next trip, do you think you'd hurry to hiding—or would you take defense steps and defy the Mystery to do its worst?

Supposed to be dead, Hugh Whitaker turns up in New York after five years and hunts for the girl he married there to protect her good name. During the midst of a brilliant theatrical performance, he and she recognize one another across the footlights. (She is known as Sara Law, a noted actress.) The play stops abruptly. She refuses to see him. Drummond, his former law partner, engaged to marry the supposed widow, is reported a suicide. Whitaker's friend, Martin Ember, former detective, doubts the report and warns Whitaker to beware of violence from a mysterious source. The warning is ignared. Whitaker is murderously assaulted and goes to Ember's country place to recover. Strange things happen there as told in this installment. Queer goings on!

CHAPTER IX.

The Window.

Though they left New York not long after three in the afternoon, twilight was fast ebbing into night when Ember gave the motor its head. Its headlights clove a path through darkness, like a splendid sword; on either hand woodlands and desolate clearings blurred into dark and rushing walls; only the wonderful wilderness of stars remained imperturbable.

Whitaker, braced against the jolting, snatched begrudged mouthfuls of air strong of the sea. He had no very definite idea of their whereabouts, having neglected through sheer indifference to question Ember, but he knew that they were drawing minute by minute closer to the Atlantic.

After some time the car slowed to a palpitant pause. Ember jumped out to open a barred gate, then, returning, swung the car into a clear but narrow woodland road. "Mine own domain," he informed Whitaker with a laugh. "Now we're shut of the world entirely."

Whitaker bent forward, inquiring: "Where are we?"

"Almost there. Patience."

Whitaker reckoned idly that they must have threaded a good two miles of woodland, when at length the car emerged upon a clearing and immediately turned aside to the open doorway of a miniature garage.

The forest hemmed the clearing on three sides; on the fourth lay water. A hundred yards distant the lighted windows of a one-story structure shone pleasantly through a scattering plantation of pine.

Linking arms the better to guide his guest, Ember drew him toward the lights.

"Bungalow," he explained, sententious, flourishing his free hand; "hermitage—retreat."

"Paradise," Whitaker summed up, in the same manner. "No neighbors?"

"Oh"—Ember motioned to his left as they faced the water—"there's a married establishment over there somewhere, but we don't bother one another. Fellow by the name of Fiske. I understand the place is shut up—Fiske not coming down this year."

"So much the better. I've been wanting just this all summer, without realizing it."

"Welcome, then, to Half-a-Leaf lodge!"

They entered a long and deep living room with walls of peeled logs and, at one end, a stone fireplace wherein a wood fire blazed heartily. At a comfortable distance from the hearth stood a table bright with linen, silver and crystal—covers for two. The rear wall was broken by three doors, in one of which a rotund Chinaman beamed oleaginously. Ember hailed him by the title of Sum Fat, explaining that it wasn't his name, but claiming for it the virtue of exquisite felicity.

"My servant in town, here man-of-all-work; I've had him for years; faithful and indispensable. . . ."

Toward the end of an excellent dinner, Whitaker caught himself nodding and blinking with drowsiness. Ember took laughing compassion upon him and led him forthwith to a bedroom furnished with the rigid simplicity of a summer camp. Then he slept round the clock. The shrill, imperative rattle of a telephone bell roused him. As he dressed he could hear the voice of Ember in the living room talking over the telephone. Presently there came a tap at his door, and his host entered.

"Up, eh?" he said cheerfully. "I was afraid I'd have to wake you." His smile vanished beneath the clouds of an impatient frown. "This is the devil of a note: I've got to leave you."

"What's the trouble?"

"That's what I'm called upon to find out. A friend of mine's in a tight place, and I've got to go and help pull him through. He just called me up—and I can't refuse. D'you mind being left alone for a day or so?"

"Certainly not—only I'm sorry."

"No more than I. But I'll try to get back tomorrow. If I don't, the next day—or as soon as I possibly can. Meanwhile, please consider yourself lord and master here. Sum Fat will take good care of you. Anything you want, just ask him. Now I've got to get into waterproofs—it's raining like all get-out, but I can't wait for a let-up."

By the time Whitaker was ready for breakfast his host had splashed off to his motor car.

The wind, freshening and driving very respectable if miniature rollers against the beach, came in heavy gusts, alternating with periods of steady, strong blowing. At times the shining lances of the rain seemed to drive almost horizontally. Whitaker poked his head into the kitchen. In that immaculate place, from which every hint of breakfast had disappeared as if by magic, Sum Fat was religiously cleaning his teeth—for the third time that morning, to Whitaker's certain knowledge.

When he had finished, Whitaker put a question:

"Sum Fat, which way does the wind blow, do you know?"

Sum Fat flashed him a dazzling smile.

"East'ly," he said in a cheerful, clucking voice. "I think vely fine three-day blow."

"At least," said Whitaker, "you're a high-spirited prophet of evil. I thank you."

He selected a book from several shelves stocked with a discriminating taste, and settled himself before the fire.

The day wore out before his patience did, and with every indication of fulfilling the prognosis of Sum Fat: by nightfall the wind had developed into an enthusiastic gale, driving before it sheeted rain and great ragged wastes of mist.

And the second day was like unto the first. The third day broke full of the spirit of the second; but toward noon the rain ceased. In the evening, weary of the sedulous attentions of a cloud of famished mosquitoes, Whitaker sat in darkness, not tired enough to go to bed, too tired to bestir himself and seek distraction from a tormenting train of thought.

A pool of limpid moonlight lay like milk upon the floor beneath a window and held his dreaming gaze while memory marshaled for his delectation a pageant of wasted years, infinitely desolate and dreary in his vision.

How long he sat unstirring, preoccupied with fruitless inquiry, he did not guess. But later he reckoned it could not have been long after ten o'clock when he was disturbed. The sound of a footfall, hushed and stealthy on the veranda, roused him with a start, and almost at the same instant he became aware of a shadow that troubled the pool of moonlight, the foreshortened shadow of a man's head and shoulders. He sat up, tense, rigid with surprise and wonder, and stared at the silhouetted body at pause just outside the window. The fellow was stooping to peer in. Had Drummond hunted him down to this isolate hiding place? On the thought he leaped up, in two strides slammed out through the door.

"I say!" he cried loudly. But he cried, apparently, to empty air. The man was gone—vanished as strangely and as quietly as he had appeared.

Pausing and glaring round the clearing in complete bewilderment, he detected or else fancied a slight movement in the shadows on the edge of the encompassing woodland. Instantly, heedless of the risk he ran if the man were indeed Drummond and if Drummond were indeed guilty of the assault now four nights old, Whitaker broke for the spot. It proved to be the entrance to one of the woodland paths, and naturally—whether or no his imagination were in fault—there was nobody waiting there to be caught.

But if anyone had been there, he had unquestionably fled along the trail. Whitaker in a rage set himself to follow. Before he realized he could have covered half the distance, he emerged abruptly into the clearing of the Fiske place.

Here he pulled up, for the first time alive to the intrinsic idiocy of his conduct, and diverted besides by the discovery that his impression of the early evening, that the cottage was tenanted, had been well founded.

The ground floor windows shone with a dim but warm illumination. He could see distinctly part of a living room rather charmingly furnished in a summery way. At its farther end a dark-haired woman in a plain black dress with a short apron and lace cap sat reading by lamplight—evidently a maid. Her mistress—judging by appearances—was outside on the lawn below the veranda, strolling to and fro in company with a somewhat short and heavy man who wore an automobile duster and visored cap. By contrast, her white-clad figure, invested with the illusion of moonlight, seemed unusually tall. Her hair was fair, shining like a headdress of palest gold as she bent her head, attentive to her companion. And Whitaker thought to discern an unusual quality in her movements, a quality of charm and a graciousness of mien rarely to be noticed even in the most beautiful of the women he had known.

Of a sudden the man paused, produced a watch from beneath his duster, consulted it briefly and shut the case with a snap. He said something in a brusque tone, and was answered by what sounded like a pleasant negative. Promptly, as if annoyed, he turned and strode hastily away, disappearing round the house.

Alone, the woman watched him as long as he was in sight, her head to one side with an effect of critical amusement. Then, with a low laugh, she crossed the veranda and entered the lighted room. At the same time Whitaker, lingering and watching without in the least understanding or even questioning why he was doing this thing so contrary to his instincts, heard the heavy rumble of a motor car on the far side of the house and saw the machine swing off across the clearing into the woods.

In the living room the woman was saying: "You may go now, Elise. I'll be ready for bed before long."

"Yes, madam." The maid rose and moved briskly out of sight.

Her mistress, casting aside a scarf of embroidered Chinese brocade, stood for a moment in deep thought, her head bowed, the knuckle of a slender forefinger tapping her chin—charmingly posed. Whitaker abruptly understood why it was he loitered, peeping—she was absolutely beautiful, a creature both exquisite and superb, a matchless portrait for the galleries of his memory.

Something—a movement or perhaps a slight sound—had drawn his attention from the woman. He saw the other man standing boldly in full moonlight, all his attention concentrated on the brilliant picture framed by the window. He was unquestionably without knowledge of the nearness of the other—of Whitaker in the shadows. And though his back was to the moon and his face further shadowed by a peaked cap, Whitaker was absolutely sure of the man—he was certainly Drummond.

Without pause for thought, he sprang toward him, in a guarded voice uttering his name—"Drummond!" But the fellow proved too alert and quick for him. Whitaker's hands closed on nothing more substantial than thin air; at the same time he received a blow upon his bruised shoulder smart and forcible enough to stagger him and evoke an involuntary grunt of pain. And before he could regain his balance the fellow was thrashing noisily away through the woodland underbrush.

Forthwith he struck off and blundered senselessly through the forest, misled by its elusive phantasmagoria, until, realizing at length he did but duplicate an earlier folly, he gave up the chase in disgust and slowly made his way back to the bungalow.

What is the connection between Whitaker, Drummond and the mysterious girl? Is more than one person eager to see Whitaker dead?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

On Eugenics.

Prof. Herbert L. Flower said in an address on eugenics in Boston:

"Youth's point of view is better than age's when it comes to questions of eugenics.

"Here, for example, is a dialogue to prove my claim:

"A beautiful girl said on a white beach to her fashionable mother:

"'Yes, mother, dear, I like Mr. Gobsa Golde, but isn't he too old to be considered eligible?'

"The fashionable mother compressed her rouged lips.

"'On the contrary, my love,' she said; 'he is too eligible to be considered old.'"

In National Forests.

Increasing use of the National forests for municipal camp sites and summer school locations is reported by the forest service. Permits have already been issued to several cities and educational institutions and other applications are expected. Officials say that far more people use the forests for public playgrounds than for any other purpose, and that this use promises to be one of the most important to which they can be aut.

TARNOWSKI AN ABLE DIPLOMAT

When Austria-Hungary named Count Tarnowski as ambassador to Washington it selected one of its best diplomats. He is a Pole and proud of it, but none the less a patriotic Austrian. He was one of the chief factors in smoothing away the difficulties between Austria-Hungary and Germany in the Polish question, and his diplomatic ability made itself felt and was recognized.

Count Tarnowski is of distinguished bearing. He is somewhat younger, perhaps, than Count von Bernstorff, to whom he bears some resemblance both in appearance and in manner. Count Tarnowski has proved himself one of the ablest diplomatists in the Austro-Hungarian service in recent years. He is cool, very deliberate and firm; not easily influenced or rushed off his feet.

The Countess Tarnowski was a Princess Czetvyertinska and is Russian Polish. She is an accomplished and beautiful woman of natural simplicity and grace of manner. Both the count and countess speak good English. The countess has never been in America.

RHODE ISLAND'S NEW SENATOR

© HARRIS & EWING

Though Peter Goelet Gerry, senator-elect from Rhode Island, is a man of wealth and assured social position, he is far from being one of the "idle rich."

Known in society as a polo player, a coaching whip and thorough sportsman, Mr. Gerry also is known to his friends as a student of politics and economics.

His first appearance in politics was in 1912, when he was elected a delegate to the Democratic national convention from Rhode Island. He was appointed a member of the committee to notify Woodrow Wilson of his nomination, and next appeared as the organizer of a series of Wilson clubs in his state.

Old-line politicians declined at first to take Mr. Gerry's efforts seriously, and mild surprise was expressed at the announcement of his nomination for representative in congress from the Second district, although he was not a voter there. After his opponents had looked up the law and found that, although unusual, there was nothing illegal in this, little interest was taken by them in Mr. Gerry's campaign. It was taken for granted that a man conspicuous in fashionable society, running in an alien district strong in factory workers, would be overwhelmingly defeated. Mr. Gerry, however, was returned a winner.

His race for the United States senatorship appeared at a casual glance even more hopeless. Senator Lippitt was considered thoroughly intrenched, and it had become almost a tradition in Rhode Island that its senators should be Republican. It was the first election in the state at which the senator had been elected by the popular vote, and Mr. Gerry waged his campaign with his accustomed vigor.

Mr. Gerry's family has been prominent for more than a century. He is the son of Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry. His great-grandfather, Elbridge Gerry, was elected vice president of the United States with President Madison in 1812.

WATSON LOST THIS VOTE

James E. Watson, United States senator-elect from Indiana, was making an earnest campaign appeal for the success of the Republican ticket at Ft. Wayne. Some fellow out in the audience shouted out:

"Give it to them, Jim!"

Watson paused, and, turning toward the fellow in the crowd, said:

"Well, my friend, that is just what I am attempting to do."

The man in the audience then said:

"You are all right, Jim, but you won't get my vote."

"I am sorry, sir," said Watson, "to know that. I would like to have you vote for me. Would you mind telling me the reason why you will not vote for me?" inquired Watson.

Amid great laughter on the part of everyone in the audience the man shouted:

"It is absolutely impossible, Jim, because I live over in the state of Illinois."

J. B. Haifley Writes News.

Editor St. Joe News.
Respected Friend:—

As we are now located in the city of Ft. Wayne, I suppose you would not object to hearing from your old friend and neighbor. Well everything is hustle, from day light to dark, and some hustling after dark. Saturday evening there was a man climbed up the outside of the Court House, clear up over the dome to the feet of the stature. This was quite a spectacular sight to see a man just crawl up the wall like a lizzard, without the use of a ladder or climbing irons. There must have been 30,000 people out to see the sight. Calhoun Street was a solid pack of humanity for three blocks; all traffic was stopped for more than one hour.

Well, Fred, you may not know how it feels to move into a great city and feel lost and lonesome. I am going to tell you something of a feeling I never experienced, but possibly thousands of others have, but may not have said anything about. I have been here now three Sundays, and as is my custom I sought a place of worship; this is easily to be found, but I have realized that there is something that our churches are very slack in. When a member from any church moves away from the locality where he has lived for some years, to a locality where there is a church of his own faith, and he can not find it, even though he longs to find his own people. This condition should be looked after by the church from which such person or persons have moved, there should be such a watchfulness for the members of their respective faith that some official of the church should report such removal to the minister of the church in the locality where such persons are moving. Such oversight often looses to such faith these persons, thus leaving them drift into other churches or drift into the world and are lost to the church. As you know I have been a member of the Lutheran Church all my life, but a peculiar coincidence has arisen in my case.

Here in Ft. Wayne, our Lutheran people are erecting a very fine and costly church which will surely be a credit to the city and an honor to the Lutheran Church in Northern Indiana. But I am lost, I have been here three weeks and not a Lutheran has called on us; this is no fault of the church here, it does not know we are here. I have walked two Sundays to the new building but have failed to find the place where this church holds services. There is no notice before the church doors to direct the wandering one to where he wants to go. I would suggest that every church in St. Joe take special interest in its church membership that when they move away that they inform the pastor of the church of their own denominational faith so such minister can call on them and give them the hand of welcome. There are plenty of good people in Ft. Wayne, and the churches extend a welcome to any who will come and worship with them, but then you know we feel more at home when we can assemble with those whose customs we are most familiar.

Well I must close for you will get tired if I continue much longer. We live at 741 W. Superior St., and will welcome any of our St. Joe friends any time you come to Ft. Wayne. With best wishes to all the folks.

I am
Your Friend,
J. B. Haifley.

Glando Did It.

Interesting Statement Given by Paulding Man.

Mr. C. A. Hughes, of Paulding, Ohio, said: "I had suffered so much from backache and kidney trouble that I was hardly able to drag around. After taking one treatment of Glando Tonic I was so improved that I took another treatment to make it a cure. I am now a well man and can heartily recommend Glando Tonic to all suffering from backache or kidney trouble."

A sluggish glandular system is responsible for most serious illnesses. Such a condition should not be neglected. The wonderful cures affected by Glando, the Great Gland Tonic, is due to the fact that it acts directly upon the glandular system. The three treatments which each package contains being necessary to effect a cure. Treatment No. One starts glandular activity. Treatment No. Two throws off the accumulated poisons and prepares the system for a tonic. Treatment No. Three is a splendid tonic that builds up the entire system. For sale by All Druggists.

A Municipal Christmas Tree

The municipal Christmas tree has become a popular institution in many cities throughout the country. Shortly before December 25 the largest tree that can be secured is erected in some park or public square, strung with thousands of lights, which spread their silvery glow over the tree during the holiday season. On Christmas eve it is the meeting place of people in all walks of life, who join in singing the old carols. In New York city the municipal Christmas tree is erected in Madison square; in Chicago in Grant park on the lake front.

Christmas

Luke ii, 1-14

NOW it came to pass in those days, there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be enrolled. This was the first enrollment made when Quirinus was governor of Syria. And all went to enroll themselves, everyone to his own city

And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, to the city of David, which is called Bethlehem, because he was of the house and family of David; to enroll himself with Mary, who was betrothed to him, being great with child.

And it came to pass, while they were there, the days were fulfilled that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her first-born son; and she wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger because there was no room for them in the inn.

And there were shepherds in the same country, abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock.

And an angel of the Lord stood by them and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them: "Be not afraid, for behold—I bring you good tidings of great joy, for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ, the Lord. And this is the sign unto you: 'Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger.'"

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying:

"Glory to God in the highest
"And on earth peace, good will toward men."

Annual Phenomenon.

"Now," said the magazine editor, "we'll have a cover design representing the old year as an aged man and the New Year as a smiling infant."

"All right," replied the artist. "But it looks like nature-faking to me. Anybody knows that a smiling infant couldn't grow all those white whiskers in one short year."

My Christmas Tree

On Christmas morning when I awake, and sleep-dust from my eyes I shake, I see a sight that makes me start and causes thumpings in my heart! A Christmas tree—oh, pretty sight—with candles, bells and balls alight.
With horns and dolls and sugar plums, and skates and trains and beating drums. And oh, it is a wonder-tree, with heaps of things for me to see! Rare gifts hang upon the side, which tinseled fairies cannot hide. A soldier-doll, a doll house, too, and strings
of gold come to my view, and as I look I seem to hear sweet
Christmas music soft and clear.
A Merry Christmas it seems to say,
A merry, happy, holy day!

Wise Willie.

After five-year-old Willie had gone to bed on Christmas eve his mother went into the room to see if he had hung up his stocking properly for Santa Claus. Much to her surprise she found that the little fellow had appropriated one of hers for the occasion and had attached a slip of paper on which he had printed in a bold hand one of his Sunday-school texts: "ThE LoRd lOvvEtH a CheaRfuLL giVveR."

A LITTLE BABY SISTER.

"Why don't you send your little friend a nice wax doll for Christmas?"

"I don't think she'd care much for a wax doll now, auntie; you see, they just got a meat one at her house."

Evidently Not.

"Confound the luck! What did she want to slap me for? She was standing squarely beneath a bunch of mistletoe when I kissed her."

"Son, I'm surprised at your obtuseness."

"Well?"

"I suspect that you were not the man she was waiting for."

Private Opinions Publicly Expressed

Why we Have Christmas?

"Christ and Christman or Santa and Xmas, WHICH?"

After asking many intelligent children "why we have Christmas"? I have certainly been astonished at their replies as follows—most usually "To get presents" and "Oh, that is when Santa Claus comes," or "I don't know." Who is to blame for this great mistake? Are Sunday School teachers failing to press home the lessons of Christ coming into the world to save, or Have the parents so impressed the teaching of Santa that Christ is given a back seat in the home and in teaching the child?

"Christmas Day" should be the happiest day in the world because that day is kept in commemoration of the birth of Jesus Christ our Saviour. He was the greatest gift that ever was or can be. John 3:16, "For God so loved the world, that his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

I consider the worship of Santa Claus, is real paganism. We are worshiping an unknown God right here in great and so called, Christian America. Again I notice many Christmas greetings are labeled thus: "Xmas Greetings". Now is this mere thoughtlessness, or are we too busy to take time to write the name of Christ on the day kept for his birthday? Only one day out of three hundred and sixty-five named for him, and are we ashamed to write the name of the one who was born in a lowly manger and died on the cruel cross for us. Just think how true to "Mother's" Day we have always been, let us be as true to "Christ's" Day hereafter, and not worship Santa anymore, for that keeps our Saviour in the rear.

Farmers Meet.

A number of farmers and wives of this vicinity spent a pleasant evening as the guests of Mr and Mrs. Byron Widney, at Maple Hill, last Tuesday, the 12th. inst. Mr. Widney had conceived the idea of forming a "Farmers' Club" and invited his neighbors and friends of the soil to meet with him and consider the matter. Those present were practically unanimous in favor of such an organization and they elected a chairman pro tempore, H. M. Widney, to preside until the club could be perfected.

The enjoyment of the occasion was enhanced by the solos of Mrs. Flossie Widney and Saxe Hadsell, and the talk on "Legumes" by the chairman. The latter was followed by an interesting discussion in which nearly all took part and profited. The club adjourned to meet with Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Widney at Spring Brook on Tuesday evening, Dec. 26, when the boosters of the movement hope to effect a permanent organization.

We understand that the purpose of this club is not to increase the high cost of living (praise the Lord) but it is designed to promote fellowship and neighborliness among its members and occasion a monthly meeting at which topics pertinet to the farm and household will be studied, along with songs and recitations.

Why can we not have several "Farmers' Clubs" in this community all working in co-operation with the Tri-township Farmers' Institute Association? It would be necessary to have several clubs because the ordinary home is not large enough to accomodate very many people but this disadvantage could be overcome by all working thru the Tri-township Association. Talk it over with your neighbors and then get busy.

SAYS MANY PRIVATE WELLS ARE UNSAFE

ANNUAL REPORT OF STATE FOOD AND DRUG COMMISSIONER H. E. BARNARD.

1,609 SAMPLES ANALYZED

Finds 75 Bad Wells Among 442 Deep Ones, While 476 Shallow Wells Were Bad and 263 Were Good—Cistern Water Polluted.

Indianapolis.—Studies made of the public and private water supplies of Indiana, showing that the average private water supply in the state is found to be of doubtful quality, are discussed in the eleventh annual report of the chemical division of the state laboratory of hygiene, made public by H. E. Barnard, state food and drug commissioner.

The report contains a detailed analysis of the work done by the department in the year ending October 1, including results of the investigations of food and drug supplies; a review of prosecutions filed for violations of pure food and sanitary food laws; a summary of the work of the sanitary inspectors of the department, and a report of an investigation of the dairy products' industry of the state. A great part of the laboratory work was done under the direction of I. E. Taylor, assistant chemist; H. E. Bishop, food chemist; W. D. McAbee, drug chemist, and John C. Diggs, water chemist.

Regarding private and public water supplies, the report says:

"Sixteen hundred and nine samples of water were analyzed during the year. Of these, 1,333 came from private supplies and were submitted either by the owner of the supply at the suggestion of his physician or by city or town health officials. Two hundred and seventy-six samples were collected from public supplies. Of the total number of samples analyzed 998 were found to be of good quality, 618 were condemned as bad and 33 were listed as doubtful. In other terms, 63 per cent were found good.

"In 1915, 63.5 per cent of all the waters examined were classed as good, and in 1914, 62 per cent were so reported. From the time the laboratory was opened, the percentage of good and bad waters has remained about constant. The figures for the last year were almost identical with those of former years. The source of the samples is so varied and so thoroughly represents the water supplies of the state that we believe it may be stated without fear of contradiction that the private water supplies of Indiana are of doubtful quality and that the chances of getting a safe drink of water from the average supply is about two to one.

"Of the 1,609 samples examined, 772 were taken from shallow wells, 577 from deep wells, 50 from streams, 56 from springs, 76 from cisterns, 18 from ponds and lakes and 60 from miscellaneous and undetermined sources. But 75 bad wells were found among the 442 deep wells used as private supplies. Four hundred and seventy-six shallow wells were bad, while but 263 were good. Thirty-two bad and 44 good cistern waters used as private supplies were examined. In most cases the cisterns were evidently polluted by washings from roofs. Unless purified by adequate filtration, cistern water is unclean and not potable. Of the 49 spring supplies, 37 were listed as good and 12 as bad. The fact that water flows from the ground in the form of a spring does not insure its quality. Many springs are but surface supplies and are subject to the same form of pollution as the shallow well.

"One hundred and thirty-five deep wells used as public supplies were analyzed and 124 were found to be of good quality. Of the 66 shallow wells examined 52 were good and 14 bad. Of the 50 stream supplies examined, 31 were found to be satisfactory and 19 were condemned. Five of the seven spring supplies were satisfactory. Ten pond and lake supplies were good, while eight were classed as bad.

"A summary of the quality of the private supplies shows that of the 1,333 private supplies sent in, 736 were reported as good, 564 as bad and 33 as doubtful. On the other hand, 222 of the 276 public water supplies were found to be good, 54 bad and none were classed as doubtful."

Appointments Announced.

Henry A. Roberts, state statistician-elect, who takes office January 1, announced that C. E. Thomas, a traveling salesman, Shriver avenue and Twenty-fourth street, has been appointed superintendent of the state free employment bureau in the basement of the statehouse. Mr. Roberts said he had chosen S. P. Axtell, a former probation officer in the Marion county juvenile court, as secretary of the employment bureau.

Glenn R. Cranor, a former deputy in the Marion county auditor's office, has been selected as second clerk in the statician's office. Edna Gardner, daughter of John T. Gardner, a traveling salesman, 1400 East Vermont street, has been appointed stenographer, and Mrs. Aldine Taggart of Knox has been appointed to the position as tabulator. Mrs. Taggart held the same position under the administration of Joseph Stubbs.

To Urge School Revision.

Committees from the Indiana State Teachers' association, the County Superintendents' association, the City and Town Superintendents' association, the Township Trustees' association and the state board of education decided, at a meeting in the office of the state board of education, that these organizations would urge the passage of a law by the next legislature revising the present system of administration of rural schools in Indiana.

The committees were unable to agree to all the proposed changes in the present system advocated in the recent report of a special committee to the County Superintendents' association, but did agree on the majority of these changes. So many of those present were opposed to the plan to strip the township trustees of their present powers in administering school problems, and to elect the members of the county boards of education by popular vote, that the proposal was not put to a vote at the meeting, and it was agreed that this proposal would not be urged before the legislature.

The committeemen, however, did agree to urge an increase in the qualifications for county superintendents, as outlined in the proposals to the county superintendents. The minimum salary of county superintendents should be $1,600 annually and the top salary to be paid will be left to the discretion of the counties, according to the proposals adopted.

The committees also decided to urge that the selection of a county superintendent hereafter would not be restricted to the county in which the selection of such an official is to be made, but that the county board of education may go "anywhere" to find the man it desires for superintendent.

The manner of selecting school supervisors, under the plans adopted at the meeting, will be left optional for the county boards. The qualifications for the supervisors that were recommended in the original report on the plan to revise the school system, heretofore made public, were adopted.

The committees also agreed that the proposed revision should compel the issuing of all teachers' licenses in Indiana from the state department of public instruction, thus taking them out of the hands of the county superintendents. The licenses, under this plan, would be good in any county of the state, it was pointed out. A minimum school term of 160 days for rural schools was fixed, as provided in the original report.

The committees arranged that W. W. Black of Indiana university, who has been foremost in urging the school system revision, should call in any of the members of the committees at any times he may desire before the convening of the legislature, to further the plans adopted.

The committees also adopted the provision of the original report, in which all teachers, beginning work in Indiana schools, shall have had at least one year's training in college or normal school and shall have at least some professional training in teaching, in addition. The amount of the latter is to be determined later, Professor Black said.

Indiana Campaign Expenses.

Thomas Taggart has filed his statement of campaign expenses, showing that he spent the sum of $5,045.19 in his effort to be elected senator. He received no contributions. Of his expenses the largest item was $1,500 for printing and a contribution of $1,400 to the Democratic state committee. He also set out in his statement that he indorsed a note for $2,500.

Fred S. Purnell, successful Republican candidate in the Ninth district, spent $1,007.15 and received contributions of $110. His contributions came chiefly from Hardy Songer, Charles Smith and Warren Goodykounts.

Everett Sanders, successful Republican candidate in the Fifth district, spent $1,417.64, and received contributions of $1,000. The contributions were from the Republican congressional committee.

David F. Maish, Democratic candidate in the Ninth, spent $2,066.06 in his campaign, including his primary expenses. He received no contribution.

Milton Kraus, successful Republican candidate in the Eleventh, spent $1,282.45 and received $1,000 in contributions from the Republican congressional committee.

New Incorporations.

Consumers Paper company, Delaware county, has dissolved.

Carey Realty company, Indianapolis; capital, $100,000; real estate; directors, John N. Carey, Mary Stewart Carey and Martha Carey.

The Federal Collateral society of Indianapolis has increased its capital stock from $50,000 to $125,000.

SHORT STATE HAPPENINGS

Jeffersonville.—The board of paroles has granted 60 paroles to prisoners of the Indiana reformatory, who will be allowed to return home in time for Christmas. Forty applications were refused.

Indianapolis. — The city council has asked the legal department of the city if the city may legally buy foodstuffs in large quantities and resell them at cost to consumers, in an effort to [illegible] the high cost of living.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

DEALERS SUE FOR PEACE

Muncie Mayor Succeeds in Breaking Local Coal Combine and Turns His Attention to Food Prices. —Buys Potatoes.

Muncie.—Retail coal dealers sued for peace and the city, represented by Mayor Rollin H. Bunch, formally went out of the coal business. The mayor has been selling coal at $4.50 and succeeded in wrecking the local combine, which was charging $6.50. By the agreement reached the dealers agree to sell soft coal, delivered, at $5. Mayor Bunch now will turn his attention to food prices and as the first experiment has ordered a carload of potatoes which will be sold at cost.

Logansport.—James Marshall, sixty-five, trustee of Jackson township, Cass county, is in a serious condition at his home near the Howard county line following a stroke of paralysis.

Sullivan. — F. J. Williams has paid $1,000 as a settlement out of court to William Riggs for cuts he inflicted on Riggs at a blacksmith shop in Hymera several weeks ago.

Gary.—With the arrival of the S. S. Metaafa Capt. A. R. Thompson, bringing 6,050 tons of pig-iron from Conneaut Harbor, navigation closes for the year at Gary harbor. Since late in April 404 ships, mostly ore vessels, discharged cargoes here.

Marion.—The Parent-Teachers' club of the Eleventh district held its annual meeting here and heard discussions of the parent-teachers movement as it relates to the public schools and community welfare. E. E. Elkenberry and Miss Harriett Waite, both of Wabash, were elected president and secretary. Wabash was selected for the meeting next year.

Elkhart.—Resolutions favoring statewide prohibition, woman suffrage and the calling of a constitutional convention and opposing the proposed embargo on foodstuffs, in addition to some 17 other resolutions are in the hands of the committee to be threshed out in the closing session of the Indiana State Grange.

Newcastle.—The pastors of Newcastle churches have expressed their willingness to fight for peace and unity. They have notified Rev. E. S. Shumaker, director of the Antisaloon league in Indiana, that if he persists in his refusal to join the Indiana Dry federation in its fight for statutory prohibition that they will refuse to support his organization.

Frankfort. — Seven survivors of the Number Ten club, which was organized in 1886, met at Robert Klopfer's home. The club was formed to have an annual banquet each year, at which game killed by the members would be served. A bottle of wine on the table at the first banquet is to be preserved until only one member survives, and he is to drink it.

Indianapolis. — William H. Burkhart, forty-seven, was arrested by the police and held on a warrant charging him with vagrancy, but he is really wanted to face a charge of embezzlement of $300 from the L. J. Root company of Peru. The warrant was sworn out by H. Jay Root of Shelbyville. Burkhart was bookkeeper in the Peru firm for two years. He has been in Indianapolis a month.

Indianapolis.—The cold wave revived the fears of a coal famine by heads of the state institutions in Indiana. Dr. George Edenharter, superintendent of the Central Hospital of the Insane, appealed to Governor Ralston, saying that the coal company holding the contracts for the institution would deliver each day only enough coal for that one day. The company pleads shortage in its own supply.

South Bend. — Alexander Herzog, twenty-one, of Hamilton, Canada, a paroled war prisoner, is under arrest here charged with violating the Mann white slave act, in bringing Mrs. John Zsida, twenty-two, and her baby, eight months old, from Guelf, Ontario. Police are holding them for extradition to Canada. John Zsida, the woman's husband, and Louis Lepkovits of Hamilton arrived Saturday and put the case before the police.

Indianapolis. — Adjt. Gen. Frank Bridges of the Indiana National Guard hotly criticized the excessive "red tape" of the war department, which may possibly prevent the mustering out of the Third Indiana before Christmas. "Of course, it takes time to check the equipment," said Mr. Bridges, "but it is 'red tape' that causes delay. I have had a field ambulance company at Fort Harrison for weeks, awaiting equipment before going to Texas." Officers of the company expect their men to eat Christmas dinner at home.

Evansville.—Mayor Benjamin Bosse proclaimed Monday Hospital day in Evansville and urged everyone financially able to make a donation to the campaign to raise $75,000 for a new addition to St. Mary's hospital.

Aurora. — Edward L. Nead and Peter J. Graley, deputy fish and game wardens, arrested Benjamin H. Anderson, forty-six, a farmer living four miles west of this city, on a charge of hunting without a license. He pleaded guilty before John W. Brannon, justice of the peace, and was fined [illegible] including costs.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 24

UNTO US A SON IS GIVEN.

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 9:1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT—For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.—Isa. 9:6.

The Christmas lesson naturally and logically follows the three lessons we have just had from the book of the Revelation where Jesus in his glory had been portrayed, and the ultimate success of his work is foreseen in the new heaven and the new earth. Isaiah saw the vision of his first coming. John saw the vision of his second coming, when what he began the first time shall ultimately be accomplished. The prophecy here spoken was uttered during the reign of Ahaz, B. C. 738 to 723. The king of Assyria was attacking Syria. The tribes of northern Israel were carried away as captives. Judah was in danger of invasion. (See II Kings 15:29.) Isaiah was preaching in his home city, Jerusalem. His vision of the Messiah Savior was not more than 800 years before John saw the vision of the glorified Jesus.

I. Darkness Versus Light (vv. 1-5). We need to go back into the eighth chapter to get the full historical situation of this part of the lesson. Ahaz, trembling in Jerusalem, had with him the Prophet Isaiah, the wisest and greatest man in his kingdom, yet Ahaz listened not to his words of warning and rebuke. He doggedly pursued his own course and sought help in every other quarter than the right one. This explains Isaiah's words, "The people that walked in darkness." Primarily he may have referred to those of the lands of Zebulon and Naphtali, the Galilee of the nations (John 1:46; 7:52) and the light which shone in them, which was the light of the world, Jesus of Nazareth (John 8:12). But there is a larger application in this verse to the whole world which lay in darkness until Jesus came, and the whole world has seen or shall see the great light (Luke 1:78-79). With the coming of light comes the increase of joy (v. 3 R. V.). In Israel there is to be, through Christ, a wonderful increase (Isa. 49:20-22; Zech. 10:8). In Christ there is to be great joy, the joy of harvest and of victory. The religion of Jesus Christ is pre-eminently the religion of joy (Acts 8:8; Phil. 4:4; I Peter 1:8) but the Child that was to be born was to be a Deliverer too, for the "yoke of burden" was a tax of $1,800,000 that had recently been levied by the king of Assyria. It was a night of thick darkness for Israel. Then, even as now, we have the moral darkness. (Read Rom. 1:20-32.) But the prophet saw the joy of deliverance. Jerusalem had been left in peace, Hezekiah succeeded his father, Ahaz, and entered upon a religious revival in the kingdom. The people who had walked in darkness had seen a new light. The prophet saw the dawning rays through the midst of this darkness of ignorance being removed. He also saw the coming of the Light of Men 700 years later, and the multiplication of the nations, the increase of their joy.

II. Unto Us a Son Is Born (vv. 6-7). The greatest joy for Israel in Isaiah's time was in this vision of the Messiah, the promised Savior. Isaiah is looking ahead seven centuries. We are looking back nineteen. He was to be king over his people. Name and title is here given. (1) "Wonderful" because of his nature, being both human and divine. The word made flesh and dwelt among us. (2) "Counselor," one who has the wisdom to guide himself and others. No one guided by him has ever failed of true success. (3) "The Mighty God." He was truly God so that we can trust him to the uttermost. He can also save to the uttermost. (4) "Everlasting Father," expressing his divine loving kindness and self-identification with the Father. (5) He is also "Prince of Peace," the one who rules so that peace and prosperity abide in his kingdom. He brings peace between man and God, and between man and man. He is the peace of the soul as well as bringing peace to the soul. The completeness of this picture which Isaiah saw is the one which St. John saw, of which we have been recently studying. These two verses are marvelous ones, not only because of the clear prediction of Jesus of Nazareth, made more than seven centuries before his first advent, but marvelous also for the fullness and richness of the revelation they contain concerning the person, character and work of Christ.

Our Lord's earth life began at Bethlehem, but he was from all eternity (John 8:56-58; John 1:1-2).

As a man is not at peace with God he cannot be at peace with himself or his fellows; but as Jesus restores peace between man and God, he also restores peace to the heart of the individual (Phil. 4:7).

Sunday school officers and teachers should realize the difference between the peace with God (Rom. 5:[illegible]) and the peace of God (Phil. 4:7).

Let us see to it that in the fullest sense our scholars may have the Prince of Peace in their lives.

CANADA AGAIN A PRIZE WINNER

Highest Premiums Awarded at Many Exhibitions.

The Fall fair season is past and a retrospect of them shows that Western Canada is stronger than ever in the matter of exhibits, and has taken more than her usual share of the prize money. From Western Canada to Texas is a long look, from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to the southwestern corner of Texas is several days' journey, but the enterprising farmers from this new country to the northwest were wide awake to the possibilities that waited them at the International Dry Farming Congress held at El Paso, Texas, a few weeks ago, to bring to the attention of those in that far-off corner what the land of Western Canada could do in the production of grains and roots from its soil. And what did these farmers do? The first thing was to carry off the first prize and sweepstakes for wheat. That was a foregone conclusion, for it has now become an established fact that nowhere else in the world is there grown wheat of the high character and market value of Western Canadian wheat. The same may be said of oats, of barley and of rye. But when it came to notice that Western Canada took first prize for alfalfa, it was then that more special attention was given to the products from Western Canada. It showed that in that country there lies the opportunity for supplementing the wonderful native grasses, so full of nutrition that with the tamed varieties, among them being alfalfa, the cattle with no other food were fattened and fitted for the shambles. Western Canada's worth was proved as probably the greatest mixed farming portion of the continent. When the steers from the Western Canadian prairies reach the Chicago stockyards they bring the top price and outweigh those from other places where grass fattening is the process. But it was not only in grains that Western Canada carried off the highest honors at the El Paso exhibition. Potatoes, parsnips, beets, carrots and rutabagas also took the highest honors. In root production this country is becoming favorably known.

The question often arises as to markets. There is always the highest price awaiting the producer, and as soon as the Hudson Bay Railway, now about completed, reaches the Bay, there will be an additional outlet for the product of the farm. The Pacific coast route, via the Panama canal, will give another outlet of which full advantage may be taken. With virgin land selling at from $15 to $20 per acre, and improved farms at reasonable prices and on easy terms, there is no better opportunity for the man with limited means and a desire to secure a home at the least cost in a country where he can soon become wealthy, as thousands of others have done, than in Western Canada. To the man with less means and who is prepared to accept a farm of 160 acres free, the Dominion Government offers him his choice in districts that have land of the highest type, but at present being from ten to twenty miles from a railway.

The Peace River Country, now being opened for settlement and reached by railway affords excellent opportunity to the homesteader. To secure information as to Western Canadian lands write the Canadian Government agent, whose name appears elsewhere in this paper.—Advertisement.

Dodging an Interview.

A young reporter once called to interview Senator Quay, and found him reading. After formal greetings had been exchanged the senator said:

"Do you play poker? Of course you do once in a while. Then you will find this one of the best poker stories you ever saw," handing the newspaper man a book.

The reporter out of politeness read a page.

"Ah," said the senator, "I see you are interested. Take the book along and read it at your leisure. Good evening."

And the dazed young journalist was out on the sidewalk before he could recover his breath.—Exchange.

In the name of Palm Beach new and wonderful sports clothes are just being launched upon the sea of fashionable favor. They are more certain of smooth sailing than any other venture in new apparel, for they have a definite character that has already been enthusiastically approved. They admit of spirit—not to say daring—designs, and give opportunity for distinctive dressing, which every woman, young or otherwise, may take advantage of.

One of the new skirts, with an appropriate blouse and hat, all made for the southern sojourner, are shown in the picture. The indispensable shore bag, matching the skirt, is given prominence befitting the high esteem accorded everything in the way of bags.

The skirt is fitted about the hips by overlapping the stripes in plaits that are stitched down to the thigh. It is bordered and belted with the figured stripe in the goods and is otherwise plain. It fits the figure exquisitely.

The tailored blouse is of crepe de chine, with a satin panel down the front and on the cuffs, where white mother-of-pearl buttons are mounted.

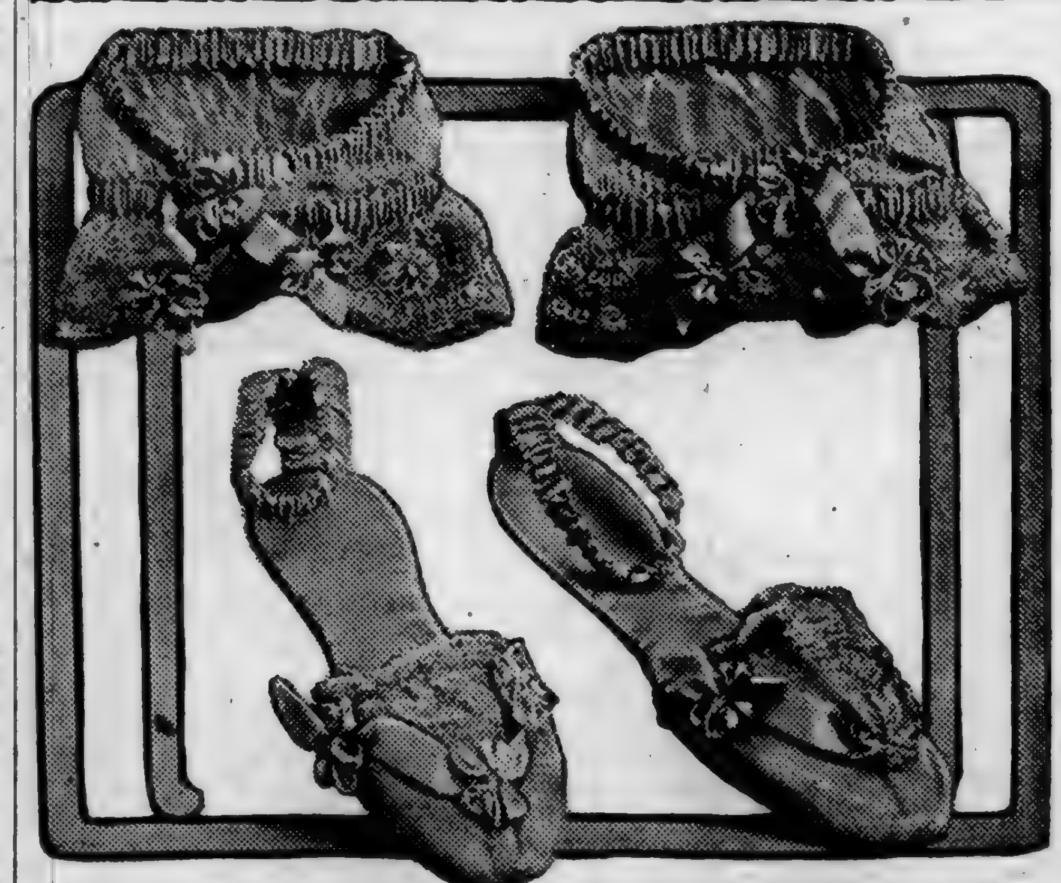
The shore bag and the shore pillow have cast their lot together in a union that appears for the first time this season, so that bag and pillow in one may be made to match the skirt. But oftener this clever combination of the two matches a hat and scarf made of silk.

The inspiration of the Chinese hat lingers in the pretty turban with straw brim and figured silk crown, shown in the picture. It is trimmed with a row of straw cabochons set about the brim edge.

Not New but a Little Different.

The French silk and velvet corsage flowers which have been used for a couple of seasons, done up in miniature bandboxes, have returned in the same or even daintier boxes with ribbons bunched at the sides and there is a difference in the flowers. The heart of each tinted rose or orchid holds a tiny vanity case with all its appointments.

In the Garden of the Boudoir



From head to foot the dainty woman likes to have all her belongings express refinement. Whether her taste be grave or gay (and it is sure to be both) she strives to make her love of beauty and her personality apparent in everything she wears. Her sense of fitness, and her disposition, may cause her to appear on the street in the most reserved of tailor-mades, but within her own four walls look for gayeties that blossom at their prettiest in her own room.

Such flowerlike things as are pictured here flourish in the garden of the boudoir, among other pretty luxuries that every woman loves. They are easily made and may match the negligee or be selected to harmonize with it. Light tints look well with white and almost any color.

The set of slippers with garters to match, as pictured, will look well with any color, which makes them a safe choice as a gift. The toe slippers are made of lambs'-wool soles covered with light pink satin. A flat elastic band, covered with pink satin ribbon shirred over it, makes a loop that is attached to the back of the sole and holds the slipper to the foot. The satin that forms the toe is covered with a light lace having the pattern run with silver thread. Three small, flat rosettes of satin ribbon are mounted on the toe. They are joined by ribbon and look like flowers.

The garters are made of elastic bands with ribbon shirred over them. A flounce of the silver-run lace falls from the covered band and helps make a lovely background for three rosettes like those on the slippers. Such an enticing bit of adornment is within the reach of everyone who knows anything of needle work and even a millionairess can't have anything prettier.

Ordinary Furs Disguised.

It is not the fur that counts, say the couturiers, this season. It is the finish, the way the fur is dyed and treated that renders it smart. And so consistently is this idea carried out that it is difficult to recognize well-known varieties, according to Vogue. Rabbit masquerades under all sorts and some of the furs with long hair are dyed and figured as strange new furs. Squirrel is dipped in dye and emerges as a new sort of chinchilla or as some hitherto unheard-of fur from that land of strange furbearing animals—Russia. The fireside cat is even offered up on the altar of fashion, and one shudders to think that one's latest set of marmot may possibly have been the police dog.

According to modern etiquette, the amethyst is the only stone which may be worn during mourning.

Temperance Notes

"UTTERLY FALSE."

In search of the facts concerning the claim of the brewers that "beer is liquid bread," the Christian Advocate, leading periodical of the Methodist Episcopal church, wrote to the director of the laboratory of the Connecticut board of health, asking for a scientific statement. The unabbreviated reply was as follows:

"Editor the Christian Advocate: In reply to your note I will say that it is hard to conceive a more misleading statement than to call beer 'liquid bread.' The facts are that the grains out of which beer is made do contain a deal of nourishment, adapted both for fuel and tissue building. In the process of beer-making the materials are mostly destroyed and removed by the process of clarifying. As a result the final product has lost practically all the tissue-building material it ever contained, and most of its fuel food has been converted into alcohol, which has less fuel value, to say nothing of its poisoning effect upon the nervous system. Before the fermentation the material might possibly be called 'liquid bread,' but not after the fermentation and clarification; for these processes have destroyed nearly all the value it originally possessed. The final product has no tissue-building value, only a little fuel value, and in addition has a poisoning action upon the nervous system. Bread has large value as a tissue builder and also as a fuel, and in addition has no bad effect upon the nervous system. To call beer 'liquid bread' is therefore utterly false and badly misleading.

PROMOTES PROSPERITY.

Constant reiteration of the false statements of liquor advocates has undoubtedly led some persons to the conclusion that Maine is suffering and has been impoverished because of its prohibition policy. A careful and truth-seeking investigation will show the exact opposite to be the case.

A bulletin by the United States census bureau reviewing the 30 years preceding 1912, shows the steady advancement of Maine in financial independence. In 1880 Maine's per capita debt was $8.49, as contrasted with an average of 11 states of $5.48. In 1912 it has been reduced 75 per cent, and the average of the other states only 36 per cent. Maine now owes $1.67 per capita, while the other states average $3.62. Massachusetts, with her high-license system, which the liquor advocates say is the best license law in the world, has a per capita indebtedness over 13 times larger than the prohibition state of Maine. The general comfort of the people of Maine is manifested by the large percentage of homes owned free from debt. In 1910 the total number of homes owned was, according to the census report, 109,298, and 75 per cent of these were free from mortgage.

GOOD OF PROHIBITION.

"The plea that prohibition fails to prohibit would be quite valid if it could be shown that any license system succeeds better in regulating the liquor traffic. Police administrations fall down in the attempt to restrict illicit selling of liquors in any community where the traffic is licensed. Prohibition does throw the business into thoroughfares of the saloons and removes from the sight of the young, who are taught that the business is outlawed and disreputable. The drunkards for which it is incidentally responsible die off rapidly, for they are tempted to drink the worst and most powerful concoctions. Prohibition may kill the poor miserable tipplers, but it tends to preserve the middle classes.—New York Times.

ABSTINENCE INTELLIGENT.

Major General O'Ryan, commanding the division of New York troops, issued an order before leaving for the South, in which he said: "You will refrain at all times from the use of liquor and beer and the reason should appeal to your intelligence." One of the results of this order is seen in the reports of the sick rate. From July 27 to August 14 in the Sixth New York division it was only .0183. In the Spanish-American war the sick rate was from 7 to 15 per cent.

TAXPAYERS REJOICING.

In the first six months that Arizona was without saloons the city of Phoenix increased in taxable wealth $5,000,000, had a decrease in the tax rate, and the city government cost $20,000 less than during the saloon regime. Furthermore, the first six months the city was without saloons the number of arrests for drunkenness was 85, compared with 1,210 for the corresponding six months in the previous year.

A TRIBUTE TO PROHIBITION.

To show his appreciation of prohibition in the state of Washington a traveling salesman recently sent $20 to the Anti-Saloon league in Seattle, with a note which read:

"From a salesman who lives in California and who has come to Seattle for twenty years to sell merchandise, and who has sold more merchandise on his first trip in March of this year under prohibition than he ever sold on any previous trip; also more goods on the March, 1916, trip than with three trips in 1915 with open saloons."

SWAMP-ROOT STOPS SERIOUS BACKACHE

When your back aches, and your bladder and kidneys seem to be disordered, remember it is needless to suffer—go to your nearest drug store and get a bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. It is a physician's prescription for diseases of the kidneys and bladder.

It has stood the test of years and has a reputation for quickly and effectively giving results in thousands of cases.

This prescription was used by Dr. Kilmer in his private practice and was so very effective that it has been placed on sale everywhere. Get a bottle, 50c and $1.00, at your nearest druggist.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

Opalized Woods of Montana.

While people everywhere have heard of the wonderful petrified forests of Arizona, few of them are aware of the existence of another petrified forest in Montana of equal extent. The latter is held to be much more remarkable in many ways than the Arizona forests.

The petrified forests in the Southwest are chiefly extraordinary by reason of the fact that entire trees have by the action of the elements undergone transformation into agate. The Montana forest is more extraordinary because the trees have been changed into opal, instead of agate, thus making a very peculiar and beautiful ornamental stone.

An Aged Puppy.

The old farmer had been haled before the magistrate to show cause why he hadn't taken out a license for a pet terrier.

"Whoy, he's nobbut a puppy," he exclaimed in defense.

"Yes, yes, so you say," said the clerk. "But how old is he?"

"I couldn't tell to a bit," was the reply. "I never was much good at dates, but he's nobbut a puppy."

On the other hand, evidence proved that the dog was long past puppyhood, and the bench inflicted the usual fine.

Talking it over afterward, the farmer exclaimed:

"'Ang me if I can understand it! Last year and year afore that, I tole the same tale 'bout the same dog, an' it wor allus good enough afore. Who's bin meddlin' wi't' law since last year?" —London Tit-Bits.

Making Him Useful.

Walter Damrosch is quoted as telling of a visit of Paderewski to an English country house, where one afternoon a countess remarked to the famous pianist:

"Oh, Mr. Paderewski, you play, don't you?"

"Yes, madame," the master replied.

"Then," said the countess, "would you mind turning my daughter's music?"

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can tell.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite to impart color and a youthful appearance to the hair. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Christmas Greetings

By William Marion Reedy

MERRY CHRISTMAS to you all. Let yourself surrender to the season. Don't be afraid or ashamed to be a bit soft toward everybody. Obey that impulse to kindness. Throw off that inhibition on spontaneous friendliness. Note how it gets you more than you give. Reflect how splendid it would be to carry the feeling on beyond Christmas always. Don't let the horror and misery of the great war oppress you. In the conflict men are giving all they have and are for ideals. They are making and shaping a new world and a better one, building it with the supreme sacrifice of self. This world is what we make it. The love habit will beautify and sweeten it. Every little bit helps to make a mighty fire of love eventually to burn all hate away. Merry Christmas.

VENGEANCE ALL HE SOUGHT

When Crowd Learned Nature of Christmas Gift It Left Him to Commit His Crime.

It was Christmas eve, and a stout man with a large package beneath his arm hurried through the crowded thoroughfare, closely pursued by a small man of haggard aspect, with a thick stick in his hand.

On and on, relentlessly, the forlorn man dogged the other, and those who passed him heard an occasional word drop from his lips, indicative of despair or awful terror.

Finally, some of the crowd turned and followed the pair, determined not to miss the fun. The crowd grew larger, and finally a bold man went up to the person of haggard countenance.

"What's the matter?"

The little man turned.

"Matter?" he echoed. "See that man with a bundle? He is my next-door neighbor, and in that bundle he has a cornet which he has bought for his small son to play upon."

But the crowd waited no longer. It surged ahead and left him to work out his own salvation, and when peace had been restored the remains of the battered man and a battered cornet lay upon the pavement.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

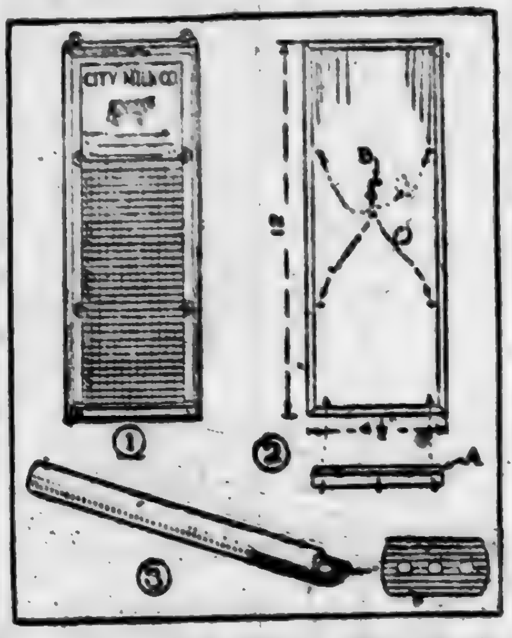
Articles That Boys Can Quickly Put Together.

Practical Christmas Presents Any Mother Will Appreciate, Coming From Son—Milk Card, Seam Ripper and Matchbox Holder.

By A. NEELY HALL.

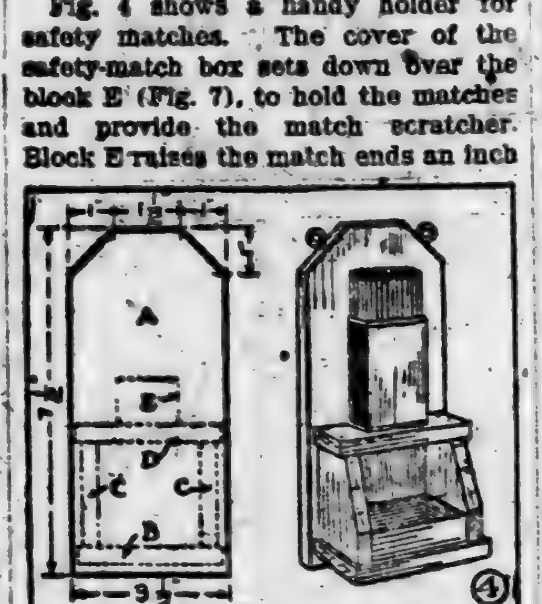
THE articles shown in the illustrations will appeal most to my readers who prefer ideas for things quickly put together, perhaps, but even the boy who likes more complicated problems will enjoy making these practical articles for the home.

The milk-card board in Fig. 1 is provided with screweyes to hang up on hooks outside of the door at which the morning milk is delivered. Fig. 2 shows a pattern for the board, but because milk cards vary in size you had better measure the card for which the board is to be used, to see that it fits, before you begin work. The margin around the card should be about as in Fig. 1. Bevel the edges of the board as shown. Then prepare the strip A (Fig. 2), and fasten it with brads along the lower edge of the board for the card to rest upon. Give the board two coats of shellac, varnish, or paint; then when it is dry, screw four hooks into it at the points indicated (B, Fig. 2), to hold the edges of the card, and a pair of screweyes into the top edge, for hangers.



Mother would appreciate the seam ripper shown in Fig. 3. All that you need is a safety-razor blade, and a short stick whittled round for a handle. Slot one end of the handle, slip the blade into the slot, and fasten with small nails driven into the handle and through a pair of the holes in the blade. Varnish the handle, and the little tool will be completed.

Fig. 4 shows a handy holder for safety matches. The cover of the safety-match box sets down over the block E (Fig. 7), to hold the matches and provide the match scratcher. Block E raises the match ends an inch above the cover. The safety-match box stands on shelf B, between ends C, (Fig. 7), for a burnt-match receptacle.



The match-box holder may be built up of cigar-box strips or wood one-quarter or three-eighths-inch thick. Fig. 5 shows a pattern for the back board A, and Fig. 6 shows the patterns for the other parts. Fasten block E to shelf D, in the center of its length, and about one-sixteenth of an inch inside of the back edge; then nail B and D to the ends of pieces C (Fig. 7), so their back edges are in a line with one another. Screw a pair of screweyes into the top of back board A, for hangers.

A Consolation.

Well, Christmas time has come again
To find us all so poor
We've spent enough in buying gifts
To finance one world's tour.
But let's console our empty jeans
With these few words of cheer
Those Christmas joys and Christmas pains
Do come but once per year.

Lesson One.

"Do you know how to run an automobile?"

"Certainly," replied Mr. Chuggins.

"What's the first thing a man who has bought a machine ought to do?"

"Begin work on a set of New Year resolutions relating to economy, temperance and all the other meritorious forms of self-restraint."

Not That One.

"Are you going to Miss Oldgirl's mistletoe party?"

"No; not unless she promises to stand from under."

Christmas Entertainments.

For the benefit of our readers we are in a position to give the information as follows, concerning the churches of the community, in the rendition of their Christmas programs.

Concord, Saturday Evening, December 23rd.

M. P. St Joe, Saturday evening, December 23, at 7:00 o'clock Mixed program. Santa Claus Up-to-Date. Santa will come down the St. Joe river this year in his sail boat and will stop at the M. P. Sunday School and bring a treat and lots of toys for the girls and boys. Presents may be deposited at the church on Saturday. Everyone welcome.

The public is cordially invited to attend these services.

HAVE ROSY CHEEKS AND FEEL FRESH AS A DAISY—TRY THIS!

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

To see the tinge of healthy bloom in your face, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, to wake up without a headache, backache, coated tongue or a nasty breath, in fact to feel your best, day in and day out, just try inside-bathing every morning for one week.

Before breakfast each day, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it as a harmless means of washing from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the blood and internal organs. Those who are subject to constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, rheumatic twinges, also those whose skin is sallow and complexion pallid, are assured that one week of inside-bathing will have them both looking and feeling better in every way.

ARMFUL TIME

A Christmas Editorial

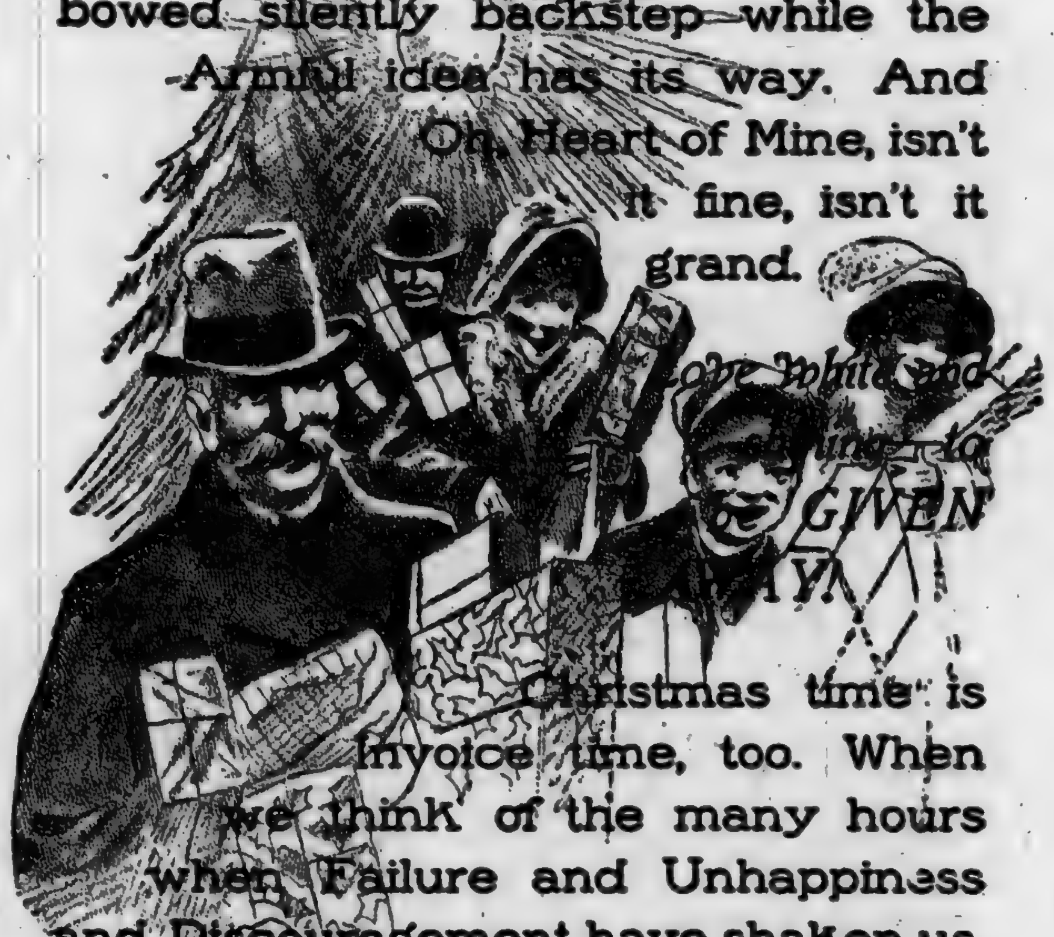
By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

Decorations by
MAGNUS G. KETTNER

CHRISTMAS time is Armful time. Homes of Armfuls, Cities of Armfuls—streets for miles just streams of humans, their arms cramped with bundles and packages bobbing against their beating Hearts. Packages wrapped in golden cords of Love. And aching backs glad of the chance to carry them—eased and strengthened by Love.

Packages, big and little—to be GIVEN AWAY!

Christmas time is Universal Spirit time. When forthwith all the mean and petty and unkind thought-affairs of the World, ashamed and head-bowed silently backstep while the Armful idea has its way. And Oh, Heart of Mine, isn't it fine, isn't it grand.



Love White and [illegible] to GIVEN [illegible]Y!

Christmas time is Invoice time, too. When we think of the many hours when Failure and Unhappiness and Discouragement have shaken us. And how we didn't care, because we knew all along that Success and Happiness and Encouragement would come around, sooner or later, and walk home with us. And yet—these three last named great Friends of Joy haven't walked home with All. And so, we are going to make this Christmas, as far as we are concerned, an Armful time to them. This way. In—

Food, Clothing, Money, Smiles, Pats on the Back—to be GIVEN AWAY.

Christmas time is Impersonal time. Neither poor nor rich, fortunate nor unfortunate can escape its sweetening power, if they but let it in when it comes around. For the whole World must eventually come to know the Armful Spirit and spread it far and wide till the humblest and most obscure shall feel it. So that they, too, may have—

Packages, Love, Food, Money, Clothing, Smiles, Success—to be GIVEN AWAY!

For, after all, what are Feelings and Things, and Lives, if they are not to be Expressed, Distributed, Divided, and with free and happy and lavish hand—GIVEN AWAY?

Everything in Life was made—to be GIVEN AWAY!

This Christmas time, my Brain, as we reason together, and my Heart, as we feel our impulses out into the wide world of life, can we ever hope to get and possess if we don't constantly GIVE AWAY? Don't you know that it is impossible to GET without GIVING—that, also if you don't Give, what you have will surely leave you? And Don't you know that after you have GIVEN AWAY all that you had and have gone back home to your Heart, you will find that you have more there than you had from which you have now GIVEN ALL away?

Let us think of Christmas in ARMFULS to be GIVEN AWAY—each and all as he is able.

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

TO OUR FEMININE READERS

Young ladies, if you were living in a secluded neighborhood and discovered a respectable, nice-looking young man on an adjoining place watching you daily, would you notify the police or would you encourage a bit of flirtation just for curiosity? What one young lady did in such circumstances is told entertainingly in this installment.

You remember, Hugh Whitaker, thinking he was about to die, married an innocent girl to save her honor and departed immediately for the Southern seas. Five years later he returns to New York, healthy and wealthy, and finds the wife, now a famous actress known as Sara Law, engaged to marry Drummond, his old friend and partner. She disappears suddenly. Drummond supposedly commits suicide, as her previous lovers had done. Whitaker is murderously assaulted in the dark and goes to the country home of his friend Martin Ember, near the sea. He discovers a mysterious spy there and thinks it is Drummond.

CHAPTER X.

—11—

The Spy.

Already the sun was warm, the faint breeze bland. Standing at the window and shading his eyes against the glare, Whitaker surveyed a world new-washed and radiant; the landlocked bay dimpled with vagrant catspaws and smitten with sunlight as with a scimitar of fire; the earth fresh and fragrant, steaming faintly in the ardent glow of the dawn.

In another moment he was at the kitchen door, interrupting Sum Fat's first matutinal attentions to his teeth with a demand for a bathing suit. Three minutes later, from the end of the small dock, he dived neatly, coming to the surface with his flesh tingling with delight of the cool water; then, with the deliberate and powerful movements of an experienced swimmer, struck away from the land. Two hundred yards out he paused, rolled over on his back, and, hands clasped beneath his head, floated serenely, sunlight warming his upturned face, his body rejoicing in the suave, clean, fluid embrace.

Then something disturbed him—a dull fluttering, vibrant upon his submerged eardrums. Extending his arms and moving his hands gently to preserve his poise, he lifted his head from the water. From the landing stage on the Fiske place a motor boat was standing out. The churning of its propeller had aroused him. He could see but a single person for all its crew. Seated astern, dividing her attention between the side steering wheel and the engine, she was altogether ignorant of the onlooker. Only her head and shoulders showed above the coaming—her head with its shining crown, her shoulders cloaked with a light wrap gathered at the throat.

Whitaker, admiring, wondered . . .

Sweeping in a wide arc as it gathered speed, the boat presently shot out smartly on a straight course for the barrier beach.

Why? What business had she there? And at an hour so early?

No affair of his—Whitaker admitted as much freely. And yet he was beginning his fourth day on the Great West bay without having set foot upon its Great South beach! Ridiculous oversight! And one to be remedied without another hour's delay.

Grinning with amused toleration of his own perverse sophistry, he turned over on his side and struck out in the wake of the motor boat. When at length he waded ashore he found the motor boat moored in shallow water at the end of a long and substantial dock. He patted the flanks of the vessel as he waded on.

"Good little boat!" said he.

Walking rapidly, very soon he stood at the head of a rude flight of wooden steps which ran down from the top of a wave-eaten sand bluff, some ten or twelve feet in height, to the broad and gently shelving ocean beach. Midway between the sand bluff and the breaking waters stood the woman Whitaker had followed. (There wasn't any use mincing terms—he had followed her in his confounded, fatuous curiosity!) Her face was to the sea, her hands clasped behind her. Now the wind modeled her cloak sweetly to her body, now whipped its skirts away, disclosing legs straight and slender and graciously modeled. She was dressed, it seemed, for bathing.

Whitaker turn to go, and turning let his gaze sweep up from the beach and along the brow of the bluff. He paused, frowning. Some twenty feet or so distant the legs of a man, trousered and booted, protruded from a hollow between two hummocks of sand. And the toes of the boots were digging into the sand, indicating that the man was lying prone; and that meant (if he were neither dead nor sleeping) that he was watching the woman on the beach.

Indignation, righteous indignation, warmed Whitaker's bosom. It was all very well for him to catch sight of the woman through her cottage window, by night, and to swim over to the beach in her wake the next morning, but what right had anybody else to constitute himself her shadow? Besides, it was possible that the man was Drummond.

He strode forward and stood over the man, looking down at his back. It was true, as he had assumed—the fellow was watching the woman. And his back was very like Drummond's. A little quiver of excitement mingled with anticipative satisfaction ran through him. Now, at last, the mystery was to be cleared up, his future relations with the pseudo-suicide defined and established.

Deliberately he extended his bare foot and nudged the man's ribs.

"Drummond . . ." he said in a clear voice, decided but unaggressive.

With an oath and what seemed a single, quick motion, the man jumped to his feet and turned to Whitaker a startled and inflamed countenance.

"What the devil!" he cried angrily. "Who are you? What do you want? What d'you mean by coming round here and calling me Drummond?"

He was no more Drummond than he was Whitaker himself.

"For that matter"—something clicked in Whitaker's brain and subconsciously he knew that his temper was about to take the bridge—"what do you mean by spying on that lady yonder?"

It being indisputably none of his concern, the unfairness of the question only lent it offensive force. The man made this painfully clear through the medium of an intolerable epithet and an attempt to land his right fist on Whitaker's face.

The face, however, was elsewhere when the fist reached the point for which it had been aimed; and Whitaker closed in promptly as the fellow's body followed his arm, thrown off balance by the momentum of the unobstructed blow.

What followed had entered into the calculations of neither. Whitaker felt himself suddenly falling through air thick with a blinding, choking cloud of dust and sand. The body of the other was simultaneously wrenched violently from his grasp. Then he brought up against solidity with a bump that seemed to expel every cubic inch of air from his lungs. And he heard himself cry out sharply with the pain of his weak ankle newly twisted. . . .

He sat up, gasping for breath, brushed the sand from his face and eyes, and as soon as his whirling wits settled a little, comprehended what had happened.

Half buried in the debris of a miniature landslide, he sat at the foot of the bluff. Immediately above his head a ragged break showed where the sand, held together solely by beach grass, had given way beneath the weight of the antagonists.

A little distance from him the other man was picking himself up, apparently unhurt but completely surfeited. Without delay, with not even so much as a glance at Whitaker, he staggered off for a few paces, then settled into a heavy, lumbering trot westward along the beach. He did not wish the woman to recognize him; therefore he was putting himself out of her way. For she was approaching.

When Whitaker caught sight of her, she was already close at hand. She had been running. Now as their glances met, hers keenly inquiring of Whitaker's still bewildered eyes, she pulled up abruptly and stood astare. He saw, or fancied, something closely akin to fright and consternation in her look. The flush in her cheeks gave way to a swift pallor. The hands trembled that drew her beach cloak close about her. She seemed to make an ineffectual effort to speak.

On his part, Whitaker tried to get up. A keen twinge in his ankle, however, wrung an involuntary grunt from him, and with a wry grimace he sank back.

"Oh!" cried the woman, impulsively. "You're hurt!" She advanced a pace, solicitous and sympathetic.

"Oh, not much," Whitaker replied in a tone more of hope than of assurance. He felt tenderly of the injured member. "Only my ankle—twisted it a few days ago, and now again. It'll be all right in a moment or two."

Her gaze traveled from him to the edge of the bluff.

"I didn't see—I mean, I heard something, and turned, and saw you trying to sit up and the other man rising."

"Sorry we startled you," Whitaker mumbled, wondering how the deuce he was going to get home. His examination of the ankle hadn't proved greatly encouraging.

"But I—ah—how did it happen?"

"A mere misunderstanding," he said lightly. "I mistook the gentleman for someone I knew. He resented it, so we started to scrap like a couple of schoolboys. Then . . . I wish to heaven it had been his leg instead of mine!"

"But still I hardly understand . . ."

"Well, you see, I—ah—I'm visiting Ember—the cottage next to yours, I believe. That is, if I'm not mistaken, you have the Fiske place?"

She nodded.

"And so, this morning, it struck me as a fine young idea to swim over here and have a look at the beach. And then I found that chap watching you—"

That startled her. "How do you mean—watching me?"

"Why—ah—that's what he seemed to be doing."

She shook her head. "You must be mistaken."

"Daresay. I generally am when I jump at conclusions. Anyway, he didn't like it much when I called him out of his name. I gathered, in fact, that he was considerably put out. Silly, wasn't it?"

"Rather!" she agreed gravely.

For a moment or two they eyed one another in silence, Whitaker wondering just how much of a fool she was thinking him and dubiously considering various expedients to ingratiate himself.

"I don't seem to think of anything useful to say," he ventured. "Can you help me out? Unless you'd be interested to know my name's Whitaker—Hugh Whitaker—?"

She acknowledged the information merely by a brief nod. "It seems to me," she said seriously, "that the pressing question is, what are you going to do about that ankle? Shall you be able to walk?"

"Hard to say," he grumbled, a trifle dashed. With infinite pains and the aid of both hands and his sound foot, he lifted himself and contrived to stand erect for an instant, then bore a little weight on the hurt ankle—and blanched, paling visibly beneath his ineradicable tan.

"I don't suppose," he said with effort—"they grow—crutches—on this neck of land?"

And he was about to collapse again upon the sands when, without warning, he found the woman had moved to his side and caught his hand, almost brusquely passing his arm across her shoulders, so that she received no little of his weight.

"Oh, I say—!" he protested feebly.

"Don't say anything," she replied shortly. "I'm very strong—quite able to help you to the boat. Please don't consider me at all; just see if we can't manage this way."

He endeavored to withdraw his arm, an effort rendered futile by her cool, firm grasp on his fingers.

"Please!" she said—not altogether patiently.

He eyed her askance. There was in this incredible situation a certain piquancy, definitely provocative, transcending the claims his injury made upon his interest. Last night for the first time he had seen this woman, and from a distance had thought her desirable; now, within twelve hours, he found himself with an arm round her neck!

And then suddenly she turned her head and intercepted his whole-hearted stare. For a thought wonder glimmered in the violet eyes; then they flashed disconcertingly; finally they became utterly cold and disdainful.

"Well?" she demanded in a frigid voice.

He looked away in complete confusion, and felt his face burning to the temples.

"I beg your pardon," he mumbled unhappily.

He essayed to walk. Twenty feet and more of treacherous, dry, yielding sand separated them from the flight of steps that ascended the bluff. It proved no easy journey.

The stairway accomplished, he limped to a wooden seat and sat down with much grim decision in his manner. But he mustered a smile to meet her look of concern, and shook his head.

"Thus far and no farther."

"Oh, but you must not be stubborn!"

"I mean to be—horrid stubborn. In fact, I don't mind warning you that there's a famous strain of mule in the Whitaker make-up."

She was, however, not to be diverted; and her fugitive frown bespoke impatience, if he were any judge.

Who do you think this girl is? And what is the purpose of the unrecognized spy? Do you think the girl knows Whitaker?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

She Also Needed Food.

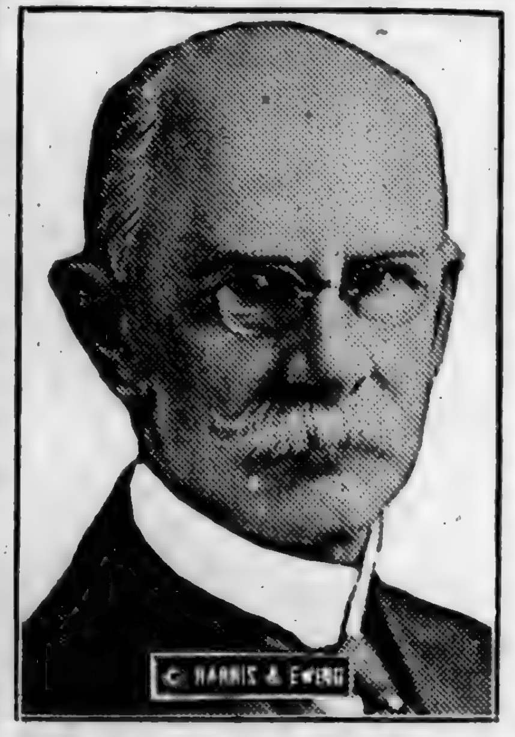
This from a member of the Boston Authors' club:

"A neighbor of mine threw a book out of his window and it has been lying in the gutter ever since."

"Maybe he doesn't love books."

"Oh, you can't judge of that by his treatment of this particular novel. It's entitled 'A Pair of Blue Eyes,' is advertised as 'daring,' and was written by a woman who left her husband because her soul was 'starved.'"

TALES OF TWO SENATORS



The old notion that a new senator must sit around like an empty plate and not open his mouth during his first year in office, has, as everybody knows, been completely nudged aside. Senator Thomas of Colorado, for example, began to take part in senatorial debates almost from the day he struck Washington.

One afternoon, soon after his arrival, Thomas offered a resolution about something or other. Immediately another senator jumped up, saying:

"The senator must have overlooked the fact that someone introduced the same resolution a day or two ago."

Thomas was embarrassed at his oversight, but only for a moment.

"Yes," he admitted, "but I wish to offer this one to give the matter added emphasis."

Dignified senators occasionally have odd chores to perform. A United States judge up in New Hampshire did not like the location of a washbowl in the room where he usually washed his hands in the federal building. So he wrote to Senator Hollis and insisted that Hollis consult one of the government architects in charge of such matters with a view to having the washbowl moved. As the request came from a United States judge, the senator did not like to ignore it. In setting out on his important mission, Hollis announced to friends in his office:

"I have at last found my real niche in statesmanship. Such minor matters as foreign treaties and the state of the Union can now wait while I go up and help to determine the grave question of where Judge So-and-so shall wash his hands."

WADSWORTH'S RAPID RISE

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

James W. Wadsworth, Jr., who will be the senior senator from New York, and whose rise in politics has been particularly rapid, is a descendant of the Wadsworth family which settled in the Genessee valley in New York state two centuries ago.

Senator Wadsworth is a graduate of Yale university and married Miss Alice Hay, daughter of the late John Hay He is a grandson of Gen. James W. Wadsworth, who was killed in the battle of the Wilderness. He entered politics under the tutelage of his father, who served several terms in the house of representatives. In 1906, when only twenty-seven years old, he was elected speaker of the New York state assembly, in which position he served until his retirement in 1910.

Used to farming on a large scale on his estate in Livingston county, Senator Wadsworth passed a large part of his time, until his re-entry into public life, in association with the big things of western outdoor life on a 550,000-acre ranch in Texas.

One of the most popular young Republicans in New York state, he was nominated for United States senator. His election in a fight against James W. Gerard, ambassador to Germany, is now political history.

Oddly enough, both Ambassador Gerard and Senator Wadsworth were boys in Livingston county.

NEW EMPEROR DEMOCRATIC

Charles, the new emperor of Austria and king of Hungary, was not brought up as a probable ruler of the most aristocratic and precedent-governed court in Europe. He is only a grandnephew of the late Franz Josef, and in his youth there were several lives between him and the imperial crown. For this reason he was educated much more informally than if the chance of his succession to the throne had been stronger.

He attended public school for a time, and imbibed a strong liking for democracy, which never has left him. He has the reputation of being the best "mixer" Europe has known among her modern monarchs, with the possible exception of the late King Leopold of Belgium.

Emperor Charles speaks English as though it were his native tongue. Once he said to Ambassador Penfield:

"You want to know how I learned English. When I was courting my wife—she was still in school in a convent—I spent a long time on the Isle of Wight, so that I could see her every day. That was where I learned English."

The Joy of the Beautiful Pine

The Story of a Municipal Christmas Tree

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

(Copyright by Thornton W. Burgess)

ONCE upon a time, long, long ago, the great - great - ever-so-great grandfather of Happy Jack Squirrel, whose name was Happy Jack, too, was scampering along the Lone Little Path that comes down the hill through the Green Forest.

He was happy, very happy, was Happy Jack, which was quite as it should be, for there was everything to make him happy. His sides were fat with the good things he had to eat. He had a beautiful new coat to keep him warm when rough Brother North Wind and Jack Frost should come driving the snow clouds to make white the Green Meadows and change the Green Forest until the little people who live there only in the summer would never, never known it had they happened to have come back. But rough Brother North Wind and Jack Frost had not come yet, and Old Mother Nature was busy preparing the Green Forest for them and urging all the little people to hurry and make ready for them.

So Happy Jack scampered down the Lone Little Path and pulled over red leaves and yellow leaves and brown leaves to see what he could find under them, and his heart was happy, for his stomach was full, and you know a full stomach, unless it be too full, almost always makes a happy heart.

Now, as he pulled over the red and yellow and brown leaves, his sharp eyes spied a little brown seed. It was a homely little seed which had fallen from a rough pine cone, and you and I would very likely not have seen it at all, or if we had we would have thought it of no account. But Happy Jack's eyes sparkled when he saw that homely little brown seed, for he knew that it was very good to eat.

Not that he was hungry. Oh, my, no! There wasn't room in his stomach for the least teeny, weeny bit more just then. But Happy Jack knew that there might come a time when his stomach would not be so full, and then that little brown seed would taste oh, so good!

Now, he had hidden a great many little brown seeds and fat nuts near the Lone Little Path, so when he picked up this particular little brown seed quickly he scampered over the dry leaves until presently he came to the edge of the Green Forest. He looked this way and he looked that way to see if anyone was watching him, and when he was sure that no one was, he ran out a little way from the edge of the Green Forest, dug a tinyehole in the soft, warm earth with his paws, dropped into it the little brown seed and covered it carefully.

"There," said he to himself, as he scampered back to the Green Forest to see what more he could find, "everyone knows I live in the Green Forest and no one will think to look out here for things I have hidden."

Old Mother Nature, who knew just what Happy Jack had done, smiled, for she also knew that it was more than likely that Happy Jack would forget all about that little brown seed, and if he did she had a plan to use it herself, and Happy Jack had saved her some trouble, for, though he didn't know it, he had planted it for her.

It all came about just as Old Mother Nature had thought it would. Happy Jack never once thought of that particular little brown seed, for he had hidden plenty to eat all the long winter in the Green Forest. So the little brown seed lay just where he had hidden it, until gentle Sister South Wind came in the spring and with her soft fingers opened all the little brown blankets of the leaf buds on the trees which Jack Frost with his hard fingers had been unable to open. Then Old Mother Nature remembered the little brown seed, and she wakened a little fairy who was sleeping in the heart of it, and the name of the little fairy was the Fairy of Life.

So out from the warm earth sprang a tender green shoot, which really was a teeny, weeny Pine-tree.

Jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun, looking down from the blue, blue sky, saw it and smiled, and his smile made the teeny, weeny Pine-tree very happy, for it warmed the ground and comforted the little roots growing there.

Old Mother West Wind, hurrying past on her way to blow the white-sailed ships across the Great Ocean, saw the teeny, weeny Pine-tree and sent some of her children, the Merry Little Breezes, to drive up a shower cloud that it might not go thirsty.

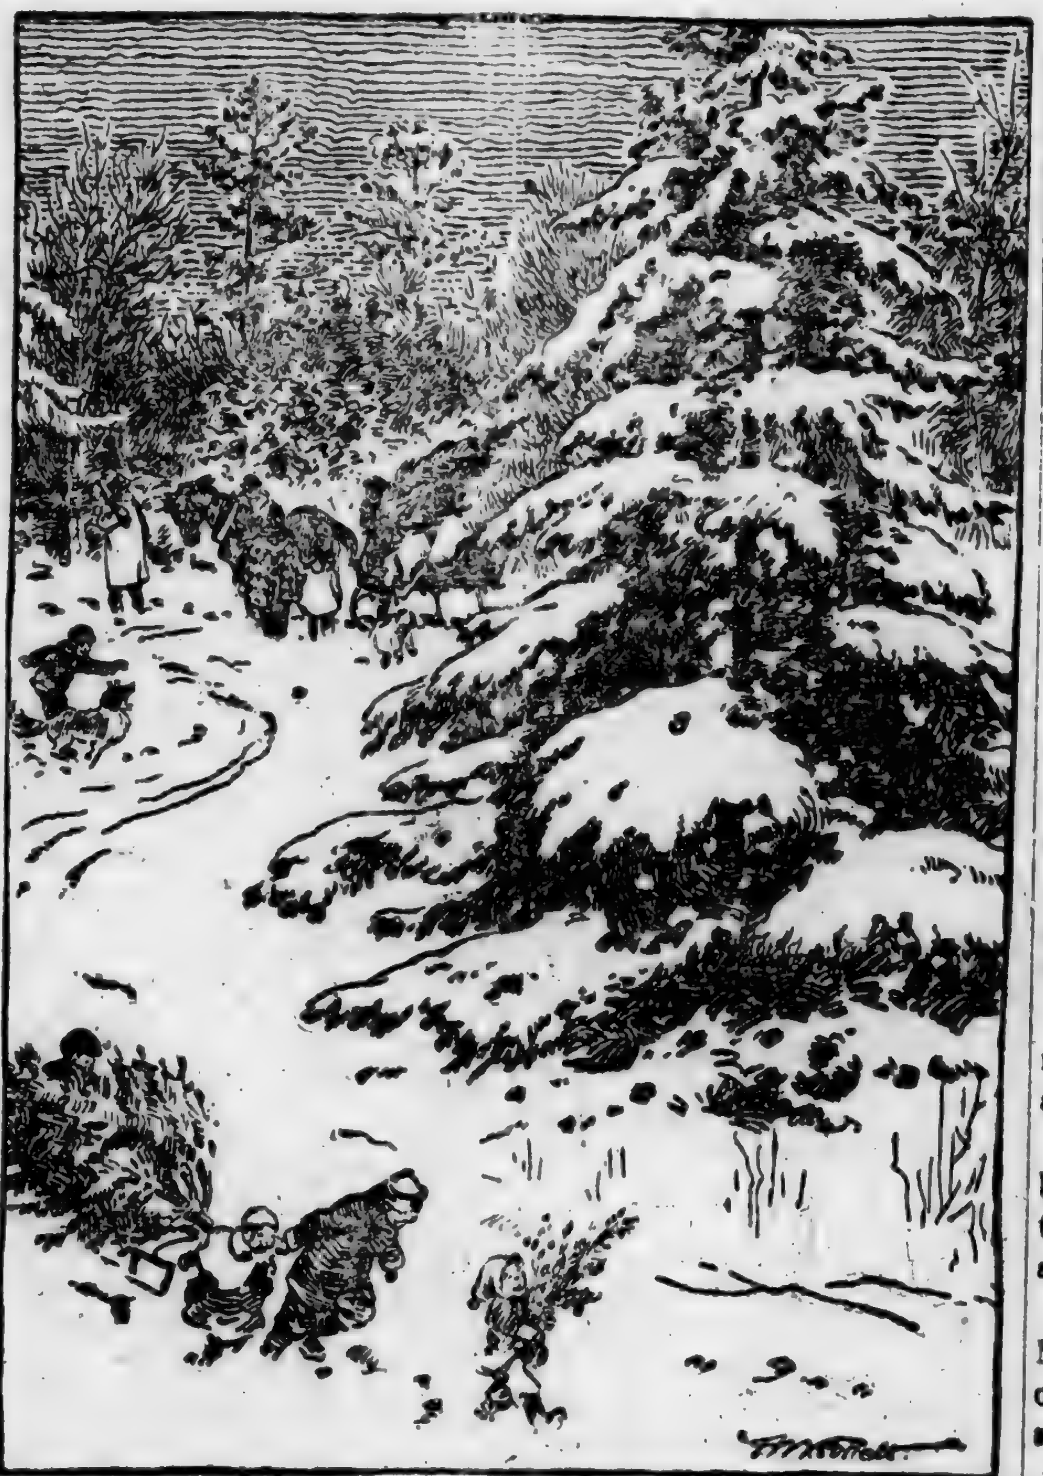
But no one else saw the teeny, weeny Pine-tree, or if they did see it, they took no notice of it. Happy Jack Squirrel ran right past and didn't so much as look at it, for he had forgotten all about hiding that homely little brown seed in the ground there. Once Peter Rabbit, nibbling tender sweet clover, nearly nipped off the head of the teeny, weeny Pine-tree and didn't even know it.

But nothing really happened to the teeny, weeny Pine-tree, and it grew and grew and was happy, for it loved jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun and Old Mother West Wind and the Merry Little Breezes, and they loved it. So it grew and grew, and when rough Brother North Wind came again he covered it deep with a soft blanket of snow to keep it warm all winter.

So the teeny, weeny Pine-tree was kept safe all the long winter, and when gentle Sister South Wind once more came in the spring the teeny, weeny Pine-tree began to grow again. It grew and grew and grew and grew until it was no longer teeny, weeny, but put out sturdy branches and was very good to look upon and held its head high, for it was indeed a beautiful young tree.

And for a time the young Pine-tree was very, very happy. But after a while it began to feel lonely. All the other Pine-trees were in the Green Forest, and often it could hear them whispering together and it longed to whisper with them and could not, and so it sighed and sighed, and Peter Rabbit passing that way often stopped to wonder what made such a handsome young Pine-tree seem so sad.

So the years passed and the young Pine-tree became bigger than any of its neighbors in the Green Forest, and became known as the Beautiful Pine.



Once Every Year, Came Merry Children, and Older Folk, and With Laugh and Song Would Cut Young Pine Trees and Carry them Away.

Announcement

With this issue The St. Joe News completes the thirtieth year of it's existance. Many papers in towns the size of St. Joe have died in this length of time and we still live. We appreciate the patronage given us and in turn we have tried to give the people a good weekly paper--much better than many we know in other towns. Our subscription list is growing constantly, but in spite of this fact all country weeklies selling at $1.00 a year, are facing the great high-cost-of-paper which makes it impossible to produce it as before. We appeal to all our subscribers to make prompt remittance espcially all who are in arrears one year or more. Announcement as to price for the future will be made later so you had better make your renewal at once.

Christmas Bells

Again it has been our pleasure to pass the Yuletide Season of the year and pay our tribute of respect to the Christ, the new born King of 2,000 years ago. Again has the importance of the birth of our Saviour been carved deeper in our minds, that we may more closely imitate his life in our daily walk, that we may be a living example of a true Christ-like Spirit to all the world. Again has the importance of the birth of Christ been painted so clearly upon the vision of all christion inhabitation of the world that none have any excuse whatsoever if they do not inherit the everlasting life of a heavenly home over there. The prophets by vision 700 years prior to his birth told of his coming. In his birth is the proof that those visions were of divine origin and later we will celebrate his Ressurection which is the final proof of his identity as the Son of God.

On Saturday evening, December twenty-third, at the Methodist Protestant church, due celebration of Christmas was given. For many days, the Superintendent and his worthy assistant had planned to make this day one to be remembered by all scholars of the school. At first a complete program was looked forward to, but on the last moment conditions developed that could not be followed out in detail, so said management together with their faithful committees had to change their plans to the old time method of entertaiement of songs, recitations, etc.

We fully approve of this class of Yuletide Celebration, as it takes away the chance of someone being slighted or hurt, it gives everyone the same position and opportunity.

The exercises were commendable from start to finish.

The special features, the beautifully decorated ship, was an inspiration to all, then, when the message came that Mr. and Mrs. Santa were on their way, every child's face beamed with the light of expectation.

The donation at the door was a new idea to our community. This was a beautiful remembrance of the Gifts brought by the Wise Men of 2,000 years ago and when properly distributed we hope will make more hearts throb with the Christlike Spirit of our Lord and Saviour.

Another special feature was that all mankind were on an equal, every individual that was present was remembered with his little token of the season of the year. May the time soon come when we will fully realize that we are all of the Brotherhood of Man and each and every one equal in quantity and quality in the sight of our Lord.

The management and all are to be commended on the earnest effort and success of the day.

On Sunday morning, December twenty-fourth, at the Methodist Sunday School, Miss Pearl Shurts a student of the Moody Bible Institute gave a very instrustive lesson beginning with the prophetic announcement of the birth of John the Baptist and Christ, giving in detail the principle events in his life up to the ressurection. The lesson was brought to bear very vividly on the minds of all present and especially the children, by the use of pictures and images illustrating the different scenes and characters in the lives of these great men which will not be forgotten soon. Following the lecture by Miss Shurts a solo entitled "He's Coming Again" was beautifully sung by Howard Shilling, leaving the remarks preceeding, more indelibly fixed on the minds of the school. Miss Shurts is to be commended for her work showed thorough training on this line.

Publicity Committee.

The Pageant "Bethlehem" given at the Christian church Sunday evening was well given considering the very short time the committee had to drill the participants. The scenic background representing the little town of Bethlehem, the wise men and the shepherds added to the features of the drama. Those taking part were dressed to represent the people who lived in the time of Christ. The house was well filled and close attention was given throughout.

Christmas at the Lutheran Church.

The Lutheran Sunday School rendered a fine musical program on Sunday evening. The musical numbers were interspersed with speaking by the little folks, and a talk by Mrs. Mumma. The entire program featured the Christ Child's birth. The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion. The treat was given to the Sunday School in the morning.

Obituary

James M. Hamilton, son of Gavin and Anna Hamilton, was born in Defiance County, Ohio, October 2, 1831. Died at his home in St. Joe, Ind., Dec. 21, 1916, at the ripe age of 85 years, 2 months, 19 days. When he was seven years old he came with his parents to DeKalb County, Indiana, locating at Orangeville, and has made his residence in this community all the years since. In his earlier life Mr. Hamilton was quite successful in his farming activities and had accumulated quite an amount of property so that he was able to retire with ease in his declining years.

He was never married and had traveled quite extensively, he having visited all the World's Fairs held in this country since the Centennial in 1876, and had also traveled abroad visiting seven countries of Eurepe. For several years he had been in declining health from causes incidental to age and his mental and bodily powers continued to fail until his immortal spirit was set free from the bonds of his infirmity by death. Several months ago he had anticipated the end and planned for his funeral.

He was of a family of nine children, 2 brothers and 1 sister of whom are living. They are Willium Hamilton, who for several years made his home with him; John Hamilton, of Butler, Ind., and Mrs. Mary Bittenger, of Indianapolis. Besides these he leaves many other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

Thirty years ago he united with the United Brethren Church of Newville under the pastorate of Rev. Y. W. Lowman and remained loyal to that connection till death. He had been quite generous in his contributions to some of the general boards and institutions of his denomination. He came to his grave "in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Funeral services were held from the U. B. Church at Newville, Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock. Rev. Lilly of Hicksville, presiding with Rev. J. C Coons assisting. E. R. Kinsey, director.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL

By

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

There is reason to believe that Ember and the young woman, who helped Whitaker after his fight on the beach with the strange spy, have some sort of plan concerning Whitaker which they don't want him to understand. It is outlined and strong hints are given about it in this installment. You will be puzzled by developments.

Whitaker, you know, had married an innocent girl to save her honor five years previously—at a time when he expected soon to die—and left the country. He returns, healthy and wealthy, and finds the wife, now a famous actress known as Sara Law, engaged to marry Drummond, his old partner. She disappears. Drummond supposedly commits suicide. Whitaker is fiercely assaulted in the dark, and goes to the country home of his friend Martin Ember to recover. He surprises a mysterious spy at work, fights him, sprains an ankle and is helped by a handsome girl living near Ember's place.

—12—

"What I wished to convey was simply my intention no longer to bear my masculine weight upon a women—either you or any other woman."

A smile contended momentarily with the frown, and triumphed brilliantly.

"I mean to ask you," he said deliberately, "to whom am I indebted—?"

To his consternation the smile vanished, as though a cloud had sailed before the sun. Doubt and something strongly resembling incredulity informed her glance.

"Do you mean to say you don't know?" she demanded after a moment. "Surely Mr. Ember must have told you?"

"Ember seemed to be laboring under the misapprehension that the Fiske place was without a tenant."

"Oh!" Her tone was thoughtful. "Has he gone back to town?"

"Business called him. At least such was the plausible excuse he advanced for depriving himself of my exclusive society."

"I see," she nodded—"I see . . ."

"But aren't you going to tell me? Or ought I to prove my human intelligence by assuming on logical grounds that you're Miss Fiske?"

"If you please," she murmured, her intent gaze seeking the distances of the sea.

"Then that's settled," he pursued in accents of satisfaction. "You are Miss Fiske—Christian name at present unknown to deponent. And we are neighbors. Do you know, I think this a very decent sort of a world after all?"

"And still"—she returned to the charge—"you haven't told me what you mean to do, since you refuse my help."

"I mean," he asserted cheerfully, "to sit here until some kind-hearted person fetches me a stick to serve as emergency staff. Then I shall make shift to hobble to your motor boat and thank you very kindly for ferrying me home."

She shook her head in dainty annoyance, then, light-footed, darted from sight round the side of the bathhouse. Presently she reappeared, dragging an eight-foot pole. He rose on one foot and tested the staff with his weight. "'Twill do," he decided. "And thank you very much."

But even with its aid, his progress toward the boat necessarily consumed a tedious time. It was impossible to favor the injured foot to any great extent. He made little or no attempt to converse while in motion, so she had plenty of opportunity to make up her mind about him.

If her eyes were a reliable index, she found him at least interesting. At times their expression was enigmatic beyond any reading. Again they seemed openly perplexed. At all times they were warily regardful. Once she sighed quietly with a passing look of sadness of which he was wholly unaware. . . .

"Odd—about that fellow," he observed during a halt. "I was sure he was Drummond—until I saw—"

"Drummond!"

"Friend of mine . . . You don't by any chance know Drummond, do you?"

"I've heard the name."

"You must have. Supposed to have committed suicide—jumped off Washington bridge a week before he was to marry Sara Law, the actress? . . . I may as well tell you—it's no secret, although only a few people know it—Ember saw Drummond, or thinks he did, alive, in the flesh, a good half-hour after the time of his reported suicide."

"How very curious!" There was nothing more than civil but perfunctory interest in the comment. "Are you ready to go on?"

And another time, when they were near the boat:

"When do you expect Mr. Ember?" asked the girl.

"Tonight, probably."

"I shall be glad to see him," said the girl in what Whitaker thought a curious tone. "Please tell him, will you? Don't forget."

"If that's the way you feel about him, I shall be tempted to wire him not to come."

"Absurd!" she laughed.

When finally they came to the end of the dock, he paused, considering the three-foot drop to the deck of the motor boat. "If it weren't low tide . . ." he explained, crestfallen.

"But, since it is low tide, you'll have to let me help you again," the girl retorted, jumping lightly but surely to the cockpit.

She turned and offered him a hand, eyes dancing with gay malice.

"Like all men, you must turn to a woman in the end—however brave your strut."

"Oh, it's that way, is it? Thank you, but I fancy I can manage."

And with the aid of the clothes-prop he did manage to make the descent without her hand and without disaster.

The girl started the engine and took the wheel as the boat swung droning away from the dock. Not until she had once or twice advanced the spark and made other minor adjustments did she return attention to her passenger.

Then, in a casual voice, she inquired: "You've been out of the country for some time, I think you said?"

"Almost six years on the other side of the world—got back only this spring."

"What," she asked, eyes averted, spying out the channel—"what does one do on the other side of the world?"

"This one knocked about, mostly, for his health's sake. "I did drift into a sort of business, after a bit—gold mining in a haphazard, happy-go-lucky fashion—did pretty well at it and came home to astonish the natives."

"You find things—New York—disappointing?" she analyzed his tone.

"I find it overpowering—and lonely. Nobody sent a brass band to greet me at the dock; and all the people I used to know are either married and devoted to brats, or divorced and devoted to bridge; and my game has gone off so badly in six years that I don't belong any more."

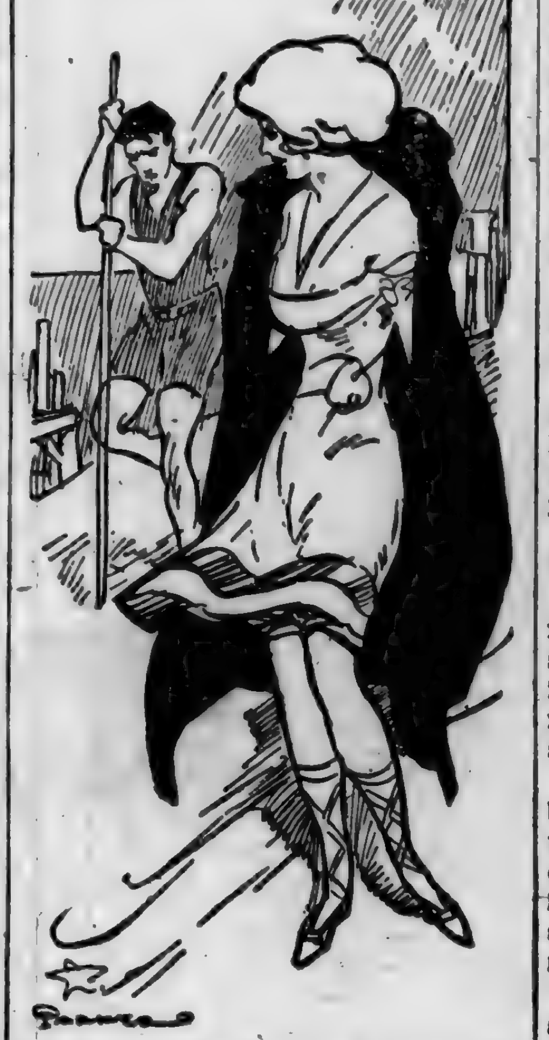
She smiled, shaping her scarlet lips deliciously. The soft, warm wind whipped stray strands of hair, like cords of gold, about her face. Her eyelids were half lowered against the intolerable splendor of the day. The waters of the bay, wind-blurred and dark, seemed a shield of sapphire fashioned by nature solely to set off in clear relief her ardent loveliness.

Whitaker, noting how swiftly the mainland shores were disclosing the finer details of their beauty, could have wished the bay ten times as wide.

CHAPTER XI.

The Mousetrap.

Late in the afternoon of the same day, Ember, appearing suddenly in front of the bungalow, discovered Whitaker sitting up in state; a comfortable wicker chair supported his body and a canvas-seated camp stool one of his feet; which last was discreetly veiled in a dripping bath towel. Otherwise he was fastidiously arrayed in white flannels and, by his seraphic smile and guileless expression, seemed abnormally at peace with his circumstances.



He Rose on One Foot and Tested the Staff.

Halting, Ember surveyed the spectacle with mocking disfavor.

"Hel-lo!" he observed, beginning to draw off his gantlets as he ascended the veranda steps and dropped into another wicker chair. "What the deuce's the matter with you?"

"Game leg, thanks. Twisted my ankle again, this morning. Sum Fat has been doctoring it with intense enthusiasm, horse liniment and chopped ice. By tomorrow morning I'll be skipping like the silly old hills in the Scriptures."

"Hope so. Well, you must've had a pretty rotten stupid time of it, with that storm."

"Oh, not at all. I really enjoyed it," Whitaker protested.

"Oh, if you forgive me for leaving you alone so much, we'll call it square." Ember lifted his voice: "Sum Fat, ahoy!"

The Chinaman appeared in the doorway, as suddenly and silently as if magically materialized by the sound of his name.

"You're a sulphur-colored wizard with pigeon-toed eyes," said Ember severely. "Go away from here instantly and prepare me all the dinner in the establishment, lest an evil fate overtake you."

"It is written," returned Sum Fat, "that I die after eight-seven years of honorable life, from heart failure on receiving long-deferred raise in wages."

He shuffled off, chuckling.

"I fancied I saw the flutter of a petticoat through the trees, as I came up to the house."

"Acquaintance of yours, I believe—Miss Fiske."

"Miss Fiske!" There was unfeigned amazement in the echo.

"Anything wonderful about that?" inquired Whitaker, sharply. "I fancied from what she said that you two were rather good friends."

"Just surprised—that's all," said Ember, recovering. "You see, I didn't think the Fiske place was open this year."

He stared suspiciously at Whitaker, but the latter was transparently ingenuous.

"She expressed an unaccountable desire to see you—told me to tell you."

"Oh? Such being the case, one would think she might've waited."

"She had just started home when you drove in," Whitaker explained with elaborate ease. "She'd merely run over for a moment to inquire after my ankle, and couldn't wait. I say, who are the Fiskes, anyway?"

"Well . . . the Fiskes are the people who own the next cottage."

"I know, but—"

"Oh, I never troubled to inquire; have a hazy notion Fiske does something in Wall street." Ember passed smoothly over this flaw in his professional omniscience. "How did you happen to meet her?"

"Oh, mere accident. Over on the beach this morning. I slipped and hurt my ankle. She—ah—happened along and brought me home in her motor boat."

"You haven't seen Drummond—or any signs of him, have you?"

"Eh—what?" Whitaker sat up, startled. "No, I . . . er . . . how should I?"

"I merely wondered. You see, I . . . Well, to tell the truth, I took the liberty of camping on his trail, while in town. But I couldn't find any trace of him."

"Oh, I say!" Whitaker expostulated, touched by this evidence of disinterested thoughtfulness. "You persuade yourself too much, old man. You set up an inference and idolize it as an immortal truth. Why, you had me going for a while. Only last night there was a fellow skulking round here, and I was just dippy enough, thanks to your influence, to think he resembled Drummond. But this morning I got a good look at him, and he's no more Drummond than you are."

Ember sat up, eyes snapping. "Who was he, then? Tell me about him—everything."

Whitaker resignedly delivered himself of the tale of the mare's-nest—as he still regarded it. When he had come to the lame conclusion thereof, Ember yawned and rose.

"What are you going to do about it?" Whitaker inquired with irony.

"Wash and make myself fit to eat food," was the response. "I may possibly think a little. It's an exhilarating exercise which I don't hesitate to recommend to your distinguished consideration."

He was out of earshot, within the bungalow, before Whitaker could think up an adequately insolent retort. He could, however, do no less than smile incredulously at the beautiful world—so much, at least, he owed to his self-respect.

In the deepening twilight a mental shadow came to cloud the brightness of Whitaker's confident contentment. Neither good food nor good company seemed able to mitigate his sudden seizure of despondency. He sat glooming over his plate and glass, the burden of his conversation yea, yea and nay, nay. His host diagnosed his complaint from beneath shrewd eyebrows.

"Whitaker," he said at length, "a pessimist has been defined as a dog that won't scratch."

"Well?" said the other sourly.

"Come on. Be a sport. Have a good scratch on me."

Whitaker grinned reluctantly and briefly.

"Where's my wife?" he demanded abruptly.

"How in blazes—!"

"There you are!" Whitaker complained. "You make great pretensions, and yet you fall down flat on your foolish face three times in less than as many hours. You don't know who the Fiskes are, you've lost track of your pet myth, Drummond, and you don't know where I can find my wife."

"My dear man, I myself am beginning to doubt her existence."

"I don't see why the dickens she doesn't go ahead with those divorce proceedings!" Whitaker remarked morosely.

"I've met few men so eager for full membership in the Alimony club. What's your hurry?"

"Oh, I don't know." Which was largely truth unveneered. "I'd like to get it over and done with."

Do you think that Ember is surprised and puzzled to learn that Miss Fiske lives next door? Does he know where Sara Law now is?

MORE WHEAT, MORE CATTLE, MORE HOGS

Land Values Sure to Advance Because of Increasing Demand for Farm Products.

The cry from countries abroad for more of the necessaries of life is acute today; tomorrow it will be still more insistent, and there will be no letup after the war. This is the day for the farmer, the day that he is coming into his own. He is gradually becoming the dictator as it becomes more apparent that upon his industry depends the great problem of feeding a great world. The farmer of Canada and the United States has it within himself to hold the position that stress of circumstances has lifted him into today. The conditions abroad are such that the utmost dependence will rest upon the farmers of this continent for some time after the war, and for this reason there is no hesitation in making the statement that war's demands are, and for a long time will be, inexhaustible, and the claims that will be made upon the soil will with difficulty be met. There are today 25,000,000 men in the fighting ranks in the old world. The best of authority gives 75 per cent and over as having been drawn from the farms. There is therefore nearly 75 per cent of the land formerly tilled now being unworked. Much of this land is today in a devastated condition and if the war should end tomorrow it will take years to bring it back to its former producing capacity.

Instead of the farmer producer producing, he has become a consumer, making the strain upon those who have been left to do the farming a very difficult one. There may be agitation as to the high cost of living, and doubtless there is reason for it in many cases. The middleman may boost the prices, combines may organize to elevate the cost, but one cannot get away from the fact that the demand regulates the supply, and the supply regulates the price. The price of wheat—in fact, all grains—as well as cattle, will remain high for some time, and the low prices that have prevailed will not come again for some time.

After the war the demand for cattle, not alone for beef, but for stock purposes, to replenish the exhausted herds of Europe, will be keen. Farm educators and advisers are telling you to prepare for this emergency. How much better it can be done on the low-priced lands of today, on lands that cost from ten to twenty dollars per acre, than it can on two and three hundred-dollar an-acre land. The lands of Western Canada meet all the requirements. They are productive in every sense of the word. The best of grasses can be grown with abundant yields and the grain can be produced from these soils that beats the world, and the same may be said of cattle and horses. The climate is all that is required.

Those who are competent to judge claim that land prices will rise in value from twenty to fifty per cent. This is looked for in Western Canada, where lands are decidedly cheap today, and those who are fortunate enough to secure now will realize wonderfully by means of such an investment. The land that the Dominion Government is giving away as free homesteads in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are of a high class; they are abundant in every constituent that goes to make the most productive soils. The yields of wheat, oats and barley that have been grown on these lands gives the best evidence of their productiveness, and when backed up by the experience of the thousands of settlers from the United States who have worked them and become wealthy upon them, little more should be required to convince those who are seeking a home, even with limited means, that nowhere can they secure anything that will better equip them to become one of the army of industry to assist in taking care of the problem of feeding the world. These lands are free; but to those who desire larger holdings than 160 acres there are the railroad companies and land corporations from whom purchase can be made at reasonable prices, and information can be secured from the Canadian Government agent, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in this paper.—Advertisement.

Because they possess the name of Murphy, three students in search of an education are on their way to their ambition, through the terms of the will of the late William S. Murphy, a Harvard alumnus, who left $100,000 to the university, the income of which is to support scholarships for men of his name.

As there are no freshmen of that name entered this fall, three scholarships were given instead to students in the graduate schools, only one of whom holds a Harvard degree.

The holders are Clifton Murphy of Georgetown, S. C., first-year student in the law school; William A. Murphy of Boston in his first year in the medical school, and Gardner Murphy of Boston, a student in the graduate school.

CHOLERA SERUM STATUTE DESIRED

State Veterinarian Advises Legislation to Regulate Manufacture of Virus.

DISEASE ABATES IN INDIANA

Report Shows That the Last Six Months Were Prosperous for Stockmen—Cattle Industry and Horse Business Boom.

Indianapolis.—Legislation regarding the manufacture and use of hog cholera serum is advised by Dr. A. F. Nelson, state veterinarian, in his annual report to the governor in course of publication. Both state and federal governments have evinced a great interest in the treatment and prevention of this disease, which is so costly to the Hoosier farmer, and the time is passing rapidly when chance alone has to do with its spread and continuation.

"The live stock industry in Indiana during the last year has been marked by unusual prosperity," states Doctor Nelson, "with the exception of hog cholera. As this disease has been prevalent in the state for the last seventy-five years and appears each year in enzootic outbreaks, more attention and work are required in preventing the spread of it than all other diseases of domestic animals since the foot-and-mouth disease has been eradicated.

"In order to control successfully this disease it will be necessary to have legislation enacted controlling the use of hog cholera virus. We have found that in some instances the use of it in communities free from hog cholera has been the cause of outbreaks in healthy herds. A stringent law on this subject is absolutely necessary to control the use of virus now being produced, sold and used by persons who have no object in view except a financial gain from its sale.

"The majority of firms engaged in the manufacture of anti-hog cholera serum and virus are having their product tested and approved by the veterinary department of Purdue university and are making every effort to comply with the law. These firms are favorable to legislation compelling every person or firm engaged in the production of the serum and virus to comply with certain reasonable requirements."

In a review of hog raising conditions in Indiana the veterinarian goes on to state:

"The swine industry during the last six months has been menaced less by the scourge of hog cholera than for years, and no doubt this has been the most prosperous season that the Hoosier farmer and breeder has ever known. The campaign for control and sanitary measures now being carried on in this state is convincing rapidly the farmers and breeders that it is in their power to control hog cholera and lessen the losses, which have amounted to millions of dollars within the last few years."

The report shows that 43,875 head of cattle were shipped into the state for feeding purposes during the last year. The number does not include several thousand head consigned to public stockyards and resold and of which no data was available for the state department. A disease, hemorrhagiac septicemia, among this sort of cattle has been increasing alarmingly, states Doctor Nelson. It constitutes a great menace to the cattle feeding business in Indiana. Regarding the control the veterinarian states:

"Isolation of the affected animals and prompt disinfection of the premises is the only way by which the disease may be prevented from spreading. Treatment both medicinal and biological has not yet proved very successful among the sick animals. Bacteria treatment of exposed animals, however, has so far given very promising results."

The greatest menace to the cattle raising industry, according to Doctor Nelson, is contagious abortion. He states, however, that no definite steps have been taken so far to harmonize a plan for its eradication, but cites a recent appropriation of congress putting $50,000 in the hands of experimenters with the disease.

Regarding the horse and mule industry, the report states in part:

"Notwithstanding the number of trucks, tractors and other motor vehicles there is a scarcity of draft animals. The prices obtained for them are exceptionally high. Part of this condition may be due in a measure to the exportation of many horses for artillery service in Europe. The mule industry is coming back again to the position it occupied a few years ago. Foreign demand has no doubt had its effect on this also. Many are turning to the breeding of these animals as a profitable investment."

As to sheep the report states:

"This branch of the live stock industry has been unusually remunerative during the last year. The high prices obtained for both wool and mutton have led many farmers to turn their attention again to sheep raising."

The reduction business, which is also a department of the work of the state veterinarian, is requiring much attention. Doctor Nelson says that the high prices paid for hides, grease and tankage have attracted many to the business and there have been some attempted evasions of the law.

Rush for Auto Licenses.

Nearly 3,000 automobile licenses for 1917 already have been passed out through the windows of the secretary of state's office at the statehouse. The sale of 1917 licenses began December 1 and has been progressing at the rate of approximately 200 a day. Approximately 200,000 automobilists in Indiana must obtain the plates during the coming year, it is estimated. Approximately 12,000 motorcycle licenses are to be issued, also.

The number of automobile licenses issued up to December 1 had been approximately 140,000 for the year 1916. An enormous rush for license plates, which are yellow and black this year, already has begun, and the mail orders are coming in so fast that the department will not be able to complete the work of handling these early orders as rapidly as had been believed possible. Ed Jackson, the new secretary, is seeking to devise labor-saving methods in the department.

Headlight Law Valid.

The validity of the Indiana headlight law was upheld by a decision handed down by the Supreme court of the United States at Washington, D. C. The court affirmed the decision of the Indiana supreme court and of the Marion county superior court, both of which had held the headlight law valid.

The headlight law passed by the legislature of 1909 authorized the railroad commission to issue an order directing the railroads doing business in Indiana to equip their locomotives with electric headlights of not less than 1,500 candle power. The commission issued an order to this effect. In 1910 the Vandalia railroad began an action in Marion county seeking to overthrow the statute and the order as invalid and unconstitutional.

In its appeal to the Supreme court the Vandalia asserted that the statute and the order of the commission were repugnant both to the commerce clause of the Constitution and to the fourteenth amendment. S. O. Pickens appeared as attorney for the railroad.

Associate Justice Clark took no part in the decision. Costs were assessed against the plaintiff in error.

The Supreme court, in deciding the case, held in its opinion, however, that state laws on the subject will be superseded by the interstate commerce commission regulations when adopted.

State Tax Board Reports.

The state board of tax commissioners, which was slapped by the governor's tax commission in a report, presented its recommendations for the next legislature. The recommendations include a nonpartizan tax board, with powers of reassessment and of equalization of assessment by classes; power to assess domestic public utilities and power to obtain necessary information from the public service commission; subordination of township assessors to county assessors, both to be appointive and under the jurisdiction of the state board, and an increase in their salaries.

The board did not discuss a classification tax, confining its recommendations to problems that do not require constitutional revision.

Will Find No "Leftovers."

Evan B. Stotsenburg, attorney general, announced that when he turns over the state office to Ele Stansbury of Williamsport, the Republican attorney general-elect, all the state's business that it is possible to complete before January will have been finished.

Briefs in all cases in which the attorney general is appearing before the courts will have been filed up to February 4, the attorney general said.

"I will turn over this office with no 'leftovers' for Mr. Stansbury to worry about," Mr. Stotsenburg said. It is understood that the present attorney general will return to his home in New Albany after his term of office is concluded and return to the practice of law and to the management of the New Albany Ledger, which he bought recently.

Indiana Law Sustained.

Right of an individual to sue a railroad under the Indiana law for failure to destroy weeds on its right-of-way was upheld by the Supreme court of the United States at Washington, upholding a state court decision.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 31

CHRIST'S COMING AND COMING TO CHRIST (REVIEW).

READING LESSON—Rev. 22:6-14; 16:21.

GOLDEN TEXT—The spirit and the bride say, come. And he that heareth, let him say, come. And he that is athirst, let him come. He that wills, let him take of the water of life freely.—Rev. 22:17.

It is possible in lessons one to nine to review the past quarter's work, in a logical, chronological manner, but lessons seven and nine are not in their proper chronological setting. These lessons extend over five years of Paul's life from about 58 A. D. to 63 A. D. They are five wonderful years, and the last of the authentic years we have of the life of this wonderful man. The review should of course center in Paul his conduct, character and teachings.

The first twelve chapters of the Book of Acts, in which we have chiefly been studying, cover a period of about sixteen years, A. D. 30-46, with Jerusalem as the center. The rest of the Book of Acts cover another period of approximately 16 years from 46 to 62, and is the record of the foreign missionary work of Paul and his companions, Paul being of course the central character. The series for this quarter close with the vision of the final triumph of Christianity as seen by John in the Revelation. Maps should be employed if possible to show the journeys of Paul. The risen Christ and the enduement of the Holy Spirit were the vision and the power which wrote this first Church History, and which have been writing Church History ever since. The home church (Chs. 2-7) began with about 120 praying men and women. Peter's first sermon brought into "the way" 3,000 more. From time to time others were added. Persecution and deliverances, the first martyr, Stephen, and the dissatisfaction which led to the choice of the deacons, are the outstanding events of this period. The home mission period, with Jerusalem as the center and Palestine as the field (Chapters 8-12) covers a period of about ten years. Persecution scattered the disciples throughout the country. Paul was converted on the road to Damascus, Philip goes to Samaria, and Peter carries on the work throughout Lydda, Joppa and Caesarea. In this section we have the story of Philip and the Ethiopian, of Peter curing the palsied man at Lydda, the raising of Dorcas and Paul and Barnabas returning to Jerusalem with help to those at that city who were suffering from famine. Then begins the period of foreign missions, covering about sixteen years, from about A. D. 47 to 62. The principal characters begin of course with Paul and Barnabas, though Paul soon takes his place of leadership. Paul's first missionary journey lasted for about two years, from say A. D. 47 to 49, Barnabas being his principal companion. Returning to Antioch from Jerusalem, Paul soon began his second journey, this time taking with him Silas. Again there is a period of about two years, from A. D. 50 to 52. Paul had his Macedonian vision during this time, and the gospel first entered Europe, beginning with the conversion of the Phillipian jailor. Paul's preaching at Athens and his service at Corinth are perhaps the most outstanding features of this journey. Paul's third journey lasted nearly three years, A. D. 53 to 56 or 57. He re-visits the Asia Minor churches to strengthen them, spends nearly three years at Ephesus, and has some outstanding adventures as, for instance, the riot at Ephesus about the shrines of Diana. Returning to Jerusalem to take part in the feast, he is told of the ultimate persecutions which he must endure. For a long time he has desired to preach the gospel in Rome. Everyone of the trials, hindrances, oppositions and attacks proved to be the means by which he gained that desired end.

In this particular quarter, in lesson one, we see Paul's calmness in persecution, his prudence under danger. In lesson two, his delicate courtesy and shrewdness in seizing every opportunity that he might witness for his Lord. In lesson three is manifested his unshaken belief in everything found in the Scriptures, and his wise use thereof in leading men to Christ. In lesson five, his fearlessness amidst danger and his absolute confidence in God. In lesson six, his humility. In lesson seven, his well balanced common sense and his love of peace among his brethren. In lesson eight, we see him longing for human companionship and sympathy, and have an evidence of his love for his own countrymen, and yet his faithfulness declaring the word of God to them as well as to the Gentiles.

Last Sunday we stood with Isaiah, looking down through the centuries to the man of Galilee 700 years hence. Today, as we review this quarter and the lessons of the past year, we are looking back nearly two thousand years to the one who wrought out our salvation on Calvary, but we may also turn our faces the other way, and look for him whose returning will bring peace to the earth, and at whose coming the brightness of his glory shall cover the earth even as the waters cover the sea.

We have seen the breaking down of "armed peace."

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands of Men and Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

Nature warns you when the track of health is not clear. Kidney and bladder troubles cause many annoying symptoms and great inconvenience both day and night.

Unhealthy kidneys may cause lumbago, rheumatism, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints or muscles, at times have headache or indigestion, as time passes you may have a sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, sometimes feel as though you had heart trouble, may have plenty of ambition but no strength, get weak and lose flesh.

If such conditions are permitted to continue, serious results may be expected; Kidney Trouble in its very worst form may steal upon you.

Prevalency of Kidney Disease.

Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalency of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are among the most common diseases that prevail, they are almost the last recognized by patients, who usually content themselves with doctoring the effects, while the original disease may constantly undermine the system.

If you feel that your kidneys are the cause of your sickness or run down condition, try taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the famous kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys improve, they will help the other organs to health.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at all drug stores. Don't make any mistake but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., which you will find on every bottle.

SPECIAL NOTE—You may obtain a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root by enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. This gives you the opportunity to prove the remarkable merit of this medicine. They will also send you a book of valuable information, containing many of the thousands of grateful letters received from men and women who say they found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed in kidney, liver and bladder troubles. The value and success of Swamp-Root are so well known that our readers are advised to send for a sample size bottle. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

Toads Barred From Mail.

On complaint of the postal authorities that soldiers along the Mexican border have been sending live insects, animals and reptiles through the United States mails, General Funston has ordered that postal regulations be strictly observed by the Guardsmen. The soldiers have been mailing lizards, scorpions, horned toads and other specimens of border life to "the folks back home."

She Needed Aid.

"See that man over there? He is a bombastic mutt, a windjammer nonentity, a false alarm, and an encumbrance of the earth."

"Would you mind writing all that down for me."

"Why in the world—"

"He's my husband, and I should like to use it on him some time."

Single Blessedness.

A schoolmistress asked her class to explain the word "bachelor," and she was amused when a little girl answered: "A bachelor is a very happy man."

"Where did you learn that?" asked the schoolmistress.

"Father told me."

One Reason.

"Insects are the lowest order of creation."

"Yes; the contemptible things never hesitate at a chance to work for their living."

PRISONERS OF PARLIAMENT

Offenders May Be Shut Up in Clock Tower, But Buy Own Meals.

Few people are aware that the houses of parliament have their own prison. Yet situated high up in the clock tower is the M. P.'s prison, consisting of four bedrooms and two sitting rooms, London Tit-Bits says.

The honorable member who has been dishonored by imprisonment for a breach of parliamentary etiquette does not have a very hard life in St. Stephen's prison. The prisoner's meals are sent up to him from the house of commons' kitchens and he can choose whatever dishes he likes from the ordinary menu. Unlike an ordinary prisoner, he receives the bill for his meals from the catering authorities!

Perhaps the best remembered occupant of parliament's prison was Mr. Bradlaugh, who was sentenced by the speaker to imprisonment in the clock tower for refusing to withdraw when requested so to do.

Offenders against parliament other than members have before now been sentenced to imprisonment in the clock tower. These "outsiders" have included several public speakers and the editor of a prominent newspaper.

Speaking of Women.

"Women are certainly peculiar," remarked the home-grown philosopher.

"What seems to be ailing you now?" queried his one-man audience.

"I was thinking of the difference in the way they treat a husband after his return from a two weeks' business trip and after an absence of two hours past midnight," replied the philosophical observer.

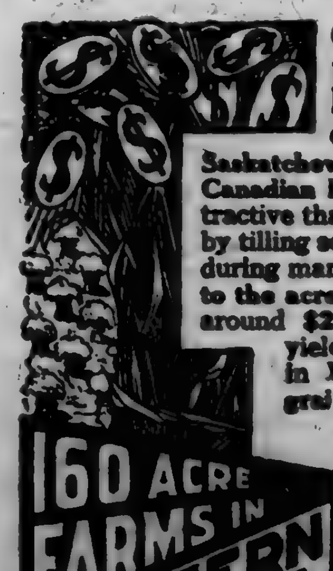
Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil



Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. FEW SMALL COINS

Directors of Mints Hold Conference to Solve Problem.

INDICATION OF PROSPERITY.

People Among Whom Nickels, Dimes and Quarters Circulate Have More Than Ever Before—Engraving Department Reports Enormous Demand For One and Two Dollar Bills.

New York.—An unprecedented demand for small coins—quarters, dimes, nickels and cents—a demand that is daily straining the resources of the United States treasury department, brought F. H. J. Van Engelken, director of the mint, to New York to see if something could be done to relieve the scarcity. He met officials of all mints here for a conference to devise ways and means of turning out enough small coins to meet the demand.

At the conference were T. W. H. Shanahan, superintendent of the San Francisco mint; Thomas W. Annear, superintendent of the Denver mint; E. D. Hawkins, chief clerk of the San Francisco mint, and Vernon Boyle, superintendent of the New York assay office.

"We never before have been confronted by such an emergency," said Mr. Van Engelken, "and I doubt that we will be able to materially increase the production. Our two large mints now are working twenty-four hours a day, while the smallest is on a sixteen hour shift. They are all at maximum capacity, and their energies are being concentrated on the coins of which we are so short.

"Our idea in holding the conference was to discuss the operation of the mints, probably adopting at all of them suggestions that have proved of benefit in one mint. We are now at capacity. Therefore by the team work which we believe this conference will produce we expect to be able to speed up our production of small coins. The problem is growing more perplexing every day."

"What is the reason for the shortage in small coins?" the director of the mint was asked.

"There is only one answer," he said. "The people among whom the small coins circulate have more of them than ever before. It is the result of the tremendous prosperity that is getting down to the people who use coins of small denominations.

"I talked recently with the head of the engraving department in Washington. He tells me there is a similar tremendous demand for the dollar and two dollar bills and that this demand is increasing as the holiday season approaches. None of them is returned. They are worn out. Bankers say they are having great difficulty in meeting the demand."

DANCED OFF DIET GAINS.

Net Loss of One and a Half Pounds in Chicago Squad Due to a Ball.

Chicago.—Dancing and dieting are not in harmony.

The "weighing in" figures of the "diet squad," which demonstrated that 40 cents' worth of food a day is enough for the average individual showed a loss of seventeen and a half pounds when compared with figures of the day before. The answer seems to be that most of them attended the annual dance of the health department.

Only two members of the squad showed a gain. Each gained half a pound. Comparing weights with those taken when the test started, seven members gained ten and a half pounds, but the other five members lost twelve pounds—net loss a pound and a half, and all because of the dance.

FACES DEATH FOR THEFT.

Old Sea Law Puts Indiana Prisoner in Bad Fix.

Gary, Ind.—Death penalty under an old sea law faces C. A. Shillinger if he is convicted of stealing a compass from a United States Steel company's ore ship.

Under a law passed in 1790, Shillinger, if found guilty, must either be freed or hanged from the yard arm of the ship in Gary harbor. The prisoner will be tried in the United States district court at Indianapolis.

Reality, Not Love.

Susan Hicks, though not a pronounced man hater, took little interest in the masculine portion of humanity. She often boasted that she never wasted her time reading the stories women are supposed to enjoy. One day, however, she was discovered with a popular magazine in her hand.

"Why, Susan, you are reading a love story!" exclaimed her sister in amazement, as she glanced at the illustration.

"I'm not," replied Susan. "They're married."

LADIES! LOOK YOUNG, DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Use the Old-time Sage Tea and Sulphur and Nobody will Know.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Dr. Rice Has Mapped About 100,000 Square Miles in Vicinity of Mightiest Stream in World—Yacht Protected With Rust Proof Screens to Ward Off Flying Pests.

New York.—The people of the great forest are again to see Dr. A. Hamilton Rice. With Mrs. Rice he left here on the yacht Alberta for the river of the Amazons to complete his explorations in the northwestern part of the basin of the mightiest stream in all the world.

Mrs. Rice, who was formerly Mrs. George D. Widener of Philadelphia, is herself interested in science and will help in the work of the expedition. She has been directing until recently the building and equipping of the great library at Harvard university which is a memorial to Mr. Widener, who was lost on the steamship Titanic.

DR. ALEXANDER H. RICE.

The yacht will stop first at Barbados and then go up the Amazon to Manaos, Brazil, 950 miles from the coast, and then into the Rio Negro to Santa Isabel, the base of the explorations. The region to which Dr. Rice and the scientists accompanying him are to give their attention is bounded on the north by the Guaviare river, on the west by the Andes, on the south by the Caqueta river and on the east by the Rio Negro. The territory included in the plan comprises parts of Brazil, Venezuela and Colombia.

Dr. Rice has mapped about 100,000 square miles of this region. He proposes to make a survey of the tributaries of the Rio Negro and to complete as nearly as he can the maps of enormous tracts yet practically unexplored.

So well equipped is this expedition that it is expected that it will accomplish more work in the six months it will be away than could be done in twice that period under ordinary conditions. The yacht Alberta is in herself a veritable floating citadel armed against trouble. One of the plagues of tropical South America comes from the insects. There are many flies and mosquitoes that inflict painful bites and cause disease. To ward off the flying pests Dr. Rice has had the Alberta equipped with rustproof screens of fine copper mesh, so that every deck and every port hole will be protected.

There are other insects to be guarded against, among them various kinds of ants. One of the worst of them is the leaf cutting ant, the sauba, which will eat up the ordinary tarletan mosquito net as though it were so much cobweb. In the account of one of his previous expeditions Dr. Rice tells how the ants devoured not only a mosquito net, but a pair of trousers and the pockets of his coat. The tabano or blood sucking fly is a menace to life in this part of the Amazon basin. The chigos burrow into the skin and cause intense suffering. With the copper mesh screens and with other appliances for warding off the insects, the party expects to reduce the discomfort from this source to the minimum.

Dinner Speaking.

"I was not always this way, mum. I used to go to banquets."

"And bad ways brought you low. You find things different now, eh?"

"Not so very. I had to listen to a lot of talk then to pay for my food. Only difference is I git the chin before I git de eats now."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Panhandle railroad declared dividends of 3 per cent on preferred and 5 per cent on common stock, an increase over the last dividend.

Exports of paper and paper manufacturers this year will reach $640,000,000, doubling those of any previous year, according to figures assembled by the bureau of foreign ports.

Richard P. Hobson, former Alabama congressman, has leased a residence in Evanston, Ill., and announced he will devote the next three years to an anti-liquor fight in Illinois and Chicago.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

Jump from Bed in Morning and Drink Hot Water

Tells why everyone should drink hot water each morning before breakfast.

Why is man and woman, half the time, feeling nervous, despondent, worried; some days headachy, dull and unstrung; some days really incapacitated by illness.

If we all would practice inside-bathing, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of thousands of half-sick, anaemic-looking souls with pasty, muddy complexions we should see crowds of happy, healthy, rosy-cheeked people everywhere. The reason is that the human system does not rid itself each day of all the waste which it accumulates under our present mode of living. For every ounce of food and drink taken into the system nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out, else it ferments and forms ptomaine-like poisons which are absorbed into the blood.

Just as necessary as it is to clean the ashes from the furnace each day, before the fire will burn bright and hot, so we must each morning clear the inside organs of the previous day's accumulation of indigestible waste and body toxins. Men and women, whether sick or well, are advised to drink each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of washing out of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the indigestible material, waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Millions of people who had their turn at constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, nervous days and sleepless nights have become real cranks about the morning inside-bath. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will not cost much at the drug store, but is sufficient to demonstrate to anyone, its cleansing, sweetening and freshening effect upon the system.

NEW YEAR SENTIMENT IN VERSE

The Year that Waits

A FLOWER unblown, a Book unread, a Tree with fruit unharvested;
A Path untrod; a House whose rooms lack yet the heart's divine perfumes;
A Landscape whose wide border lies in silent shade, 'neath silent skies;
A wondrous Fountain yet unsealed, a Casket with its gift concealed;
This is the Year that for you waits, beyond tomorrow's mystic gates.
—[illegible]

The Old Year.

By JOSH WINK.

We bid goodby to thee, Old Year,
But not with sad regret;
For long the scars of thy sore wounds
Will be upon us yet.
A record thine of blood and woe,
Of nations in fierce strife,
The greater one for world control,
The weaker ones, for life.

Thou hast kept arms in men's gripped hands,
The tears in women's eyes,
The dread in little children's hearts,
Death rattles in their cries;
Lands hast thou swept of homes and crops,
Where toil contented reigned,
Thou hast brought flame to scorch and kill,
With blood the soil hast stained.

Across the seas thy direful work
Hast planted seeds of hate
In fearful deeds and wrath to come
To live and germinate.
O fateful year, O fatal year!
Pass from our shuddering sight.
God grant the year which waits its birth
May bless where thou didst blight!

At the Year's Close.

By CHARLOTTE FISKE BATES.

If fault of mine, or pride or fear,
Has cost one soul, or far or near,
One bitter pang, one burning tear,
May the hurt die with thee, Old Year.

If sorrow ever deafened me
So that, in vain, on Doubt's dark sea,
One called on me despairingly,
Old Year! O, hide that cry with Thee!

gracelessness in anything
as weighted some poor struggling wing, heedlessness has left a sting, eeding year, my pardon bring!

have failed where need was sore,
eciation's wine to pour,
hly keeping it in store—
Heaven absolve me, I implore!

every wrong and hurt of mine,
elt or given, leave no sign,
hed with the blessed anodyne—
d will! God's peace! the Birth Divine!

A Poem for the New Year.

By S. E. KISER.

I will start anew this morning with a higher, fairer creed;
I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;
I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear,
I will waste no moment whining and my heart shall know no fear.

I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;
I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze;
I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread,
I will cease to have resentment when another moves ahead.

I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;
I will not deny his merit, but I'll strive to prove my own;
I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine—
I will cease to preach your duty and be more concerned with mine.

Goodby, Old Year.

By THEODORE H. BOICE.

The time has come to say goodby,
Old Year, for we must part;
And 'tis reluctantly we speak
The word that wrings the heart.
For you have been a faithful friend
Through all your twelve-month stay.
A friend who clung to us by night
And walked with us by day.

We well remember when you came,
A bright and smiling youth,
With all the promises of hope
And all the cheer of truth.
We hailed you then with merry shouts,
And fondly clasped your hand;
With you we started on the road
To newer conquests planned.

'Neath sunny skies we journeyed on Along life's thoroughfare,
And you were ever at our side,
In all our joys to share.
Through days of toil and days of rest
We always found you near,
A loyal friend, companion true,
With purpose ever clear.

When skies were dark, and rough the way,
And grief and trouble came,
You through misfortune to us clung,
Your friendship e'er the same.
Through summer's heat and winter's cold,
Through gladness, doubt and fear,
You with us steadfastly remained
A loyal friend, Old Year.

But now you're sadly aged, old friend,
Your hair is white as snow;
Your steps, once firm, are faltering,
And you desire to go,
We cannot keep you 'gainst your will,
And so 'tis with a sigh
We clasp your trembling hand and say
"Goodby, Old Year, goodby!"

New Year.

By RAY I. HOPPMAN.

Gaze forth on the bright, shining sun of tomorrow,
Think not of the faults and mistakes of the past,
Nor drink from the gall flavored goblet of sorrow—
Take one backward look and let that be your last.
The old year has gone and the new is before us,
The road to the future is open to you,
So mingle your voice with the joy swelling chorus
And heed to the call of the year that is new;
Away with the thoughts and the words pessimistic,
The wrongs of the past and the things that annoy;
But substitute action and deeds optimistic
And anchor yourself in the harbor of joy.
The future depends upon striving and trying
And doing your best with your own little part,
The slogan of all should be "Doing or Dying"—
Just swing into line with a good running start.
Forget all things past that are bordered with sadness.
Retain only that which is wholesome and sweet;
Oh! may the new year be o'erflowing with gladness—
A gladness unstinted, minutely complete.
So keep straight ahead on the new opened highway,
The sunshine is bright and the sky is clear blue;
Retrace not the past's narrow, roughened old byway,
But travel the road of the year that is new.

The New Year's Coming.

By FREEMAN E. MILLER.

Better hurry, Mister New Year! We've been waiting, waiting long
For the romping of your rapture and the laughter of your song,
And the gate is standing open where the living dreams are sweet
While the happy hands of welcome scatter roses for your feet.
Hurry, Mister New Year,
There's a welcome warm for you,
Where the hearts of hope are waiting
And the dreams are coming true!

Hurry, Mister New Year! We are weary of the king
That has ruled so long with sorrow he's forgotten how to sing—
We are weary of his scepter and the burdens that he knew,
And we're waiting in the highways with a welcoming for you!
Hurry, Mister New Year!
Lo, the morning purple gleams,
And the heart of hope is waiting
For the crowning of its dreams!

Little New Year.

By KATHERINE FAITH.

The old, old Year goes out at the door,
But the little New Year comes in;
And to take the place of the squandered days
There's a Year just about to begin!

He's a dear little chap, is the small New Year,
And deep in his eyes of blue
Is the promise of all the joy that life
Is holding in store for you.

Health's shining there—if you'll cross your heart
To live with a wise discretion—
And then follows Sleep, and then follows Play,
And Love joins the dim procession.

And trailing behind are the ghosts of the years
That wait on the Grown-Up Shore,
And haunt all the paths of After-a-While
That lead to the Future's door.

The New Year stands on his tippy-toes
And puts in your two brown hands
The reins of his steeds, I CAN and I WILL
To drive through the deep life sands.

And hard he stares with his wistful eyes,
Wond'ring if you'll get through—
And hoping that all of the dreams he's dreamed
Will have the good taste to come true.

New Year Greetings.

By R. T. HART.

From out of the dark and silence
And separation long
In grateful, glad remembrance
I send this little song:
The year has seemed a long one
Without your voice, your smile,
Yet blessed, holy memories
Have cheered each weary mile.
In absence still I cherish
These memories of you
And send these lines on New Year's morn
To pledge my faith anew.
God grant that ere it closes
All blessings it may bring
To you who've brightened many years,
And to whom now I will sing.
May it be bright and happy,
And may it's smiles and tears
Weave o'er your life a rainbow
Of hope for all your years.

The Old Order Changeth

FIFTEEN minutes of twelve!

A brief quarter of an hour later and all the town bells would be madly ringing; the factory whistles would be tooting; horns would shrill raucously; the restless crowds surging aimlessly through the streets would raise voices in the hysterical pandemonium that customarily wakes the dying year into extinction.

"Then," said Myrtle the telephone girl to herself, "then my busy time commences. Every lunatic in town will begin trying to get his or her friends on the wire to yell 'Happy New Year!'—everybody will be wanting their numbers at once and all sore because the telephone company hasn't put in 5,000 extra wires for their especial convenience tonight."

The metal loop with the receiver at her ear had grown irksome and heavy on Myrtle's head. Her hand raised to adjust it more comfortably just as one of the little white lights flashed on before her.

"Number please" (plugging the hole) . . . Grand 4354 . . . What did you say . . Yes, I know I 'have a sweet voice,' but my name don't happen to be 'Kiddo' . . . There you are."

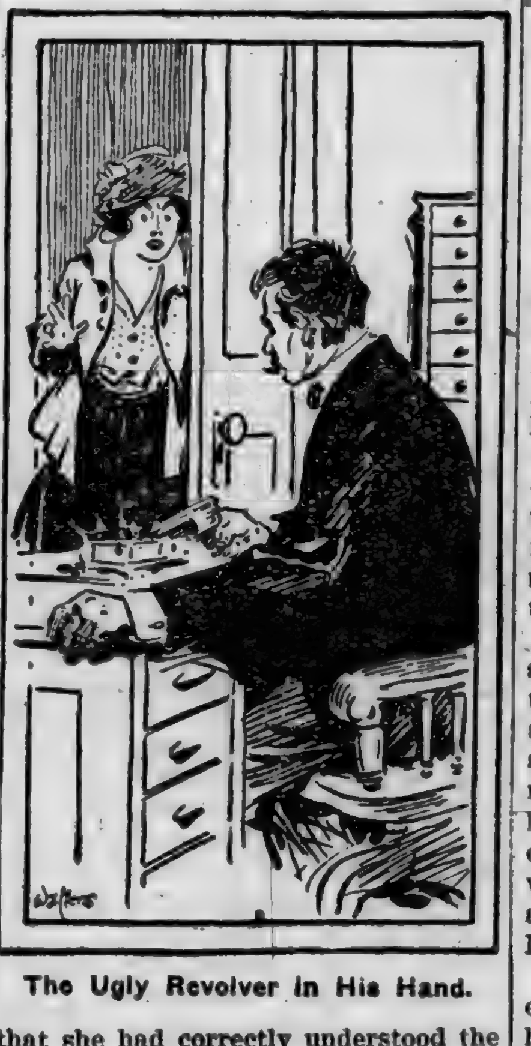
Just then another light flashed in Myrtle's section.

"Number please . . . Riverview 4197 . . . Thank you . . . What? . . . Oh, I beg your pardon . . . 4111."

"Why don't you listen as you're paid to do?" growled back a man's voice over the wire. His articulation was thick, hoarse. Evidently he was laboring under some tremendous strain.

However it is not for the mere telephone operator to resent, whatever her provocation.

"4111, thank you," said Myrtle in the same pleasantly modulated tone as before and made the proper connection. But not even then being certain that she had correctly understood the man's thick directions, she cut in on the line to listen for a moment and so forestall further complaints from him.



The Ugly Revolver in His Hand.

With the receiver clamped tight to her ear she could hear the 'phone bell buzzing faintly across the city—in a house, Myrtle judged, because the Riverview exchange lay in the aristocratic residential section. Buzz—Buzz-zz—z! Then came a woman's voice—soft, sweet and low.

"Hello . . . Oh, is that you, Jim? I had gotten quite anxious about you. I expected you home to dinner tonight. You promised, you know. . . . And 'Snookums' was so disappointed when I had to tuck him in bed without kissing his papa good night. He was so excited by all the noise on the streets and kept asking me if his bad daddy wouldn't come home early to him on New Year's eve. I really think you might have, Jim, because—"

"Oh, I know! I know!" interrupted the man's voice impatiently, although he evidently was making a strong effort to conceal his distraught condition from her. "Business detained me at the office later than I anticipated, Edna, and afterwards . . . afterwards Harry Forbes dropped in and we went out for a bite to eat together."

"But you'll be home right away now, won't you, dear?" pleaded the woman's voice coaxingly. "Please don't stay any later. I've promised 'Snookums' that you'll be home to wish him a Happy New Year while the whistles are still blowing."

"I can't possibly make it now . . . there's a big deal we're talking over."

"Jim"—reproachfully — "I thought you assured me you never would dabble in the market again after that last time when you risked all we had in the world simply on the chance of making a few dollars without really earning it."

"Edna, I—I—"

"Jim, your very voice sounds queerly. Nothing has gone wrong at the office there today, has there, dear?"

"No . . . No, nothing," came the man's voice wearily, soothingly. "Don't worry now . . . No use any more. Excuse me if I spoke sharply, little girl. I'm tired out—that's all . . . Yes, yes . . . Good-by, dearest one."

The receiver clicked sharply and the listening Myrtle experienced a sense of physical relief, the exact reason for which she would have been at a loss to explain. How strangely the man had intoned his good-bye—almost as if he never expected to be able to say it again to the wife he loved. It was as if—

"Yes, number please . . . Oh—"

It was the voice of the same man speaking crossly over the wire.

"Get me Grant 6212—quick!" he growled. "I'm in a hurry."

She plugged the proper hole connecting him and listened for a moment.

"Hello! Grant 6212? the Morgue? Well, this is James P. Thornton talking. Yes, J-A-M-E-S Thornton of J. P. Thornton, Inc. I'm about to commit suicide in my office at 1478 Stock Exchange building. If you'll send your men over here within 15 minutes they'll find my body here . . . Door's unlocked, ready for you. Statement for the newspapers will be found on desk. I've just completed it. . . . Was smashed in collapse of market on the board floor this afternoon . . . No, that's—and then, ironically — all . . . Happy New Year!"

His receiver clicked down on the hook, severing the connection in the midst of horrified abjurations from the other end of the wire. Simultaneously Myrtle, the telephone girl, jerked the metal loop from her head and sprang down the aisle, disregarding the surprised exclamations of her fellows and the imperative call of the supervisor. She grabbed her hat and shabby little jacket from their peg on the locker-room wall as she fled.

A suicide? . . . he was about to die by his own hand . . . And with that sweet-voiced wife waiting for him there at home with the dear little kiddie tucked up in bed and crying for his daddy's good-night kiss! It was wrong —all wrong! . . . To stop him! Ah, if only she could get there in time! There was a chance—a slim chance, for it happened that the Stock Exchange was directly next door to the big gray telephone building.

Fortunately the night elevator man had his car waiting there on the main floor, while he leaned against the side of the cage gossiping with one of the scrub women. Myrtle bounded in, startling both nearly out of their wits.

"Quick!" she panted, seizing his arm with tense fingers, "The fourteenth floor . . . Not an instant to spare!"

"But it's against rules to let you go up there at this unholy time of night unless you've got a permit," expostulated the bewildered elevator man. "You can't—"

Myrtle drove the motive lever home herself and the iron cage shot swiftly upwards before the man could stop her. It was a sickening breathless rise . . . Ah! the fourteenth floor at last! Precious moments wasted fumbling with the mechanism of the elevator door . . . Then through it and out . . . the staccato clatter of little high heels racing down the long dim, empty corridor to where a blotch of light showed through the transom of Suite 1478.

For a brief second Myrtle's heart suspended its pulsation and she hesitated with her trembling hand outstretched to turn the knob. What if she should find—should find him already the victim of his own mad act—lying there on the richly-carpeted floor of the sumptuously furnished offices with a pool of blood slowly coagulating around the bullet hole in his temple. If—

But Myrtle, the telephone girl, waited to conjecture no longer. She threw her weight against the unlocked door. It gave suddenly and precipitated her inwards coincidently with her frenzied cry of:

"STOP!"

The man sitting at the long mahogany desk with the ugly revolver already in his hand half started to his feet, his face ashen; stared at this most unexpected intruder, bulge-eyed. He seemed unable to collect his thoughts; only passed his hand over his mouth two or three times, muttering in a half-witted way: "Who . . . who . . . what . . ."

Then he toppled suddenly and fell flat on his face to the floor.

"Dead!" groaned Myrtle, horror-stricken, dropping to her knees beside the inaminate form.

"Naw!" grunted the elevator man, who just then joined her. "He's fainted —that's all, kid. Better go git me a wet rag to sop his face with. That'll bring him 'round in a jiffy."

But Myrtle was already seated at the adjacent telephone, calling the number she so well remembered:

"Yes, yes, operator . . . That's it, Riverview 4111. . . . Hello! . . . hello! Is this Mrs. Thornton talking? . . . No, you don't know me, but that doesn't matter. You hurry and wake up 'Snookums;' put on all his things and hurry down here to Mr. Thornton's office. He needs you . . . Asked me to call you up. . . . Says he wants to begin a Happy New Year with you and the baby right down here. . . . You'll come right away . . . All right, thank you . . . Yes, I'll wait here too—"

And just then a deafening racket of horns, whistles and bells burst forth, while hundreds of little white lights began to flash here and there along their great switchboard in the nearby telephone exchange, and the girls' hands flew to the connections. And, as James Thornton slowly revived under the tender, solicitous ministrations of the 'phone girl and the grimy elevator man, a white light illumined his soul also.

"Where's 'Snookums?'" he queried weakly.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

WOODPECKERS' BAND.

"Well," said Daddy, "what will the story be about this evening?"

"Birds," suggested Nancy.

"How does that suit you, Nick?" asked Daddy.

"That will be fine," said Nick.

"All right," said Daddy. "Here goes: The Woodpecker Family were around on various Trees drumming, drumming on the Bark. Mr. Hairy Woodpecker, Mr. Downy Woodpecker and Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker were all hard at work.

"'Let's start a Band,' suggested Mr. Hairy Woodpecker.

"'What's that you say?' asked Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker, who had been so busy at Work that he hadn't heard what Mr. Hairy Woodpecker had suggested.

"'A Band,' repeated Mr. Hairy Woodpecker.

"'What sort of a Band?' asked Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker.

"'Yes,' said Mr. Downy Woodpecker, 'tell us about it.'

"'In the first place our Bills not only make splendid Tools for the Work we have to do in the trees, destroying the Bad Insects which would otherwise eat into the Trees and kill them,' said Mr. Hairy Woodpecker, 'but our Bills would do excellently for beating the Drums in a Band.'

"'Where would we get the Drums?' asked Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker.

"'The Trees, of course, you Silly!' said Mr. Hairy Woodpecker.

"'Oh, yes, yes,' said Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker.

"And Mr. Downy Woodpecker said, 'Of course, of course. The Trees will be our Drums.'

"'We'll get the other Birds to help us—for a band must have something else besides Drums,' continued Mr. Hairy Woodpecker. 'We'll get the Goldfinches and the Mocking Birds—because they can do almost anything we want them to in the Band. And we'll get the Bobolinks, the Phoebe and Chickadee Families, all of the Warbler and Vireo families and the Robins, of course. Then I think we'll ask the Orioles, the Whippoorwills, the Thrush Family and the Song Sparrows.'

"'Oh,' said both Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker and Mr. Downy Woodpecker, 'that will make a perfect Band. We will have every kind of a sound you can imagine, and we should have lots of different sounds in a Band.'

"'Grown-Ups don't say sounds,' corrected Mr. Hairy Woodpecker; 'they say instruments.'

"'Well,' said Mr. Downy Woodpecker, 'we're not Grown-Ups. We're Birds. So let's say sounds!'

"'All right,' agreed Mr. Hairy Woodpecker.

"'We will ask the Birds at once, won't we?' asked Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker.

"'Yes, the sooner we get started the better it will be. We need to have Practice.'

"The Woodpeckers beat upon the trees so steadily and so very, very hard, that all the Birds came flying from far and near to see what was the matter.

We Want a Bird Band.

"The Birds who went to the Woods found Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker still pounding on the old tree he had chosen for his new nest. He liked to work where the bark was soft. Mr. Hairy Woodpecker was working hard in the woods also, and Mr. Downy Woodpecker was digging into an old apple tree—for the Woodpeckers like old trees best.

"And Mr. Sapsucker, Mr. Crested Woodpecker and Mr. Flicker Woodpecker had all joined in beating the Drums!

"'Why are you making so much noise?' asked the other Birds as they arrived.

"'We want to have a Band,' said Mr. Hairy Woodpecker, 'and we will beat the drums.'

"'Yes,' said Mr. Red-Headed Woodpecker, 'we want to have a Bird Band—the finest ever known.'

"'And just what do you want us to do?' asked Mr. Robin Redbreast, who was always eager to help.

"'You must all sing.'

"'But we all sing so differently,' some of them chirped.

"'Oh,' said Mr. Hairy Woodpecker, 'I never thought about that. But never mind, you can have little parts you can sing alone and other choruses where you all sing together. I'm sure it will be a very fine Band after we have practiced.'

"'Well,' said Robin Redbreast, 'if the Bird Band isn't to be the Finest in the land, at least we'll make a Cheerful Noise'!"

REVIEW OF EUROPEAN WAR AND OTHER IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1916

Great Conflict Rages With Increased Intensity—Roumania, Fifteenth Nation to Enter Struggle, Overrun by Central Powers—Teutonic Allies Make First Peace Proposals—United States Faces Several Crises.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

Those who are engaged in or are viewing at close range the titanic conflict in which all Europe is involved can with difficulty appreciate the magnitude of the events which have transpired during the past 12 months. Generations to come, however, looking back upon this period with a clearer vision, will recognize the year 1916 as one of the most tremendous, from a history-making standpoint, since the world began.

Europe continued its blood-letting throughout the year with even greater ferocity than marked the first 18 months following the breaking of the storm. The great war rounded out its second and entered upon its third year, with little promise of an early conclusion of peace. During the year new nations entered into the war, one of them, Roumania, to become the scene of some of the most ferocious fighting of the year, one new nation was created, another tottered to its fall, while on a dozen fronts millions of men were fed as human sacrifices to the insatiate war monster.

There were seven outstanding phases of the great war during the year 1916. These comprised the great offensive of the Russians in Galicia, which was finally checked by the Teutonic allies; the superhuman efforts of the Germans to capture Verdun, which were thwarted by the equally superhuman defense offered by the French; the long-awaited grand offensive of the British and the French on the western front, resulting in the recovery of considerable area in the Somme region, but not definitely breaking the deadlock in northern France; the checking of an Austrian offensive by the Italians and the launching of a counter-offensive by which the Italians made big strides in their campaign against Trieste; the conquest of Roumania by the Teutonic allies; the drive of the Serbs, aided by French, Italian and British troops, in an effort to regain their lost kingdom, and the final abandonment by the entente allies of their disastrous Gallipoli campaign.

The Russians launched their offensive in Galicia on the first day of the year. On January 9, the effort of the entente allies to force the Dardanelles was definitely abandoned, and the forces of the allies entirely evacuated the Gallipoli peninsula.

Verdun Attack Launched.

Early in February, the Russians, after a lull in the fighting, resumed their offensive in Galicia and on February 10 they crossed the Dniester and threatened Czernowitz. The Russians, under Grand Duke Nicholas, also continued their drive in the Caucasus and on February 14 they captured the important town of Erzerum. February 21, the Germans, led by the crown prince, launched their attack on Verdun, and during the next few days they smashed their way through the outer defenses until they came within big-gun range of the French stronghold. The French, taken by surprise, were forced to give ground, but by the last of the month they had strengthened their shattered lines and had checked the German drive. In the Verdun sector, for the next few months, occurred some of the most sanguinary fighting of the entire war. The Austrians had considerable success on the Italian front during the month, entering Durazzo on February 26 and driving the Italians before them. Portugal signalized its entry into the great conflict February 29 by seizing 34 German steamers interned in Portuguese ports. Germany demanded the release of the ships and on March 9 declared war on Portugal, the thirteenth nation to enter the conflict.

The month of March was marked chiefly by the continued determined attacks of the Germans upon Verdun. The assault entered its third stage in this month with repeated attacks on Vaux, Douaumont and other outlying towns, most of which were repulsed with terrific losses. During the month the Italians finally checked the Austrian drive and launched a big offensive along the entire Austrian front. The Russians continued their victorious drive against the Turks in Armenia, capturing Bitlis on March 3, and other important towns later in the month.

The early days of April saw a slowing up of the Russian offensive in Galicia. The Germans launched a counter offensive all along the Russian front but gained little headway. The following months saw terrific fighting along this front. April 23, the British admitted a defeat at the hands of the Turks in Mesopotamia and on April 29, General Townshend and 10,000 British soldiers, who had been besieged by the Turks at Kut-el-Amara, were forced to surrender after repeated efforts to relieve them had failed.

Great Sea Battle Fought.

The first great naval battle of the war was fought by the German and British high seas fleets off the coast of Jutland, Denmark, May 31. The British admit the loss of six large cruisers and eight destroyers, the Germans one battleship, one battle cruiser and a number of light cruisers and destroyers. More than 9,000 lives were lost. Both sides claim the victory. Five days later Great Britain received a staggering blow when the British cruiser Hampshire was blown up in the North sea by a mine and Earl Kitchener, British secretary of war, and his entire staff, were lost. During the early part of June the Russians broadened their offensive in Galicia and along the lines further north and on June 7 they announced the recapture of the fortress of Lutsk in Volhynia and the crossing of the Ikwa and Styr rivers at several points.

On July 1, the British and French launched their great drive on the west front. A concerted attack was made on a 25-mile front north and south of the Somme river. July 11, after ten days and nights of continuous fighting, the British claimed the capture of the whole of the enemy's first lines of defense on a front of 14,000 yards. During the remainder of the month the British and French continued their advance, the British occupying the entire village of Pozieres July 26 and the French advancing close to Peronne, an important railroad center.

During the month of August the Russians, after terrific fighting, pierced the Teuton lines on the Lemberg and Kovel fronts and advanced in the Carpathians. The Italians continued their drive on Trieste. August 9, after days of terrific fighting, they captured Goritz and pushed forward, pursuing the retreating Austrians.

Roumania Enters War.

Roumania, after months of wavering, entered the war on the side of the entente allies with a declaration of war on Austria-Hungary. Roumania was the fifteenth nation to enter the war. On the same day Italy declared war on Germany and the following day Germany declared war on Roumania. With the declaration of war fighting began between the Roumanians and Austrians on the Transylvanian frontier. August 30, the Roumanians occupied Kronstadt and Hermannstadt, the two chief cities of Transylvania. Field Marshal von Hindenburg, whose successes had made him the idol of the German people, succeeded General von Falkenhayn as chief of the general staff of the German army August 29.

During the month of September, the Roumanians, co-operating with the Russians, advanced in northern Transylvania and Bukowina, but suffered severe reverses at the hands of the Bulgarians and Austrians in Dobrudja. The allied troops made decided gains in the Somme sector, occupying Combles and other important towns on September 26.

Early in October the tide turned against the Roumanians and Russians in Transylvania and the latter were forced to retire before a strong Austro-German force under command of General von Falkenhayn. On October 11, the Teutons began an invasion of Roumania. On the Verdun front, the French smashed the German lines October 24, retaking Douaumont fort and village.

The struggle between the Roumanian and Russian forces on the one side and the Teuton and Bulgarian armies on the other held the center of attention in November. Taking advantage of the plight in which the Roumanians on the Transylvanian front found themselves Von Mackensen held his lines in Dobrudja and, attacking the Danube line, forced the river barrier at several points. Effecting a juncture of their forces, the Teuton commanders drove the Roumanians back upon Bucharest. The Roumanians retreated rapidly toward the capital, burning villages and all stores of grain and munitions in the district through which they passed. November 28, the seat of the Roumanian government was moved from Bucharest to Jassy, near the Russian frontier. The Roumanians evacuated Bucharest December 6 in order to save their army.

The Serbians, aided by French and Italian troops, made a start toward winning back their country during November. Their big drive resulted in the capture of Monastir on November 19. On the Somme front the battle of the Ancre opened November 13 with the capture by the British of five miles of the German positions, together with three strong towns.

An announcement of far-reaching significance was made in the Russian duma December 2 by Premier Trepoff, who read a proclamation announcing officially that an agreement concluded by Russia, France and Great Britain in 1915, and later approved by Italy, "establishes in definite manner the rights of Russia to the straits and Constantinople."

The fall of the British cabinet early in December furnished one of the most sensational features of the year's war developments. Demands of David Lloyd-George for the formation of a smaller war council to obtain greater efficiency forced the resignation of Premier Asquith. Lloyd-George was made premier and selected a new cabinet, the prosecution of the war being placed in the hands of five men, including the premier.

The first direct overtures for peace came on December 13, when Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey sent identical notes to the entente allies through the United States, Spain and Switzerland, proposing that the belligerents arrange a conference for the discussion of peace terms. The notes were transmitted to the allied governments by President Wilson without comment. The peace proposals were received coldly. Premier Briand, in the French house of deputies, issued a warning against a premature peace, and the Russian duma, according to announcement made December 16, passed a resolution favoring a refusal on the part of the allied governments to enter into any peace negotiations whatever under present conditions.

As if in answer to the peace proposals, the French in the Verdun sector delivered a crushing attack on the German forces December 15, winning 12 square miles of territory north of Verdun and driving the Germans back close to the line from which they started their great offensive against Verdun in February. General Nivelle, who directed this attack, had been a few days before placed in supreme command of the French armies in the west, succeeding General Joffre, who was made commander in chief of the French armies, but with little more than advisory powers.

WAR AND THE UNITED STATES

Diplomatic difficulties growing out of the war in Europe continued to confront the United States government throughout the past year. The submarine controversy with Germany, which had been more or less acute since the sinking of the Lusitania, was intensified March 2, when the British Channel steamer Sussex and the British steamer Englishman, both of which carried Americans, were torpedoed and sunk without warning. This occurred about two weeks after congress, at the urging of the president, had refused to adopt a resolution warning Americans to remain off armed merchant ships of the belligerents. The German government at first denied any responsibility for the attack on the Sussex, and on April 18 President Wilson addressed a note which amounted practically to an ultimatum to the German government. In this note the president declared that unless Germany immediately declared and effected an abandonment of its methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels, the United States could "have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German empire altogether." Germany's reply to this note, received in Washington May 5, promised compliance in the future with the laws of warfare in its submarine operations. A supplementary note from Berlin, received May 10, admitted that the Sussex was torpedoed, expressed regret, offered indemnity and declared that the submarine commander had been punished. No further serious controversy occurred with Germany until after the sinking of the Marina, with Americans aboard, October 28. It was charged that the vessel was torpedoed without warning. After an investigation Germany assumed responsibility for the sinking of the boat, declaring that the captain of the submarine thought the Marina an armed transport.

An interchange of notes between the United States and the entente governments, regarding the seizure and examination of American mails, was productive of little result. In several communications Great Britain and France insisted upon their rights to examine neutral mails, but on October 12 they made some slight concessions, promising to improve the mail service between America and neutral countries.

A blacklist against American firms and individuals, charged with dealing with Germany, which was published by Great Britain July 18, and by France August 6, brought emphatic protests from the United States government, but on November 14 Great Britain formally rejected the American protests, declaring that the blacklist was not aimed at neutrals.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES

The relations of the United States with Mexico became more strained during 1916 than at any previous time during the years of civil war that followed the retirement of President Porfirio Diaz. They approached a crisis early in the year when, on January 10, nineteen men, nearly all of them Americans, were taken from a train near Chihuahua and killed by a band of bandits.

Conditions became still more tense when, on March 9, several hundred bandits led by Villa raided and burned the town of Columbus, N. M., killing nine American civilians and eight United States soldiers. March 10, President Wilson ordered 5,000 United States troops into Mexico to catch Villa.

General Carranza, head of the de facto government in Mexico, began soon to display antagonism toward the American expedition and on March 17 he issued orders forbidding American troops from entering Mexican towns. He also refused to grant permission for the American forces to use the Mexican railroads for the transportation of supplies.

April 12, a detachment of United States troops was attacked by Carranza troops and citizens of Parral. Two Americans and 40 Mexicans were killed in the encounter. The following day Carranza demanded the withdrawal of the American troops from Mexico, but his demand was ignored. The pursuit of Villa came to a standstill, however, because of the hostility of Carranza.

May 31, General Carranza again demanded the withdrawal of the United States troops from Mexico on peril of "recourse to arms," and followed this up on June 16 with a definite threat of attack unless the troops were withdrawn northward. The following day re-enforcements were rushed to the United States troops in Mexico and within a short time the expeditionary force aggregated about 12,000 men. June 18, the war department ordered all the state militia mobilized and within the next two weeks 50,000 of the state soldiers had been rushed to the border.

A detachment of American troops was attacked by Carranza troops at Carrizal, June 21, and twelve Americans were killed and 17 captured.

A short time later Carranza abandoned his hostile attitude and in a conciliatory note to President Wilson suggested the appointment of a joint commission to settle the dispute between the two countries. July 28, President Wilson accepted this proposal.

President Wilson named Secretary of the Interior Lane, Judge George Gray and Dr. J. R. Mott as members of the American commission on August 22 and on September 6, the joint commission began its sessions at New London, Conn. The sessions continued until November 24, when a protocol was signed providing for the withdrawal of the United States troops from Mexico in 40 days, conditional upon the Carranza government showing within that time that it could protect the border and prevent raids by bandits upon American territory.

Two days before the signing of this protocol, Villa, at the head of a strong force, attacked Chihuahua City and after a battle lasting several days he captured that city.

Carranza forces regained control of Chihuahua City December 3 and Villa's forces fled to the mountains west of that city, where they were later reported to be gathering new recruits in preparation for more extensive operations.

INDUSTRIAL AND ECONOMIC

The outstanding feature of the year in the industrial world was the threatened strike of the 400,000 members of the four great railway brotherhoods, which was prevented only by the passage by congress of the Adamson bill.

The demands of the four brotherhoods, representing the engineers, firemen, conductors and trainmen, were made upon the railroads early in the year and after fruitless conferences between the representatives of the brotherhoods and the committee of general managers representing practically every railroad in the United States, a strike vote was taken among the members of the brotherhoods. On July 26 it was announced that the vote had been overwhelmingly in favor of a strike unless the demands of the men were granted by the railroads.

The federal board of mediation immediately offered its services in an effort to prevent a strike but on August 12 the board announced that it had been unable to bring about an agreement and on the following day President Wilson summoned the general managers' committee and the brotherhoods' representatives to the White House for a conference. This conference produced no result, the railroad managers offering to submit the whole controversy to arbitration but the brotherhood representatives refusing to agree to arbitration of their eight-hour day demands. August 29, President Wilson, with a promise from the brotherhood leaders that they could rescind their strike order, already issued, if a law were passed providing for the placing of their wage scales on an eight-hour basis, went before congress and asked the passage of three bills which he deemed necessary to meet the situation. One of these bills provided that "eight hours shall be deemed the measure or standard of a day's work for the purpose of reckoning the compensation for services of all employees" operating trains in interstate traffic.

Other bills proposed by the president provided for the compulsory submission of rail labor disputes to a board of mediation to be appointed by the president before a strike could be declared and for government operation of the railways in case of military necessity.

The bill embodying the provision for the eight-hour basis for wages, known as the Adamson bill, was rushed through the house September 1 and was passed by the senate September 2. The order for a strike which was to have gone into effect September 4 was then rescinded. The session of congress ended shortly afterwards and consideration of the other measures proposed by the president was postponed until the next session.

Strikes were in progress in a number of industries during the early part of the year and some were marked by scenes of violence. April 24, striking employees of the Westinghouse company, led by a masked woman, rioted in East Pittsburgh. Fatal strike riots occurred at the Carnegie Steel works in Braddock, Pa., May 2. A big strike was started by the Chicago garment workers May 9. Express drivers in Chicago struck May 16 and considerable violence marked the strike, express wagons being operated under police protection. July 13, state troops were sent to La Salle, Ill., to quell riots of cement works strikers.

A strike of street railway men stopped all surface cars in the boroughs of Manhattan, Bronx and Richmond, New York, August 5, but the strike ended two days later temporarily. September 6, a strike of all men on the subway, elevated and surface lines in New York was called. Serious riots marked the street car strike in New York, particularly on October 5.

November 5, a large party of I. W. W. members from Seattle engaged in a battle with a sheriff's posse at Everett, Wash. Seven men were killed during the fighting.

November 22, Judge Hook of the United States district court at Kansas City, Mo., held the Adamson eight-hour law unconstitutional and an agreement was reached between the representatives of the government and of the railroads for an appeal to the United States Supreme court in an effort to obtain a final decision on the validity of the law as soon as possible.

The year was one of great prosperity in all manufacturing and agricultural industries. Foreign trade of the United States, as shown by reports of the department of commerce, reached a total of $7,463,000,000 in the year ending November 1, an increase of $1,500,000,000 over 1915, and $2,500,000,000 over 1914.

The total wheat yield of the United States in 1916 was only 547,000,000 bushels, as compared with 1,011,000,000 bushels in 1915 and at the same time there was almost a proportionate falling off in all other grain crops. While the crops decreased enormously in quantity, they also increased enormously in price. The value of 19 staple crops, as based on the November 1 estimate of the department of agriculture, was $7,099,338,031, as compared with the estimated value on November 1, 1915, of the same crops of that year of $5,983,306,817. The aggregate value of all farm products, including live stock, was estimated at $12,000,000,000.

POLITICS IN OTHER LANDS

The Sinn Fein revolt in Ireland, the establishment of a revolutionary government in Greece, the proclamation of Poland as an independent nation by its Teutonic conquerors and the restoration of the republic in China, constituted the most important developments of a political nature in countries outside of the United States in 1916.

An official mandate, issued March 22, announced the abandonment of the Chinese monarchy and the restoration of the republic which had been displaced by the monarchy during the latter part of 1915. Yuan Shi Kai announced his rejection of the emperorship and resumed the presidency of the republic. June 6, Yuan Shi Kai died suddenly and Yuan Li Hung became president.

The Sinn Fein rebellion in Ireland was precipitated on April 18, when Sir Roger Casement, former consular officer of the United Kingdom, was captured while attempting to land in Ireland from Germany and a German ship loaded with arms to be used in an Irish uprising was sunk while attempting to land the arms. April 24, the Sinn Fein rebels seized parts of Dublin and serious fighting in the streets followed. The revolt spread, and on April 27 martial law was declared over the entire island. April 28, loyal troops took St. Stephens green in Dublin from the rebels, capturing 400 of them, and the following day, Peter Pearse, "president of the Irish Republic," surrendered. The next day the main body of the rebels surrendered. May 3, Pearse, Thomas J. Clark and Thomas McDonagh, leaders of the revolt, were executed in the Tower of London, after being found guilty of sedition at a military trial. Ten other leaders of the rebels were executed during the next few days. June 26, Sir Roger Casement was placed on trial for treason in London. He was convicted and sentenced to death June 29 and the sentence was executed by hanging in Pentonville prison, August 3. Following the Sinn Fein revolt, an effort was made by the government to bring about a compromise which would result in the granting of home rule to Ireland at once, but the effort was fruitless.

The revolutionary movement in Greece, which resulted in the formation of a provisional government by former Premier Venizelos, grew out of the refusal of King Constantine to be drawn into the war on the side of the entente allies. September 21, the island of Crete seceded from Greece, and on September 28, Former Premier Venizelos and Admiral Coundouriotis issued a proclamation declaring the establishment of a provisional government for Greece.

The independence of Poland, which had been wrested from Russia by Teutonic arms, was proclaimed by Germany and Austria, November 5.

The death of Franz Josef, emperor of Austria-Hungary, which occurred November 21, was expected in some quarters to be productive of events of far-reaching importance from a political viewpoint in the dual monarchy.

POLITICS IN UNITED STATES

The presidential election and the campaign which preceded it occupied a large part of the attention of the people of the United States throughout the year 1916. June 5, the Woman's party was originated and opened its first convention in Chicago. Two days later both the Republican and Progressive national conventions opened in Chicago. June 10, former President Theodore Roosevelt was nominated for president by the Progressives and Charles Evans Hughes, associate justice of the United States Supreme court and former governor of New York, was nominated by the Republicans. The Republicans nominated Charles W. Fairbanks of Indiana for vice president and the Progressives named John M. Parker of Louisiana as Roosevelt's running mate. June 16, the Democratic national convention convened in St. Louis and the following day President Wilson and Vice President Marshall were renominated without opposition. June 26, Colonel Roosevelt declined the Progressive nomination and the majority of the members of the Progressive national committee, meeting in Chicago, endorsed the candidacy of Mr. Hughes.

The election on November 7 was one of the most unusual ever held in the United States, the result not being definitely known until three days after the election, when the final count in California gave the 13 electoral votes of that state to President Wilson and gave him victory. President Wilson won 276 votes in the electoral college and Mr. Hughes 255. The vote cast in the election was larger by several million than any ever cast before in the United States. President Wilson receiving a plurality of about 400,000 in the popular vote. The great increase in the size of the vote was due partly to the fact that women voted for president in this election in 12 states.

Four more states voted to adopt state-wide prohibition in this election. They were Michigan, Montana, Nebraska and South Dakota. The Democrats retained control of the United States senate, but as a result of the close election, neither of the two major parties has a majority in the lower house of the next congress. The balance of power is held by five members not elected as members of either party—1 Socialist, 1 Progressive, 1 Prohibitionist, 1 Protectionist and 1 independent.

DISASTERS ON LAND AND SEA

Thousands of lives were lost during the year by the sinking of merchant vessels and warships as a result of their being torpedoed by submarines or blown up by mines. The greatest loss of life in accidents or attacks of this kind occurred February 26, when the French cruiser Provence was sunk in the Mediterranean sea, and 3,130 persons were drowned. April 23, more than 1,000 lives were lost in a collision between a Chinese cruiser and a transport.

February 2, the Japanese liner Daijin was sunk in a collision and 160 lives were lost.

February 9, the French cruiser Admiral Charnier was torpedoed and sunk with a loss of 374 lives. February 16, nine persons were killed when the opera house at Mexia, Tex., was destroyed by fire. February 20, great snowslides in the Salzburg alps killed nearly 100 persons. February 22, ten persons were killed in a triple collision on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, near Bridgeport, Conn. February 29, an explosion in a mine at Kempton, W. Va., killed 15 men.

March 5, the Spanish steamer Principe de Asturias struck a rock and sank off the coast of Brazil, with a loss of 300 lives.

March 28, 26 persons were killed and many were injured in a collision on the New York Central railroad near Cleveland, O.

April 19, Kansas and Missouri were swept by tornadoes which killed 17 persons. June 5, tornadoes killed 57 persons in Arkansas and 49 in other middle western states. May 8, the steamer Kirby sunk in Lake Superior and 20 lives were lost. May 15, an explosion in the Du Pont powder plant at Gibbstown, N. J., killed 13 men.

Hundreds of fishermen were lost in a monsoon off the Ceylon coast, July 20. July 24, 23 men were killed by an explosion of gas in a water tunnel at Cleveland, O. A trolley wreck at Johnstown, Pa., took a toll of 25 lives, August 12. August 29, the United States cruiser Memphis wa wrecked by a storm in the harbor Santo Domingo and 41 lives were lo

November 7, 50 lives were lost w a Boston "L" car plunged off a bri An explosion at Bakaritza, Rus November 21, resulted in the death 341 persons.

THE LAWMAKERS

Congress was in session continuously from January 4, when it reassembled after the Christmas holidays, until September 8. Early in the session a hot fight developed over the Philippine bill passed by the house. The senate adopted the Clarke amendment providing for the granting of full independence to the Philippines within from two to four years. May 1, the house rejected the Clarke amendment and on August 16 the senate accepted a compromise pledging independence to the Philippines when the Filipinos are fit for self-government.

February 2, the house passed a bill prohibiting child labor in the manufacture of products for interstate commerce, and late in the session the bill was passed by the senate and signed by the president. February 18, the senate ratified the Haitian treaty, providing for American supervision of the finances and police regulation of the republic.

Legislation providing for large increases in the strength of the army and navy received much attention. The navy appropriation bill, as finally passed, provided for the building of 157 ships during the next three years. The army bill, as passed, carried appropriations of $313,970,447 for the ensuing fiscal year, an increase of $131,667,091 over the amount carried by the bill as it first passed the house.

It keeps indefinitely. It can be used satisfactorily where any cough remedy is needed. It can be safely given to babies ten days old or adults ninety years of age.

Get three ounces—50 cents worth—of Glando Pine, with full directions for preparing, and you will have a cough remedy that is excelled by none.

For WHOOPING COUGH add an ounce of fluid extract of chestnut leaves.

Mr. A. T. Sherer, the owner of a machine shop at Haviland, Ohio, says: "My son had a severe cough for several years. After doctoring and trying a number of cough remedies, we began to think his case a hopeless one. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. The first bottle relieved him. He continued its use until he was cured. He is now well, and I believe Glando Pine saved his life." For sale by Druggists.

FEW INVENTIONS.

Marconi Finds Nothing Notable Has Been Perfected During War.

USE OF POISONOUS GASES OLD

Big Lesson of Conflict In Europe Is One of Organization and Transportation At Work on Signal System Which Will Render Far More Difficult Submarine Warfare.

Rome.—No notable scientific discoveries or inventions are growing out of the great war, in the opinion of William Marconi, the wireless inventor. In a recent interview he declared:

"As for war inventions, on the whole there have been no great ones that occur to me. Most of them have been minor ones or applications of knowledge previously at our disposal, as in the case of poison gases. If these may be named at all. In my own field there has been some advance in practical wireless by which we are now able to direct the artillery fire of a ship by signals from aeroplanes, which has been made possible largely through the big improvements in air craft.

WILLIAM MARCONI ON WAY TO FRONT.

"The big lesson in Europe has been one of organization of the physical handling of big material problems by the armies. I doubt if any one before this war ever realized the meaning and value of railroad transportation on a large scale, as it is practiced in the United States. Europe, too, has learned how to do big industrial jobs overnight, to assemble raw materials and turn out needed factory products.

"I refuse to play the prophet role, so I would rather not say how many of these war products will be of use to us when peace comes."

Since the beginning of the war Mr Marconi has had unusual opportunity for observing the practical side of the war, having early put his scientific knowledge at the service of his country. As a senator of the kingdom he has visited England, Belgium, France and other countries and introduced industrial and shipping reforms. In his capacity as military officer he has come into close relation with army and navy and given the benefit of his science and business organization knowledge to munition factories.

TEACHER NEAR DEATH.

Pupil She Corrected Had Nitroglycerine Cap.

Oakbrook, Pa.—Miss May E. Dillon, a teacher in the primary grade of the schools, only realized the next day how narrowly she had escaped death. She was forced to reprimand one of her pupils the other day and used a ruler. The next day she learned that the culprit had a nitroglycerin cap in his pocket at the time.

Lawrence Hine, six years old, one of the pupils, found a can of the explosive in a stone quarry and distributed some caps among his friends. The next day the owner of the caps called at the school, and all the caps were recovered from the pockets and desks of the pupils, who for twenty-four hours were in danger of being buried in midair together with their schoolhouse and teachers.

Poison Rings.

To speak of poison rings at once conjures up thoughts of Lucrezia Borgia and her gentle methods of eliminating those of her entourage whom she considered undesirable, but these rings were used by several far greater though less notorious than she. Hannibal killed himself by means of a poison ring. Demosthenes possessed one, and it is recorded by Pliny that when Crassus had stolen his treasure from beneath the throne of Capitoline Jupiter the guardian of the shrine "broke the gem of his ring in his mouth and forthwith died." Those who have seen a poison ring will have noticed how the fatal scratch could be inflicted while shaking hands.—London Globe.

CONSOLATION.

Before an affliction is digested consolation comes too soon, and after it is digested it comes too late, but there is a mark between these two as fine almost as a hair for a comforter to take aim at.—Sterne.

REWARDS HEROES

Middle West Figures Largely In Carnegie Medal Award.

ONE WOMAN ON THE LIST.

Mrs. Olive M. J. Cooper of Battle Creek, Mich., Saved Adult and Three Children From Drowning at Spencerville, Ind., by Swimming Out and Rescuing One at a Time.

Pittsburgh.—The heroism of John Murray, aged twenty-seven, a laborer, of Chicago, who risked his life to save that of Patrick Eustace, has been rewarded by the Carnegie hero fund commission, which awarded Murray a bronze medal.

Reaching out into an elevator shaft on the nineteenth floor of an uncompleted building in Chicago on June 27, 1911, Murray grasped Eustace, who had fallen from the twentieth floor. Murray gripped an iron beam with one arm and with his free arm caught Eustace as he started down the elevator shaft.

Other heroes from the middle west received honors.

Roger W. Wells of North Madison, Ind., receives a medal. Wells, forty years old, was disabled two weeks from lung congestion, due to fumes when he assisted in rescuing James E. Dougherty from suffocation at Heidelberg, Pa., on March 27, 1916.

George C. Oxley, a merchant of Marion, Ia., rescued ten-year-old E. Emerson Harte from a runaway at Marion on Aug. 16, 1915.

Donald H. Stoops, seventeen years old, of Nappanee, Ind., receives a medal because he saved Pauline E. Holmes, thirteen, and L. Beatrice Dowell, fifteen, from drowning at Pickwick Park, Ind., June 16, 1913. Stoops, although he had lost his left arm eight months before, swam to the point where the girls were struggling, pushed one of them ahead of him with his shoulder until she was in shallow water and swam back and rescued the other girl in the same way.

Dana S. Miller, a farm manager of Butler, Ind., is awarded a medal for having saved Elmer McDonald, a laborer, from an enraged bull on Aug. 17, 1912. McDonald had been gored and four ribs were broken. Miller attacked the animal with a pitchfork and was repeatedly knocked down. He finally seized a ring in the bull's nose and clung to it until the animal was subdued.

William T. Best, Owosso, Mich., is listed because he saved three-year-old Carney P. Lamphere from burning after a gasoline explosion at Owosso, Jan. 5, 1915. Best's burns disabled him for six weeks.

One woman is on the list. She is Mrs. Olive M. J. Cooper of Battle Creek, Mich., who saved an adult and three children from drowning at Spencerville, Ind., by swimming out on the St. Joseph river and returning with them one at a time.

LOTS OF MONEY IN KANSAS.

Hat Passed For $1,500 Brings Back $2,029.

Smith Center, Kan.—There is a lot of money in Kansas—enough to buy the minister a motorcar merely by passing the hat in a crowd.

So comes the report from Harlan, Kan., where fancy priced hogs, cattle, wheat and corn are the means of sustenance for farmers.

The other day, says J. W. Patten of this town, a $5,000 church was being dedicated, and the finance committee announced the fund to put the church out of debt lacked $1,500.

"Pass the hat," yelled some one.

The hat contained $2,029 in cash and checks when it got back.

You are invited to the Revival Meetings at St Joe Christian Church

Beginning

Sun. Night, Dec. 31.

Bible lectures on themes which will interest thoughtful men will be the specialty of the evangelist. Among the lecture and sermon topics are the following:

Setting Up the Kingdom of God.
How Become Sons of God?
What Shall I Do With Jesus?
Why the World is Condemned.
Washing the Lords' Cup Inside and Outside.
Christ's Mission to Earth.
Why Christ Descended into Hell.
Christs' Poverty Our Riches.
Crucifiction of Our Old Man.
The Lake of Fire and Brimstone.
The Two New Earths to Come.
Is the Gospel Hid to the Lost?
What Must I Do to be Saved?
Christ's Headship Over the Church.
Satan: His Origin and Destiny.
Trouble at the Gate.
The Ten Virgins.
Beware What You Treasure.
The Ordinances.
The Engrafted Word.

Other themes equally important will be treated if the meetings continue. Devotional services and question drawer will precede each evening's lecture. Bring any Bible question interesting you for the question drawer and come early to hear it answered. Are you troubled with doubts as to God and the Bible's claims? Come and hear. Your doubts will be sympathetically considered.

3 Funerals Monday

NEW YEARS' DAY BEGINS IN UNUSUAL Way in this Community.

The Farmers Organize Club

The Farmers' Club held its second meeting at Spring Brook Farm, Thursday evening of last week. The attendance was all that could be desired and much interest was taken by the farmers and their wives. A permanent organization was perfected with Frank Johnson as president, and Byron Widney, secretary and treasurer. A committee composed of Saxe Hadsell, Darrell Carpenter and L. W. Yeiser, was selected to draft a constitution and by-laws. The next meeting will be held at the home of B. V. Widney and wife Tuesday evening, Jan. 25th.

The object of the meetings is for mutual benefit in the farming industry. (Some day they will call it a profession.) Topics of interest are discussed and many good points and suggestions are brought out and the social side receives some attention. At the meeting Thursday evening; B. V. Widney put a problem up to the meeting that was rather difficult of solution. He had a run-down and worn out 80-acre farm laid out, which a book-keeper in California had fallen heir to. He had also inherited a thousand dollars and the problem was to start the fellow to farming with no means but the thousand dollars. The wife was allowed $100 which she had realized from the sale of goods in California, with which to equip the farm house kitchen. The ladies helped her so skillfully that she had several dollars left after making the necessary purchases, but the men had a harder time advising the man as to the best course to pursue. It was finally decided that the wise thing for him to do was to make his $1,000 go as far as it would toward buying horses, stock, machinery, tile and fencing and then mortgage the eighty for $2,000; that he might put himself in a position to make his acres pay a profit.

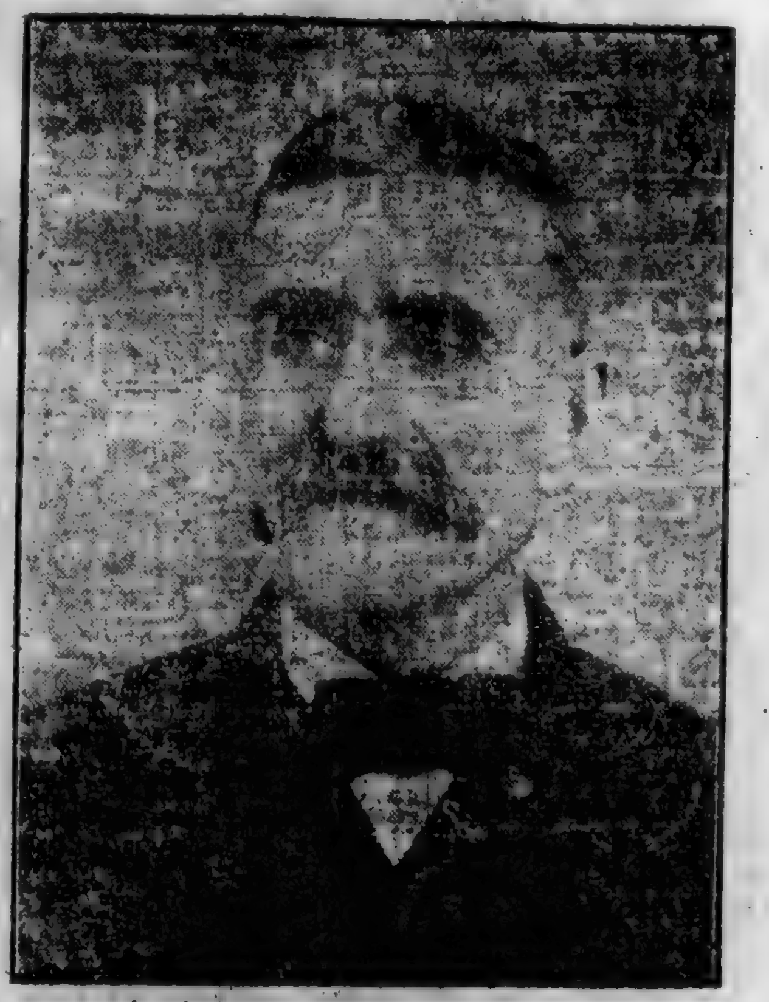
The matter of limiting the membership of the Club was discussed. While it is not desired to bar anyone who wishes to participate in the benefits that are sure to come to those who attend and take an active part, it will be necessary to in some way limit the attendance if the meetings are to be entertained in the homes. Possibly the best solution would be to have a number of neighborhood clubs organized, all working along the same line and in conjunction with the Tri-Township Farmers' Institute. The time is here when the farmer must keep posted and study the needs of his business. One of the big means of information open to him is the Purdue Short Course, which was greatly praised by those who attended last year.

The Mysteries of 1917

The teachers and officers meetings of the M. P. Sunday School that are being held the first Monday evening of each month, turned out to be quite a surprise last Monday evening. The members had gathered at the home of Freb B. Leighty and wife to carry on the business as comes before this body and as J. N. George, who had charge of the program, was making his preliminary remarks to opening the program, he was interrupted by Mrs. Blanch Leighty, saying that they desired first to initiate the Superintendent, his assistant and their wives into the mysteries of 1917 and that they would go thru darkness. Each victim was blindfolded and given a leader and then led out into the darkness. They were given a walk for some distance through the road, down dark slippery alleys, across back lots into clothes lines, up and down steep embankments, up steps, over ditches and in every conceivable place where you could not hire those folks to go alone after dark. At different times the guides would ask if we were able to locate ourselves and some were considerably bothered. Upon returning they were ushered into the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hull where the guests were gathered and set down to a fine supper prepared by the ladies. The program was carried out and a most excellent meeting was the result. In closing, we have made a good start, but let us not go through the year with a blind over our eyes, as officers, we feel that success will be ours, if, through the year 1917, the officers and teachers will stand ready to lead in the great work that lies before us. We're even now—let's resolve to do one better.

John N. George
Fred B. Leighty.

The new year has brought some changes at the court house and Frank Baltz and Clark Scholes, will be the new faces from this vicinity, who will be standing ready to greet you at the hub. Chas. Davis, of Jackson township, will act as deputy for Mr. Baltz and Calvin Kain, of Newville township, 28, will act as deputy surveyor.



JOHN Y. DAVIS

John Y. Davis, son of Robert and Lydia Davis, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Nov. 13, 1840. And departed this life after an extended illness Dec. 30, 1916, at the age of 76 years, 1 month, 17 days. In the year of 1844, he with his parents moved to Ashland County, Ohio, thence to Spencerville in 1850. At the age of 21 years he enlisted for service for his country at Spencerville, Ind., as a Private in Co. A, 100th Indiana Volunteers. He after giving to his country efficient service was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, June 24 1865. His first marriage was to Caroline Horn. To this union were born three children: Infant, deceased; Effie, and Robert, deceased. She departed this life Jan. 31, 1873. May 21st 1874, he was married to Catherine Walter. To this union were born two children, Frank and Emma deceased. She departed this life March 15, 1914. He has been preceeded to the Great Beyond by his parents, three brothers and three sisters. During an Evangelistic Meeting held at the Lutheran Church he gave his heart to Christ, and during his illness he often expressed his readiness to go.

He was a charter member of the G. A. R., and also the I. O. O. F. Lodge of which he took active part when health permitted. He was the oldest member in the I. O. O. F. at St. Joe, belonging 44 years. He leaves to mourn his loss, one daughter, Effie Wineland; one son, Frank Davis; five grandchildren, 5 great grandchildren; 1 brother, Martin Davis, of Spencerville, Ind.; and a host of friends and relatives. Funeral services were conducted from the home Monday at 2 o'clock by E. R. Kinsey, with Rev. A. K. Mumma officiating. Thirty-three members of the order attended in a body.

The double funeral of Mr. and Mrs. Wenzel Boblick of near Newville, was held New Year's morning at 10 o'clock in the Newville Christian church, Rev. Trowbridge having charge of the services. Interment was made in the cemetery nearby. The funeral was largely attended. Mr. Boblick died Saturday morning while seated in a chair in his home from heart trouble, apparently due to the shock of his wife's death Wednesday night, and whose funeral was to be held that day at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Boblick was 66 years, 9 months and 4 days of age, and Mrs. Boblick was 74 years, 8 months and 1 day old. Mr. Boblick came to America from Germany when he was nineteen years of age and lived in Ohio for two years. Following his residence there he came to DeKalb county and lived here the balance of his life. He married Kate Greenwald in 1866, but they never had any children. Julian Day, who was practically an adopted child, has lived with them for many years.

Why That Lame Back?

Morning lameness, sharp twinges when bending, or an all-day backache; each is cause enough to suspect kidney trouble. Get after the cause. Help the kidneys. We Americans go it too hard. We overdo, overeat and neglect our sleep and exercise and so we are fast becoming a nation of kidney sufferers. 72% more deaths than in 1890 is the 1910 census story. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands recommend them.

J. H. Truebe, 342 Harvard St., Youngstown, O., says: "Three physicians said I was in such bad shape with kidney complaint I couldn't live six months. For nine months I was confined to the house, most of the time in bed. My limbs were terribly swollen and my back pained acutely. The kidney secretions were scanty and I had awful dizzy spells. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me and the cure has been permanent for years."

He Never Knew Temptation.

Rev. Fred Winslow Adams, pastor of St. Andrew's Methodist Episcopal church in West Seventy-sixth street, who recently read from his pulpit answers to the question, "What are the greatest safeguards against temptation?" received a reply to his question from Thomas A. Edison. He said:

"I cannot answer the question as I have never had any experience in such matters. I have never had time, not even five minutes, to be tempted to do anything against the moral law, civil law or any law whatever. If I were to hazard a guess as to what young people should do to avoid temptation, it would be to get a job and work at it so hard that temptation would not exist for them."—New York Mail.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad, has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.—Adv.

SAFETY IN A DRY STATE.

Ragged and unkempt, George Mertz, miner and self-styled prey of liquor, walked into the office of the Associated Charities in Pomona and begged for a pair of shoes so that he might walk to Arizona and "get into a dry state."

Questioned by Mrs. W. J. Rogers, in charge of the office, Mertz brokenly told her that he had gone to Los Angeles from Globe, Ariz., and a few days ago was sent to jail here for drunkenness. Released, he started to walk into a "dry" country.

"Everywhere I turned in Los Angeles a saloon reached out for me," said Mertz. "They took every cent I had. I simply could not resist."

"Why don't you take a cure?" asked Mrs. Rogers.

"There is no cure for a man whose will is gone," replied Mertz. "Just give me a pair of shoes so that I can get to Arizona. I was all right there. I had not had a drink since prohibition became a law."

He was furnished with the shoes and resumed his journey.—Los Angeles Express.

WASTING FOODSTUFFS.

The following editorial recently appeared in one of the leading dailies of the middle West under the caption of "Foodstuffs."

"The time is here when farm crops must be used for food; when the products of the land will not suffice to feed the people of the world. To use for making liquors the grain which is needed to feed the people is an economic crime and an offense against humanity. This is the broad view of the beverage liquor question. It is outrageous to think of hundreds of thousands of human beings being insufficiently nourished, scantily fed, while the crops are being taken for the manufacture of booze. If the people will think of the liquor question from this point of view there will be small delay in bringing about the adjustments which shall not only cut off the evils of the liquor traffic, but also will stop the misappropriation of the foodstuffs of the people to stock the saloons with poison."

ALABAMA BANKER'S OPINION.

J. B. Wadsworth, a banker of Gadsden, Ala., gives the following testimony to the success of prohibition in his state:

"The common masses of the people are the beneficiaries of prohibition. They have the money that formerly went for liquor to pay rents, buy clothes, shoes and groceries, send their children to college, etc., etc. Thousands of wage-earners now have them who formerly had no bank accounts. The economic feature is marvelous. Cost of officers, police, judges, etc., is reduced to a minimum."

FOR WORLD WEAL.

"I am more an American than I am a southerner," said Dr. Ira Landreth in a recent speech, "and if you aren't more of an American than you are a northerner, you are an undesirable citizen. This is no time to be southerners and northerners, Englishmen or Germans—this is the time to be unadulterated and unapologetic, but unboastful, Americans, personally true and upright and internationally unafraid, but fraternal. America first, but America sober; America first, but America for the weal of the world."

A PAT STATEMENT.

One of the dry campaigners in Michigan struck the keynote when in addressing the employees of a Detroit automobile factory he said: "If the saloon tends to make men and women and boys and girls better citizens and more efficient and capable, then no decent man will vote dry; but if the tendency of the saloon and the liquor traffic is to make them less capable and destroy homes and ruin character, then every clean, decent man will vote dry."

SIDE LIGHTS ON PHILADELPHIA.

The Local Option League of Pennsylvania has issued a bulletin entitled "John Barleycorn in Account With the City of Philadelphia." It contains many very interesting items bearing on the rum question. It goes into statistics extensively and shows that Philadelphia spends practically twice as much in taking care of the victims of drink as the city receives from liquor revenue. The revenue is $1,919,165. The estimated cost of caring for rum victims reaches the enormous total of $3,900,000.

Spectacles of the Russian Ballet

The spectacles presented by the Russian Ballet were revelations of gorgeous color. Audiences were enthralled by them, responding to the fascination of the most marvelous management of color that has ever inspired them to enthusiasm. It is for students of the times to determine how great an influence these spectacles have had on fashions. We see this influence reflected now and know that it will reappear in the spring, for it has given women "the courage of color," as Rostand expresses it.

The legends of the ballets make a limitless playground for the imaginations of those who must enjoy so rich a field. In "Scheherazade," the scene is a sultan's harem. It goes without saying that here is chance for reproducing and elaborating oriental splendor. "Le Carnaval" betrays by [illegible] how great the variety it in[illegible]tra" revives the [illegible] Sadko" imagina[illegible] the zenith of its [illegible] here is nothing [illegible] mper the fancy [illegible] cene is laid at [illegible] the realm of [illegible] where the for[illegible] ving musician, [illegible] stage is peopled with groups representing swaying seaweed, corals, sea flowers, fishes and other inhabitants of the deep, clear waters.

The costuming is a revelation of resourcefulness and of beauty that lures the mind into unexplored paths. Why not take the corals or anything else on land or sea as inspirations and make life a continual round of impersonations? In the accompanying picture "The Bird" of the Russian Ballet leads us to ponder the prodigality of nature in clothing the feathered tribe. Color and more color is the bequest of the ballet.

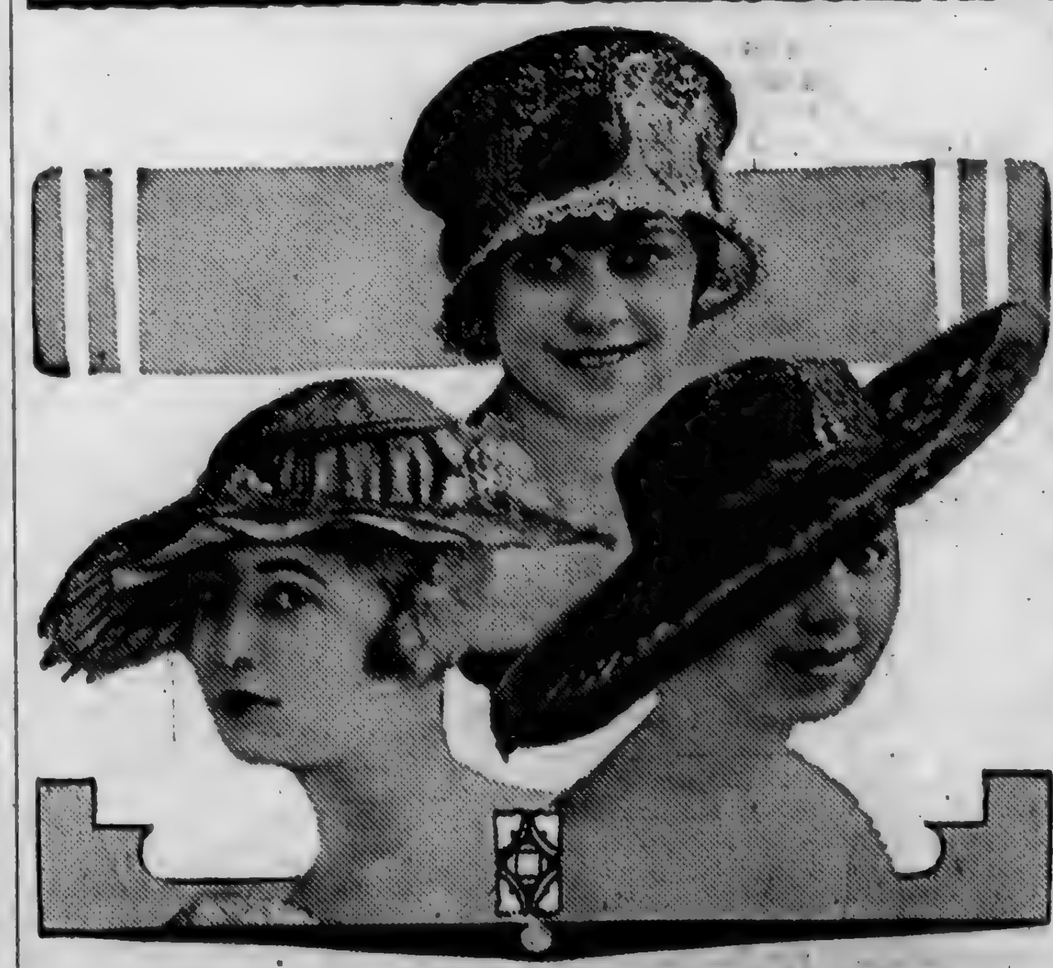
Novelty in Handles.

Cherries are always more or less popular on umbrella handles, and one of the new umbrellas fairly bristles with them. Bright red cherries on stems are carried along the full length of the handle. It is the branch of a cherry tree and unusually well laden with fruit.

Borders of Braid.

On some of the new suits for autumn there is little trimming, though broad silk braid is occasionally employed as a border for skirt and coat. Belts are ubiquitous, though on many models the belt appears back and front.

The Gorgeous Hat of Midwinter



Midwinter millinery is about to make its exit from fashion's stage. It has made a splendid performance and will be bowed out amid many plaudits for its brilliant triumphs, for it has grown more and more rich and beautiful as the season advanced to its climax. Already demi-season hats of satin are making their appearance, intended to tide over the time between winter and spring. But we shall not turn our backs on the gorgeous hats of midwinter without casting "one longing, lingering look behind."

A look will be rewarded with such inspiring headwear as is pictured in the group of hats above, and any one of them is fascinating enough to make one bless the winter season. At the center of the group a hat of heavy blue silk lace is made over a wire frame and lined with silver gauze. The Nattier blue of the lace looks particularly well with moleskin, and the hat has a top crown of this fur. There are medallions in the pattern of the lace, about the side crown, and every other one is covered with a medallion of fur.

At the left a hat of s[illegible]in is covered with a delicate net [illegible]ace of gold. Th lace extends be[illegible] e ribbon in the brim. There a[illegible] clusters of metallic roses and [illegible] about the crown, and this model would be quite as much at home among palms and flowers as it is against a background of snow and ice.

The third hat is of black chantilly lace and kolinsky fur. The brim-edge is bound with fur and there is a narrow band of it about the crown. An odd star-shaped ornament, covered with jet beads, is applied to the top crown and its points are extended into ornaments that lie flat against the side crown. Two jet balls rest on the brim at the right side. The hat is a reserved and quiet design made sufficiently brilliant to hold its own in gay company, by the jet ornaments.

Cluny Lace From China.

Cluny lace, the most widely serviceable, durable and practical of handmade edgings and insertions for general use where something worth while is desired, now comes from China. It is made there at lower rates than in Europe. The Chinese lace is known as Chee Foo, from the place from which it comes.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

LEAVES AND BROWNIES.

"There were dozens and dozens of red apples lying on the ground," said Daddy, "the other evening. It had happened this way.

"'The Brownies,' whispered the Red Apples to their friends the Leaves, 'love to have an apple feast when it is cold and the autumn has come. So won't you blow and whisper it to the Wind so that the message can go to the Brownies?'

"'But if we blow,' said the little Leaves, 'there will be none of us left. It is time to go anyway, and we were just hanging on—just hanging on.' They shivered miserably.

"'But,' said Mr. Wind, who was listening, 'you must not feel badly if you are blown off the tree. I will tell you what I will do. I will call out all my grandchidren.'

"'Who are your grandchidren?' asked the Leaves, becoming interested.

"'They are all the Breezes—the little Breezes, you know.'

"'So they are your grandchildren, are they?' asked the Leaves again. 'We'd love to play with them. If we can have a merry chase and race—then, oh then, we don't mind if we are blown off the tree.'

"'And you will tell the Brownies about us?' asked the Red Apples. 'For you know that you blew about so, we fell to the ground! We didn't mind that, so now will you whisper our message?'

Brownies Sat and Ate.

"Almost before the Leaves had sent their whispers sailing on the wings of Mr. Wind's grandchildren, the Breezes, the Brownies arrived.

"They wore red suits and red hats, and looked quite rosy and red themselves. 'Ah, such a good, crisp, cold evening,' said they. 'We shouldn't be surprised if the leaves all fell tonight.'

"'Yes,' said another Brownie, 'just see how they are blowing.'

"'We will come down,' whispered the Leaves, but the Brownies didn't hear. Instead the grandchildren of Mr. Wind heard and they came back to play with the leaves.

"Oh, how they tossed and chased each other. The Leaves dropped from the trees and skimmed along the ground. And then they would fly up a little way again and the Breezes would catch them!

"For a long time they played, while below the old apple tree the Brownies sat and ate the red apples.

"'We'll have a bonfire and roast some of the apples,' said Billie Brownie.

"'Hurrah!' shouted the other Brownies.

"And they set to work. First they got sticks and twigs, and they began to set up a fine fire.

"The Breezes were so interested that they stopped playing, and the Leaves dropped about. 'Let's watch the bonfire,' said the Breezes.

"'But what will become of us?' asked the Leaves.

"'Maybe the Brownies will put you in the bonfire, and you can blaze too and hear what the merry little flames have to tell you.'

"'All right,' said the Leaves. 'But you must help us a little, Breezes.'

"So the Breezes blew ever so little and the Brownies began to notice that the wind was dying down.

"'We might use some of these leaves for the bonfire,' suggested one of the Brownies. 'They don't seem to be blowing about any more.'

"'Fine idea,' shouted another Brownie. And to work they all went picking up all the leaves they could gather in their chubby little arms.

"On the bonfire went the leaves, and the merry little flames rushed up to greet them.

"'Hello leaves,' said the Flames, 'will you help us roast the red apples for the Brownies?'

"'Yes!' shouted the Leaves, and as they said that, a great big blaze came from them.

"'How beautifully those leaves burn,' said the Brownies, and as the leaves grew dull and turned up at the edges they smiled to themselves in another little flash of light.

"'What would we do without leaves and apples and the wind, and all such wonderful things?' said Billie Brownie. And anyone could have told him that they helped make us joyous and glad to be alive!"

Making Yourself.

"Making something out of himself," is a good phrase. A boy can make what he pleases out of himself, if he sets about it in the right way.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.—Adv.

A Motorist's Criticism.

SOUR, ACID STOMACHS, GASES OR INDIGESTION

Each "Pape's Diapepsin" digests 3000 grains food, ending all stomach misery in five minutes.

Time it! In five minutes all stomach distress will go. No indigestion, heartburn, sourness or belching of gas, acid, or eructations of undigested food, no dizziness, bloating, foul breath or headache.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in regulating upset stomachs. It is the surest, quickest stomach remedy in the whole world and besides it is harmless. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach doctor in the world.—Adv.

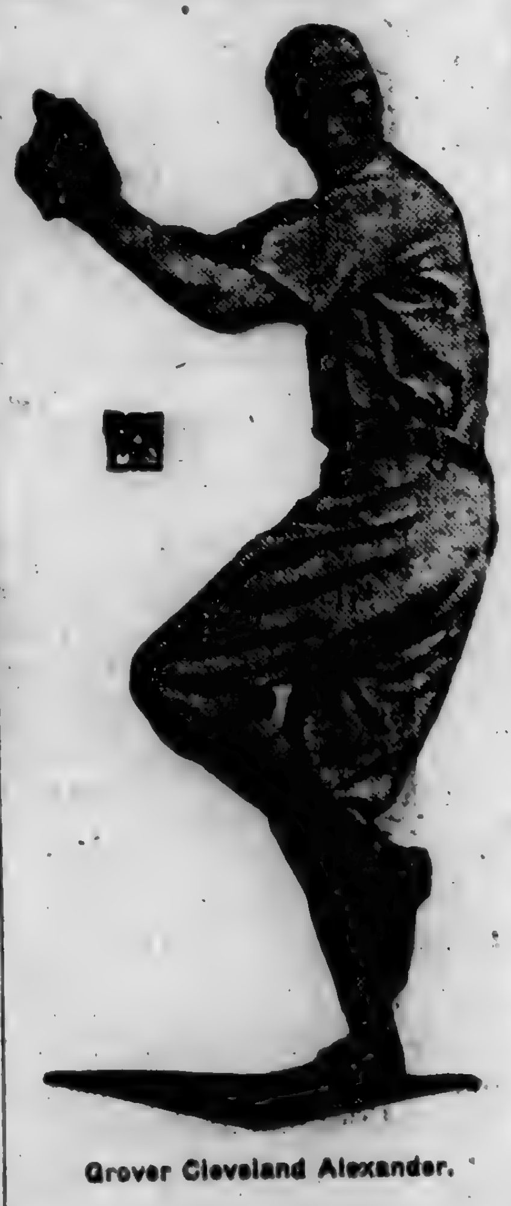
ALEXANDER HARDY PRODUCT OF ROUGH LIFE ON PLAINS

Great Pitcher of the Phillies Probably Owes His Wonderful Physique to Boyhood Work on the Farm.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, who this season, as for several years past, has been the mainstay of the Philadelphia National league's pitching staff, is a product of the western plains. He was born in St. Paul, Neb., February 26, 1887, of a Democratic family, both politically, as his name would indicate, and otherwise.



Grover Cleveland Alexander.

His parents were "settlers" in Nebraska during the Indian times, and "Alex" was born in a hut, miles and miles from nowhere. His early existence was one of hardship, he being of a race which could not shirk work of the hardest kind. Probably his wonderful physique was built by his boyhood work, but at any rate when "Alex" first thought of baseball it was as a means of providing a vacation, not a living. In 1909 he heard of a chance to pitch for a professional club in Galesburg, Ill., and being offered enough to pay his expenses and have a little over, he accepted. This provided his start in the national pastime, and began the career of the man who now is ranked the premier pitcher of the country, and the reason pro and con for the success of the Phillies. He was drafted from Galesburg by Indianapolis in the autumn of 1909, but unfortunately for this club he was not even tried out, being shipped to Syracuse, of the New York State league, which team sold him, Alexander, the greatest pitcher, to the Phillies in 1910 for $750. Somebody in Syracuse has been kicking himself ever since, for the first year with the Phillies Alexander won 28 games, and since then has been considered far the most valuable man in the club.

Motortruck in Warfare.

Motortrucks equipped with searchlights have played an important role in the world war. They have multiplied in number until now hundreds are employed by each of the warring nations.

A Prayer.

For the sense of internationalism possessing so many thoughtful minds, for the realization that no nation liveth for or by itself, for the vision of a federated world in all parts of which there shall be substituted for the mailed fist the hand of a brother, let us give thanks.

For God "our help in ages past, our hope for years to come," for Jesus Christ, the pivot of human history, the sure and sufficient revelation of the Father, forever the Master and the Savior of mankind, let us give thanks.

Come all ye faithful people, enter into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise. Be thankful unto him and bless his name, for Jehovah is a great God and his loving kindness endureth forever.—Exchange.

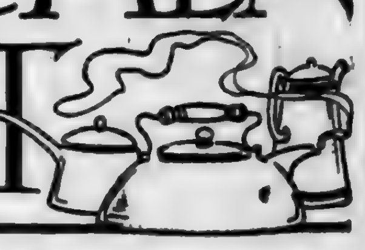
The KITCHEN CABINET



There is no true work ever done without enthusiasm. The artist whose heart is cold is a mere artisan. With no wide reaching affection and no uplifting ideal we make life a treadmill and of our duty an unwelcome drudgery.—Philip Moxom.

MORE MILK DISHES.

For economy let us use more milk, it is a valuable food and one quart even at 15 cents has as much nutrition as three-quarters of a pound of beefsteak which has a large amount of waste. Milk is without waste, therefore a most economical food. If skim milk is used largely, when setting the sponge for bread, the product will be more highly nutritious, less shortening is used and a tasty loaf will result.

Potato Soup.—Cook and mash three medium-sized potatoes. In a quart of milk, skim milk may be used, add a slice of onion and a stalk of celery; scald and remove the vegetables, pour over the mashed potato. In a saucepan put two tablespoonfuls of butter, if the milk is skimmed, one if whole milk is used; add two tablespoonfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of salt, and when well blended add a little cold milk and pour it into the soup. Boil up and serve piping hot with toasted crackers.

Cream of Tomato Soup.—In a saucepan melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three and a half tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until smooth, add a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of chopped onion, then add a pint of canned tomatoes, mixing well. Add soda and onion, return to the fire after straining and pour this mixture, slightly cooled into a cupful and a half of milk. Reheat and serve hot. Do not boil or the soup will curdle.

Cheese Soup.—Scald a quart of milk, add a slice of onion, a blade of mace, and a pepper pod. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add the same amount of flour, when well blended add the milk, removing the seasonings, and cook until creamy. Just before serving add a half cupful of grated cheese, two egg yolks, well beaten, salt and pepper to taste, stir until the cheese is melted. Serve at once.

The cream soups which are so nourishing and which are made of various vegetables may all be made with skim milk, adding a little more butter to the flour for the binding, thus giving the food its right balance of fat.

The home-maker must fill many niches in her home and at the same time have the ability to direct with force and initiative all the business of the household.

GOOD EATING.

Bananas are like the poor, always with us, and the many ways that this wholesome fruit may be served is legion.

Banana Pie. — Rice enough peeled bananas to fill a cup. To this add half a cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of molasses or the grated rind and juice of half a lemon, half a teaspoonful of salt, one beaten egg, one-third of a teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a cupful of milk, and a third of a cupful of cream. Mix all together thoroughly and bake until firm in a pie plate lined with pastry.

Nougatine Cake.—Make a fine, light butter cake and bake in a shallow pan about three-quarters of an inch thick when done. Cut this into squares and cover both top and sides with a creamy thick chocolate frosting, filled with minced and browned almonds. The nuts are ground fine and then browned and sprinkled thick into the frosting.

Mexican Rabbit.—Melt a tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan, add half a pound of American cheese, cut up in fine bits; stir until the cheese melts, add three-fourths of a cupful of cornmeal and a large red pepper, cut in squares or shreds; then add the yolks or two eggs, beaten, and mixed with half a cupful of thick tomato puree, half a teaspoonful of salt, and half a teaspoonful of paprika; stir constantly until the mixture is thick and smooth. Have ready four slices of toasted bread, toasted on one side only. Cut a clove of garlic in halves and touch the untoasted side of the hot bread here and there with the garlic; pour over the rabbit and serve at once. A carefully poached egg may be set above each slice, which will furnish a hearty meal.

Graham Bread.—Make a soft sponge of one cupful of warm milk, one teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of butter, one-third of a yeast cake, dissolved in a fourth of a cupful of warm water, and white flour to make a thick batter. Cut the dough with a knife after beating it well and letting it stand overnight, then add three-fourths of a cupful of milk, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, a half teaspoonful of soda and graham flour to make a thick batter. Knead with white flour; let rise, and when double its bulk, bake 45 minutes.

Peas in Potato Cups.—Make small cups of mashed potato, brush with egg and brown, fill with creamed peas and serve at once.

It is a good and safe rule to sojourn in every place as if you meant to spend your life there, never omitting an opportunity of doing a kindness, or speaking a true word, or making a friend.—John Ruskin.

GOOD SANDWICH FILLINGS.

Peanut butter mixed with whipped cream is a filling well liked by those who enjoy peanut butter.

Ripe Olive Sandwiches.—Chop a half-cupful of ripe olives with one sweet, green pepper, combine with cream cheese which has been moistened with French dressing.

Sweet Sandwiches.—Chop a half-cupful of raisins, one cupful of walnuts, a fourth of a cupful of grated coconut and a tablespoonful of grated chocolate; mix with thick, sweet cream.

Green olives chopped fine and mixed with mayonnaise. Figs and nuts or nuts and dates, finely chopped and mixed. Nuts and raisins, chopped fine.

Orange marmalade, jelly, grated maple sugar with browned almonds, finely chopped. Equal parts of grated Swiss cheese and nuts, chopped. Dutch cheese mixed with chopped olives.

Finely-chopped celery with mayonnaise.

Ham mixed with chopped pickle and celery. Equal parts of ham, celery and mayonnaise. Cold roast chicken, roast beef, or cooked oysters, chopped fine.

Lettuce leaves and mayonnaise. Cream cheese, French dressing, and lettuce.

One cupful of cold roast chicken, three olives, one pickle, a tablespoonful of capers, all minced fine and mixed with mayonnaise.

Hard-cooked eggs and watercress, finely chopped, mixed with softened butter.

Maraschino cherries and nut meats, chopped fine. Cottage cheese and cherries.

Cream cheese and bar-le-duc mixed to a cream. Quince jelly and walnut meats, chopped. Cream cheese, chives and chopped green peppers.

Grated cheese, seasoned with salt, pepper, mustard and anchovy paste. Cheese with chopped olives and pickles added.

A home based on right principles will be simple. No ostentation or living beyond one's means; simplicity in entertainment, in offering freely of what one has to friends, without apology or explanation.

SOUR CREAM DISHES.

A few tablespoonfuls or half a cupful of sour cream is valuable these days, and should be used with economy.

Sour Cream Salad Dressing.—Whip a cupful of sour cream with a little lemon juice or pineapple juice for flavoring, season with salt, a little sugar and use on fruit or vegetables. When vegetables are used for the salad a bit of red pepper, mustard or worcestershire sauce may be added. Sour cream may be substituted for sweet cream in any salad dressing.

Cottage Cheese.—Pour boiling water over a dish of thick sour milk, which will cook the milk enough so that it may be drained in a sieve. Season with plenty of cream, salt, a dash of red pepper and some melted butter, if there's not enough cream to give it richness. If plenty of boiling water is used, this method makes a tender curd and is quickly made.

Sour Cream Cookies.—Cream a half cupful of butter, add one and a half cupfuls of sugar, a half cupful of sour cream, two eggs, a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the cream; mix well, add flour to roll, sprinkle the top with sugar.

Sour Cream Pie.—This pie is baked with two crusts and is delicious. Take cupful each of sour cream, sugar, raisins and one egg, a tablespoonful of vinegar, a half teaspoonful each of salt, cinnamon and nutmeg, a fourth of a teaspoonful of cloves.

Codfish With Sour-Cream White Sauce.—A white sauce, using sour cream; a cupful and a half for a sauce to serve three or four people is sufficient. Melt a tablespoonful of butter and when bubbling hot stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour and a cupful and a half of sour cream; cook until heated through; add shredded codfish and serve. Delicious with baked potatoes.

An escalloped dish, using codfish, white sauce, made with sour cream, and sliced potatoes, is very appetizing. Butter the dish, put in a layer of the potatoes, then one of white sauce, then a layer of fish, finish with the potatoes and white sauce, with buttered crumbs on top. The potatoes are previously cooked.

TRAINING TODAY'S BOYS AND GIRLS

Inspiration Is a Much Better Leader Than Formula.

MORE THAN RULES NECESSARY

Telling Child Your Parental Precepts Doesn't Help Him to Carry Out Suggestions—He Should Be Interested in Behavior.

By SIDONIE M. GRUENBERG.

IT IS no wonder that mothers become bewildered. There are so many things to keep in mind in order to do the right thing by your children. There are all the rules about bathing and clothing and feeding the dears; there are all the rules about toys and exercise and play, and there are all the rules about punishment and manners and keeping your temper. It is all very distracting.

The trouble with many of us is that we try so desperately to get the rules. And the danger is that we often get no more than the rules. With all the new ideas and suggestions crowding upon us, the conscientious mothers seek the earliest opportunity to apply the new methods. But in too many cases we remember the formulas and repeat them as we think aloud about a new situation.

"David," said one of these conscientious but bewildered mothers, "it is very important for you to acquire habits of punctuality. So do not linger on the way to school." Of course, we know what she meant and that she meant well. But she was still too conscious of a remote purpose in the child's character to translate this purpose into the most effective conduct. So far as the child is concerned, he needs merely to be impressed with the importance of coming to school on time and not with the importance of his "habits of punctuality." He needs merely to be assisted in forming the desired habits and not worried about his moral salvation. When the mother's purpose has become thoroughly assimilated her attention will be upon the things to do and not upon the things to say.

The problem for the mother thus becomes one of assimilating valuable ideas until they become parts of her habitual attitude, instead of being remembered rules or mechanical tricks.

Cousin Elsie was not able to button her gaiters herself, and Cousin Effie—several months younger and barely four—marvelled the feat. "Mother," she observed, "I thought all little girls learn to button in the Montessori." Which advertised not only the fact that she was in the Montessori class, but also the further fact that her mother talked about the matter in the presence of the child. The child was no doubt learning a great many useful things in this class. But in addition she was learning—from her mother—a great many formulas about what children should and should not be taught.

"All Little Girls Learn to Button in the Montessori."

There is no use making the child conscious of your purpose in the various problems of his development that you have undertaken to solve. Nor need he be instructed in the various devices that you plan to use in his upbringing. It is enough that you use suggestion and good example, that you moderate your voice to suit the occasion and manifest indignation at the right time. But the child should be concerned only with the results, not the mechanism.

You encourage the children to play. There are many good reasons why you should. But you do not use any of these reasons as part of the inducement. You do not say, for example, "Girls, I wish you would go skating this afternoon. The doctor said that skating is very healthful exercise. Margaret especially needs to exercise her large muscles more." Nor do you expect the children to justify their indulgence in terms of an ulterior moral or physical benefit.

Just picture to yourself a group of children rehearsing for some performance planned to celebrate the Shakespearean tercentenary. The youthful Hamlet soliloquizes: "I am very glad I was given an opportunity to take part in this celebration. It will do me good. I shall learn not only the moral virtues that come from effective teamwork; I shall acquire also a keener realization of the larger social significance of the great servant, noblesse oblige. The time and energy are amply compens." He is overheard by Rosalind, who interrupts to remind him, "And don't forget the inestimable benefit that comes from the stimulation of the imagination." But Jacques, entering gayly, feels the chill solemnity of the atmosphere and calls out somewhat tentatively: "Aren't we having a bully time?"

How absurd that would be! If you asked the children beforehand they could give you a dozen good reasons for taking part in plays and games, and they would never think of Hamlet's reasons, or Rosalind's. And if you put these thoughts into their heads you are doing much to cultivate a morbid self-consciousness. But what is exactly what many parents—and many teachers, too, alas—do with their substitution of good assortments of words for opportunity and inspiration.

The excellent work in the organization of boys and girls for wholesome outdoor life and nature study is vitiated to a degree by the disregard of the child's nature that shows itself in such priggish mottoes as "One kind deed each day" and "Be happy." Any boy who would actually check off his day's adventures in search of the kind deed would be an intolerable companion for a person who still valued spontaneity. "Training" through such a precept is just as likely to make the child rush to the assistance of the b[illegible]d man in the morning in order to get the kind deed out of the way, leaving the rest of the day for the enjoyment of life.

We wish the children to be kind, to be happy, to be healthy, to be brave and several other things. But the kindness and happiness and the other desirable traits are to be the by-products of healthy living, friendly associations, inspiring leadership; they are not to be ready-to-wear garments of wise words.

In Search of "One Kind Deed Each Day."

We who have the responsibility for the upbringing of children cannot see our standards too high. But to the extent that our training consists of formulas and precepts and admonitions, instead of insight and sympathy and guidance, we are but half-baked leaders.

Had Observed It.

There had been a brilliant company at the home of a society leader—a woman whose husband, while a very worthy man, was noted rather for his wealth than for his mental attainments.

"Well, John," she said after the last visitor had gone and they had sat down to talk it over, "it was a complete success, wasn't it?"

"Yes," replied the husband.

"Did you notice Professor Muchman?"

"He was the man with the bandage round his neck, wasn't he?"

"Yes. You heard him talk, didn't you?"

"Oh, yes! I heard him."

"What an astonishing vocabulary he has!"

"Well, that may be what it is," said John, doubtfully, "but from the way he held his head I should judge it was a carbuncle."

Tarantula Hawk Man's Friend.

Tarantulas prefer loose, stony ground for their habitat. The foolish creatures come out for a stroll just before the sunset hours, at the very time when the tarantula hawk, or killer, is out looking for them. The vicious wasp is quite sure to find them and, although the fight may be long and the tarantula may make a tenacious defense, the wasp's lance will finally pierce and stupefy the tarantula, whose body will retain warmth during the required number of days required for the incubation of the eggs which the wasp will deposit in her victim. When the grubs of the baby tarantula hawks appear, the ungracious little things will immediately proceed to devour the warm husk that gives them protection and life, thus fulfilling their destiny and incidentally protecting the dwellers on the border.

Impious Act Punished.

A gruesome story of a century ago is told of an occurrence in one of the vaults beneath Westminster abbey. A member of a party of revelers engaged, on a wager, to enter the vaults at midnight, and in proof of his having done so, to stick a fork in a coffin that had recently been deposited there. He accomplished his object and was return triumphantly, when he felt himself suddenly caught. He was so overcome with terror that he fell in a swoon and was so found shortly afterward on the floor of the vault by his companions, who, alarmed at his long absence, had come to look for him. The fork which he had stuck into the coffin had caught hold of his long cloak and given him a fit of terror that nearly proved fatal.

Savage Japanese Dogs.

The average native dog of Japan has a savage, wolfish aspect, with flat head, pointed muzzle and short, erect ears, with bushy, foxlike tail. They are bold and obstinate in disposition and never know when they are beaten. A Japanese once gave a live dog to his pet tiger as a treat. But the animal, realizing the situation before the tiger did, seized the tiger by the throat and choked it to death before it could defend itself, though the dog also died from its wounds. The Japanese dog is thus far famed for its unexampled ferocity and tenacity of grip, something like the western bulldog.—Japan Magazine.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 7

JESUS THE LIGHT AND LIFE OF MEN.

The studies for the first six months of this year are devoted to the gospel of John; the remaining portion of the year to II Kings, Ezra and Nehemiah, being a study with the prophets. One year from now we begin the new "graded uniform lessons" recently adopted by the reorganized International Lesson committee.

John was younger than his brother, James, and lived to be the oldest of the apostles, dying somewhere between A. D. 95 and 98. His name means "Peace," though he is surnamed the "son of thunder" (Mark 3:17). Five of the New Testament books bear his name. He blended the gentleness of a dove with the force and vision of an eagle." The purpose of his gospel is clearly stated (ch. 20:31). Only about 8 per cent of it is found in the other three gospels. Seventy-six times the word "witness" is used. The word "father" occurs 140 times and the name "Jesus" 240 times.

I. The Word (vv. 1-5). Words utter thoughts; a word is an expression of an inaudible and invisible thing. As the Word, Christ is Creator (ch. 14:9; 8:19), he is the source of light. "The word is God heard; the life is God felt, and the light is God seen"—Moody. This eternally existing person is called the Word because in him God fully expresses or reveals himself. The Bible is the written word because in it God speaks and reveals himself through this person who is the eternal Word (Heb. 1:3). The first verse brings out the fact that there are at least two persons in the Godhead, the one divine person in company with whom the word was, and the word, himself, was God; that is, was also a divine person. He who by his incarnation became our brother and our savior was first our creator and the creator of all things, and apart from him not anything came into existence. The Word did not become the light of men by his incarnation in Jesus of Nazareth. He was ever the Light of Men. The light that shone in the Old Testament time shone from him. When sin came, night came.

II. The Witness (vv. 6-10). John the Baptizer came for a witness. He was not the light. Some might have thought him to be the promised Messiah. This he denied. He was a lamp which held forth light to men concerning the true light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." He reflected light (v. 8). John told all that he knew. Testimony will expand as experience enlarges. The spoken word of man must confirm the experience of the word in our lives. John was a wonderful man, a man whom God delighted to honor, but he was a man. Men are not asked to believe blindly, but always upon an abundance of testimony.

III. The World (vv. 11-14). This world was created by Jesus, and throughout its existence he has been in the world, though the world knew him not. This living light had been coming into the world, and was not fully come until he was manifest to Israel at the baptismal act of John. In order to be made manifest the "Word was made flesh" in the person of Jesus. The world did not apprehend the light (v. 5) nor did the world which he was in and which was made by him (v. 10). Even his own people, literally his own household servants, i. e. Israel, received him not to themselves, but whoever receives him, even the vilest sinner of earth, and takes him into his heart to be all Jesus desired to be, savior, lord, teacher, friend, that instant he becomes a child of God. We cannot attempt to explain this mystery. The union of spirit and body was in one person, a sample fact; though unexplained, still true. The union of God with a human body, forming one person, Christ Jesus, sometimes spoken of separately, sometimes as a whole, sometimes as divine, sometimes as human. We cannot divide his activities into two sections and say this is divine and this is human; they are inexplicably blended into one. This Christ really dwelt among us. He did not merely appear to some persons, or come in a vision, and yet his abode among us was only temporary, only a few years, and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten Son. The world expected a Messiah and his own creation, his own inheritance received him not, rejected him, opposed him, crucified him, their lord, savior, king and messiah. Those who received him and believed on his name became sons.

To be a child of God we must be born into the nature and character of God, into his spiritual life. We are members of his family.

We are heirs of all things through him, his joy, his love, his character and his blessing and the privileges of working for him and with him. We become heirs by being born of God, not of blood, physical descent nor inheritance, for the best of parents cannot bestow this gift upon their children.

Not by our own efforts or exertions nor the will of the flesh, not by the will of men, through wisdom and man's highest powers of intellect, but of God.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRU

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.—Adv.

Guessed Wrong.

Two sober citizens met on a street in Babylon.

"You and I will live to see the day when this dancing craze will end," said the first sober citizen.

"I don't doubt it," answered the second sober citizen. "The world will soon outgrow such madness."

And that was 2716 years before the Castles took New York by storm.

OF INTEREST TO MOTHERS

The cost of food today is a serious matter to all of you. To cut down your food bills and at the same time improve the health of your family, serve them Skinner's Macaroni and Spaghetti two or three times per week. Children love it and thrive on it. It is the best possible food for adults. Write the Skinner Mfg. Co., Omaha, Nebr., for beautiful cook book telling how to serve it in a hundred ways. It's free to every mother.—Adv.

Frenzied Finance.

He was a newcomer in the city and had just reveled in one of its thrills.

"It happened right near the mouth of an alley," he told the other fellows at the bar. "I'm from a little town, and nobody ever held me up there. But I got a right good start in new sensations here. Just as I passed the alley some fellow threw his arms around my arms and held. Another man slapped one hand over my mouth. He used the other to go through my clothes. First he got my Ingersoll, and then he got about one dollar and ninety cents in silver."

"'Where's yer froghides?' he asked.

"'My what?' says I.

"'Yer froghides,' he says.

"'What's them?' says I.

"'Greenbacks,' says he.

"And then I knowed what he meant. But I didn't have none."

But She'd Heard of Them.

Humors of a piano studio are related to us by Clarice Balas, the Cleveland pianist, who writes: "One young girl who charged all she forgot to the neglect of her former teacher in the few words: 'He never told me anything about that,' was provoking me by her poor reading and bad time. 'What kind of notes have you in the right hand here?' I asked.

"She guessed wrong immediately. 'I suppose you never heard of such a thing as triplets?' I asked, in thorough disgust.

"'Why, yes, Miss Balas, I have heard of triplets,' said she with offended dignity, 'but not in music.'"

LADIES! LOOK YOUNG, DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Use the Old-time Sage Tea and Sulphur and Nobody will Know.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

STATE CHARITIES BOARD REPORTS

Urges Better Provision for Mental Defectives in Recommendations to Legislature.

FAVORS THE COLONY PLAN

Declares Increasing Number of Weak-Minded Constitutes a Problem, the Seriousness of Which Is Not Fully Comprehended.

Indianapolis.—The board of state charities has made public its biennial recommendations to the legislature. The general assembly uses the recommendations of the state board usually as a guide for laws to relieve conditions in the institutional life of the state, and to keep Indiana in the march of progress of the states in an institutional and charitable way.

The board's first recommendation is for legislation providing "adequate care" and "prevention as well" for mental defectives.

"The increasing number of mental defectives constitutes a problem, the seriousness of which is not fully comprehended," the report said. "Many unfortunates who should be under state care for their own sake and for the protection of society, are necessarily refused admission to the already crowded institutions. The situation demands the adoption of a policy for the future, looking not only to adequate care, but, to prevention as well. We recommend such action by the next general assembly."

The board then points out that the five hospitals for the insane in Indiana are crowded, and it is impossible to classify the patients. The possible recovery of the curably insane thus is retarded, and chronic insanity cannot have the proper treatment of outdoor life and employment. County jails and poor asylums also are caring for mentally deranged persons in surroundings "which tend to aggravate, rather than allay, their malady."

A system should be worked out which will "include the early recognition of incipient mental and nervous diseases, immediate special treatment for those acutely insane, as well as for selected groups of others," the report says.

"There should be no enlargement of the existing hospitals, nor should another hospital be built. We believe that the colony plan, which contemplates the purchase of one or more farms a little distance from the hospital, yet near enough to be under its supervision and care, offers a feasible method of providing immediate relief. A beginning has been made in the purchase of a colony farm near the eastern hospital, at Richmond.

"We recommend that the legislature take steps looking to similar colonies at the other hospitals. The Central hospital at Indianapolis needs a receiving hospital. A psychopathic institute, similar to those in Boston and Philadelphia would be a valuable aid. It should be located in the central part of the state, preferably at the Robert W. Long hospital."

The state's provision for the feebleminded falls far short of meeting the needs, the report says. There is urgent need of further state control, the board declares, since feeble-mindedness largely is hereditary.

The board's recommendations for the epileptics of the state follow the lines of the 1914 recommendations. They are to the effect that the growth of the epileptic village at Newcastle should be slow and natural, and should carry out the village idea with plain, substantial and inexpensive buildings. The hopeful cases should be received at the village first, the report says.

There are grave objections to the "present scattered system of caring for" dependent children, the board points out.

"We believe Indiana should profit by the experience of states which have given the central institution a thorough test, and have found it better for the children and less expensive for the state," the recommendation says. "The legislature of 1913 wisely authorized the establishment of a state receiving home for children who are public wards, but made no appropriation for it. We recommend that such an appropriation be made. Provision should be made at the Robert W. Long hospital for the care of deformed and crippled children."

The board also declares in favor of legislation "to prevent the abandonment of parents by children who are able to support them." Time after time such cases are reported to the board, it is pointed out.

The board reiterates its belief in a system in which the boards of trustees of state institutions should be unpaid.

"Many persons will accept such positions as an honor, and they will be as faithful as if paid for what they do. The small compensation now allowed is not an attraction to those who would be glad to render service for its own sake. It is attractive, however, to many who will accept such positions for the small salaries paid. We feel it would be better for the institutions and for the state if the board members were paid only their actual expenses."

The legislature, however, should increase the allowance for expenses of institution trustees, since in many instances trustees who must travel long distances do not receive adequate expenses, the board said.

The laws governing the state tuberculosis hospital should be made uniform with the laws under which the other state institutions are governed, the board said.

Nepotism in state institutions is assailed by the board. No relatives of members of the boards of trustees should be appointed to serve in the institutions, the report said. No member of a board of trustees should be eligible to appointment to any position in the institution during his term as trustee, or for one year thereafter, the recommendations prescribe.

The state superintendent of public instruction should have authority over all the educational departments in state institutions.

More state institutions than now do should employ field workers to supervise their paroled or placed-out wards. The legislative appropriations for maintenance should include money for such work.

The board expresses the hope that, in view of the successful operation of the new state farm, "facilities will be afforded for a wider use of the farm colony plan for caring for offenders by the state."

Changes in the existing laws to remove all women prisoners from county jails is advocated. The correctional department of the woman's prison should be enlarged to receive these women, it is declared.

The application of the indeterminate sentence laws should cover the state farm and the woman's prison correctional department, the board said, and the legislature should increase the maintenance appropriations at these places to such an extent that proper parole agents may be employed.

Provisions in the law whereby judges of circuit and criminal courts would visit state institutions from time to time, also are advocated.

As to prison labor the recommendations say:

"With the approaching end under the law of the contracts in the state prison, and the expiration of the trade school arrangement at the reformatory, we have before us the prospect of a very serious condition, that of idle prisoners—and we are faced with the necessity of making some provision for their employment. We know of no more perplexing question than that of prison labor. We disapprove of the old contract system. Something must be done. Some authority should be given to investigate what is being done elsewhere, and to determine what policy shall be adopted and what program followed for utilizing the labor of prisoners in this state. In connection with this there ought also to be taken into account the question of compensation of prisoners, so that their needy families shall not suffer."

The clause of the contributory delinquency law, which applies to girls less than seventeen years old, should be amended to include the provisions of the law of 1913, under which the jurisdiction of the juvenile court is extended to delinquent girls less than eighteen years old, the report says.

The jails of the state should be maintained on the same basis as the county poor asylums, and the fee system for boarding jail inmates should be abolished, the board said.

The overseers of the poor in the larger townships of the state, and in the large cities, should have trained and qualified assistants to aid them in poor relief work, the board declares.

Revision of the "settlement law's" provisions, to include certain groups of public wards, such as the insane, epileptic, feeble-minded and perhaps others, is advocated.

The deportation of nonresidents who become public charges also is advocated. Such a law should contain a provision to accept persons deported from other states because of their legal residence in Indiana, the board's recommendations say.

GETS BIG LIFE INCOME

Edward B. McLean, son of the late John R. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post and the Cincinnati Enquirer, has effected a compromise with the executors of the McLean estate by which he is to receive the entire income of between $700,000 and $1,000,000 a year for the rest of his life. The income is considerably augmented now by war conditions. Mr. McLean will also control both his newspapers.

Comparing Expressions.

"Did you see the pleased expression on Mrs. Brown's face when I told her she didn't look any older than her daughter?" said Mr. Radway after the reception.

"No," said Mrs. Radway. "I was looking at the expression on her daughter's face."

WEDS IN UNDERTAKER'S SHOP

Beautifully Furnished Chapel at Anderson Is the Scene of a Wedding —Bride Not a Bit Worried; Bridegroom at Home.

Anderson.—A beautifully furnished undertaker's chapel was the scene of the wedding here of Aminda Rolen and Chester Lawson. The bride was not a bit worried and it was like home to Lawson, who formerly worked in the establishment.

Indianapolis.—At a recent meeting of the Indiana Historical commission, held at the statehouse, the following resolution was adopted: "Whereas, The state park centennial memorial committee in its efforts to purchase the McCormick's creek canyon and the Turkey Run sites for state parks, has received subscriptions approximating $30,000; and, whereas, an additional sum of $17,000 is yet required to purchase these two sites; be it resolved that the Indiana Historical commission indorse the efforts of the state park centennial memorial committee, and urge the people of the state to make contributions to this fund at once. Special request is made upon the newspapers of the state to open subscription funds in their offices and give publicity to the need of raising the additional sum." The following motion was also unanimously passed at the same meeting of the commission: "It was the unanimous expression of the members present that the Indiana Historical commission should encourage in every way possible the securing of the old capitol building at Corydon by the state for a permanent state memorial."

Culver.—The Wyoming system of military instruction in the high schools will be introduced in Indiana under the direction of Capt. E. Z. Steever, U. S. A., it was announced here. His headquarters will be here and his territory will include the central states. The Wyoming plan is an elective system, each boy who wishes to take the training being provided with a rifle by the government. Credit toward graduation is given for the work.

Hammond. — Longing to spend Christmas at home put Frank Peyton in the custody of detectives after he had eluded arrest on the charge of killing Mrs. Alma Smart, manager of a Hammond hotel, because she bestowed her affections elsewhere. Chief of Police Austgen guessed that Peyton would go to his home in Meridian, Miss., for Christmas. He was notified that Peyton had been placed under arrest.

Crawfordsville.—Mark P. Helm, principal of the Union high school here, has resigned to become managing editor of the Educator Journal at Indianapolis. Frank McGeath, principal of the Wilson graded school here, has been chosen to succeed Helm and Floyd D. Welch, principal of the schools at Linden, will succeed McGeath. Helm is a graduate of Indiana university. McGeath and Welch both are Wabash graduates.

Indianapolis.—The beautiful clubhouse of the Indianapolis Cane club, situated on White river, northwest of the city, burned to the ground. With the building $1,500 worth of champagne—the New Year's eve stock—exploded with a loud noise. The total loss was $50,000. The building was supposed to be fireproof, but it burned like tinder. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Indianapolis.—A railroad train and a good portion of the fire department aided in the rescue of seven men from the warehouse of the Central Supply company. The train crew, seeing the plight of the men in the smoke-filled building, backed freight cars up to the building and firemen put up ladders. The fire loss was not heavy.

Rushville.—Earl W. Albright pleaded guilty in circuit court to charges of gaming and keeping a gambling house and was fined $15 and costs. He was indicted by the grand jury, which returned 45 true bills.

Rochester. — Mrs. Roy Duncan, daughter of John Toner of this city, was killed in an automobile accident in Chicago, when on her way to a train to come to her parents' home here for Christmas.

Richmond.—Despondent because of sickness, Harmon Fraze, thirty-six, hanged himself with a chain in a shed at his home. His widow and three children survive.

Winchester.—Mrs. Elisha Graham of Farmland suffered severe burns about the head and face when a celluloid hair comb caught fire when she was near a stove.

Marion.—James Deam, sixty-five, a watchman for the Clover Leaf Railway company, was killed by a switch engine when at his work.

Indianapolis—Sixteen saloonkeepers appealed to the circuit court against the ruling of the commissioners that a remonstrance in the Fourth ward is valid and that they close their doors at midnight. The licenses of these saloons expired pending the decision on the remonstrance. Twenty-one other saloonkeepers will close their saloons later if the remonstrance is upheld.

Indianapolis. — Although business generally boomed before Christmas, the marriage license business showed a decline of 50 per cent, the marriage license bureau announced. "Too much H. C. of L." was the reason given.

The Destroying Angel

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

AUTHOR OF "THE POOL OF FLAME," "THE BRONZE BELL," "THE BLACK BAG," "THE BRASS BOWL."

COPYRIGHT BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Suppose that you, aroused tonight by the stealthy presence of a masked prowler in your bedroom, covered him with your pistol just as he was about to plunge a long knife between your ribs—and discovered he was an old friend. Would you turn him over to the police and prosecute him, or would you assume he was crazy and have him sent to an asylum? Perhaps you will find an answer to such a problem in this installment.

Previous installments told how Hugh Whitaker, thinking he was about to die, married an innocent girl to save her honor, and left the country immediately. Five years later he returned to New York, healthy and wealthy, and found the wife, now a famous actress known as Sara Law, engaged to marry Drummond, his old friend. She disappeared. Drummond supposedly committed suicide, as her previous lovers had done. Whitaker was assaulted in the dark, and while recuperating at the country home of his friend, Martin Ember, discovered spies, fought them, and was helped by a charming and mysterious young lady living nearby.

Ember pushed back his chair and, rising, strolled to the door. "Moonrise and a fine, clear night," he said, staring through the wire mesh of the screen. "Wish you were well enough to go riding with me. However, you won't be laid up long, I fancy. And I'll be back day after tomorrow. Now I must cut along."

And within ten minutes Whitaker heard the motor car rumble off on the woodland road. He wasn't altogether sorry to be left to his own society, but in spite of his half-hearted perturbation and dissatisfaction, the weariness of a long, full day was so heavy upon him that he went to sleep almost before Sum Fat had finished making him comfortable.

Extinguishing the candle, the Chinaman, moving with the silent assurance of a cat in the dark, closed and latched the shutters, then sat down just outside the living-room door, to wait and watch, sleeplessly alert.

An hour passed in silence, and another, and yet another. Sum Fat sat moveless in the shadow, which blended so perfectly with his dark blue silk garments as to render him almost indistinguishable—a figure as patient and imperturbable as any bland, stout, graven god of his religion. But in time there fell upon his ears another sound, to which he stirred, if imperceptibly—drawing himself together, tensing and flexing his tired muscles while his eyes shifted quickly from one quarter to another of the darkened living room and the still more dark bedchamber.

And yet apparently all that had roused him was the droway whistle of a whippoorwill.

Then, with no other presage, a shadow flitted past one of the side windows, and in another reappeared more substantially on the veranda. Sum Fat grew altogether tense, his gaze fixed and exclusively focused upon that apparition.

Cautiously, noiselessly, edging inch by inch across the veranda, the man approached the door. It was open. A full, long minute elapsed. Even Sum Fat held his breath throughout that interminable reconnoissance.

At length, reassured, the man slipped into the room. Another minute: no sound detectable more untoward than that of steady respiration in the bedroom; with a movement as swift and sinister as the swoop of a vulture, the man sprang toward the bedroom door.

Leaping from a sitting position, with a bound that was little less than a flight through the air, the Chinaman caught him halfway. There followed a shriek, a heavy fall that shook the bungalow, the report of a revolver, sounds of scuffling . . .

Whitaker, half dazed, found himself standing in the doorway, regardless of his injury.

He saw, as one who dreams and yet is conscious that he does but dream, Ember lighting candles—calmly applying the flame of a taper to one after another as he made a round of the sconces. Sum Fat was kneeling on all fours, above something that breathed heavily and struggled without avail.

Whitaker's sleep-numbed faculties cleared.

"Ember!" he cried. "What in the name of all things strange—"

Ember threw him a flickering smile. "Oh, there you are?" he said cheerfully, "I've got something interesting to show you. Sum Fat"—he stooped and picked up a revolver—"you may let him up now, if you think he's safe."

"Safe enough." Sum Fat rose, grinning. "Had plenty."

He mounted guard beside the door.

For an instant his captive seemed reluctant to rise. Ember moved to his side and stood over him, balancing the revolver in his palm.

"Come," he said impatiently. "Up with you!"

The man sat up as if galvanized by fear, got more slowly to his knees, then, grasping the edge of the table, dragged himself laboriously to a standing position.

Whitaker's jaw dropped and his eyes widened with wonder and pity. He couldn't deny the man, yet he found it hard to believe that this quivering, shaken creature, with his lean, and pasty face and desperate, glaring eyes, this man in rough, stained, soiled and shapeless garments, could be identical with the well-set-up, prosperous and confident man of affairs he remembered as Drummond. And yet they were one. Appalling to contemplate the swift, devastating course of moral degeneration, that had spread like gangrene through all the man's physical and mental fiber . . .

"Take a good look," Ember advised grimly. "How about that pet myth thing now? What price the astute sleuth—eh? Perhaps you'd like to take a few more funny cracks at my simple faith in hallucinations.

"I had a notion he'd be hanging around," Ember went on; "I thought I saw somebody hiding in the woods this afternoon; and then I was sure I saw him skulking round the edges of the clearing after dinner. So I set Sum Fat to watch, drove back to the village to mislead him, left my car there and walked back. And sure enough—!"

Without comment, Whitaker, unable to stand any longer without discomfort, hobbled to a chair and sat down.

"Well?" Drummond demanded harshly in a quavering snarl. "Now that you've got me, what're you going to do with me?"

There was a high, hysterical accent in his voice that struck unpleasantly on Ember's ear. He cocked his head to one side, studying the man intently.

Drummond flung himself a step away from the table, paused, and again faced his captors with bravado.

"Well?" he cried again. "Well?"

Ember nodded toward Whitaker. "Ask him," he said briefly.

Whitaker shook his head. It was difficult to think how to deal with this trapped animal, so wildly different from the cultivated gentleman he always had in mind when he thought of Drummond. The futility of attempting to deal with him according to any code recognized by men of honor was wretchedly apparent.

"Drummond," he said slowly, "I wish to God you hadn't done this thing."

Drummond laughed discordantly. "Keep your mealy-mouthed compassion for yourself," he retorted, sneering.

Whitaker gave a gesture of despair. "If you'd only been content to keep out of the way . . . ! If only you'd let me alone—"

"Then you let Sara Law alone, d'you hear?"

The interruption was little short of a shriek. Ember motioned to Sum Fat, who quietly drew nearer.

"I swear I don't know what to do or say—"

"Then shut up—"

"That'll be about all," Ember interposed quietly. At a glance from him, Sum Fat closed in swiftly and caught and pinioned Drummond's arms from behind.

A disgusting change took place in Drummond. In an instant he was struggling, screaming, slavering; his face congested, eyes staring, features working wildly as he turned and twisted in his efforts to free himself. Sum Fat held him as he would have held an unruly child. When a break in Drummond's ravings came at length, together with a gradual weakening of the man's struggles, the detective turned to Whitaker.

"Sorry," he said. "I didn't dare take any further chances. He'd have been at your throat in another minute. It isn't as if we had simply an everyday crook to deal with," Ember went on, approaching the man. "He's not to be trusted or reasoned with. He's just short of a raving morphomaniac, or I miss my guess."

With a quick movement he caught Drummond's left arm, pulled the sleeve of his coat back to the elbow, unbuttoned and turned back his cuff. "Hmm—yes," he continued, bending over to inspect the exposed forearm, in spite of Drummond's efforts to twist away. "Deadly work of the busy little needle. Good Lord, he's fairly riddled with punctures!"

"That explains . . ." Whitaker muttered, sickened.

"It explains a lot," Ember readjusted the sleeve and turned away. "And it shows us our path of duty, clear," he continued, despite interruptions from the maddened drug fiend. "I think a nice little sojourn in a sanatorium—what?"

"Right," Whitaker agreed, relieved.

"We'll see what a cure does for him before we indulge in criminal proceedings—shall we?"

"By all means."

"Good." Ember glanced at his watch. "I'll have to hurry along now—must be in town not later than nine o'clock this morning. I'll take him with me. No, don't worry—I can handle him easily. It's a bit of a walk to the village, but that will only help to quiet him down. I'll be back tomorrow; meanwhile, you'll be able to sleep soundly unless—"

He checked, frowning thoughtfully.

"Unless what?"

Ember jerked his head to indicate the prisoner. "Of course, this isn't by any chance the fellow you mixed it up with over on the beach—and so forth?"

"Nothing like him."

"Queer. I can't find any trace of him—the other one—nor can I account for him. He doesn't seem to fit in anywhere. However"—his expression lightened—"I daresay you were right; he's probably only some idle, light-fingered prowler. I'd keep my eyes open for him, but I don't really believe you need worry much.

Within ten minutes he was off on his lonely tramp through two miles of woodland and as many more of little-traveled country, at dead of night, with a madman in handcuffs for sole company.

CHAPTER XII.

Offshore.

"You ask me, I think very excellent quick cure."

Sum Fat tenderly adjusted the canvas brace, and then with infinite care inserted the foot in a high-cut canvas tennis shoe.

He stood up, beaming with benevolent interest. "You take it easy one day or two—no walk much—just loaf—no go see pretty ladies—"

"Go 'way, you heathen—go clean your teeth!" cried Whitaker, indignantly.

"—and I think be all well and sound," concluded Sum Fat.

He waddled away, chuckling. Whitaker got up, and with the aid of a cane made a number of tentative experiments in short-distance pedestrianism. The results were highly satisfactory; he felt little or no pain. On the other hand, he felt the advice to which he had just listened was sound; it would be unwise to attempt a neighborly call within at least another twenty-four hours.

He resumed his chair on the veranda and sighed. It was late afternoon, and he was lonely. He inclined to sulks. The trouble with him was (he began to realize) that he had lived too long a hermit. For six years he had been practically isolated and cut off from the better half of existence; femininity had formed no factor in his cosmos. But now, of a sudden, he had been granted a flash of insight into the true significance of companionship between a man and a woman who had something in common aside from community in their generation. Not two hours altogether of such intercourse had been his, but it had been enough to infuse all his consciousness with a vague but irking discontent.

He had lashed himself into a very respectable transport of resentful rage when, chancing to lift his eyes from their absorbed study of the planks composing the veranda floor, he discovered a motor boat at the landing stage. At once a smile of childlike serenity displaced the scowl

The woman made the little vessel fast and, turning, came swinging up the gentle slope to the veranda, ease and strength and joy of living inherent in every flowing movement.

No imaginable consideration, however selfish, could have kept Whitacre any longer in his chair.

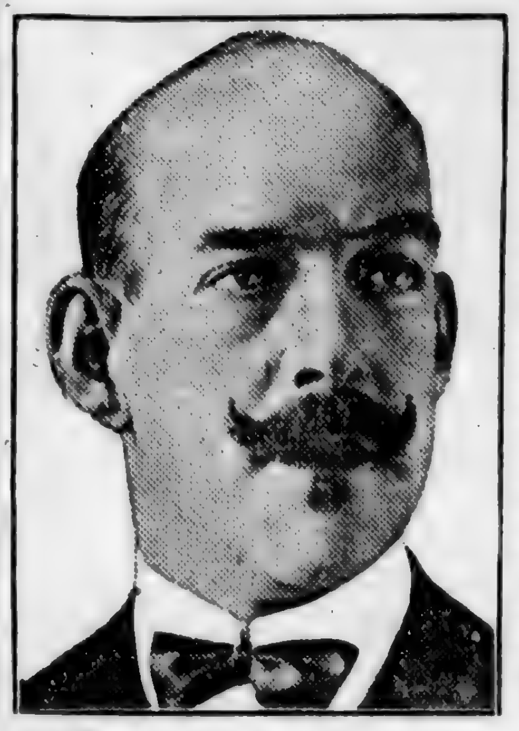
What do you think was Drummond's purpose in killing Whitaker? Is there any connection between Miss Fiske and Drummond?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Bargaining Instinct.

"You took your boy to a circus to reward him for being good?" "Yes. And then he decided it wasn't much of a circus and tried to be bad enough to make sure he wasn't being cheated."

THE HUMAN COCKTAIL



King Constantine is one of the strangest figures of the present upside-down time. Hardly three years ago he was the idolized hero, king of a reborn, united Greece, and now—

King Constantine's character is brusque and stubborn. To a remarkable degree is he void of that superior intelligence and conquering amiability which characterized the late King George, and which helped him lead the little country through many trying and difficult years to robust development, extension and honored position.

From his very childhood the present king, like his queen (the kaiser's sister), has shown a dangerous lack of self-control. His fits of uncontrollable tempests of rage were always a source of concern to his parents, brothers and sisters. And the outburst did not grow less as years passed by—on the contrary.

On the other hand, the king is being praised for his great loyalty, for faithfulness toward friends and for his kindly behavior toward the soldiers he has often led to victory. A handsome and manly appearance, a courageous, energetic general, a man whose unusually hard and sullen face is at times lit up by an almost boyish smile that leaves big dimples in his yellow face.

"His majesty is a sort of human cocktail," remarked an American journalist after an audience with the king.

LABOR'S MAN IN WAR CABINET

Representing labor in Premier Lloyd-George's war cabinet is Arthur Henderson, minister without portfolio, who has risen from the state of an ordinary day worker to this high place.

Arthur Henderson was a Glasgow lad who served his apprenticeship as molder in the great steamship works of Robert Stephenson & Co. at Newcastle. What education he has was obtained at night after his day's work was done. He never had the advantage of an elementary education in schools.

He went into local politics as a young man at Newcastle, was a member of the city council and 12 years ago served as mayor of the little town of Darlington, near Newcastle, which proved a stepping stone that same year to the house of commons. He never touches alcohol and is an active worker in the Wesleyan church. Last year he became secretary of education in Asquith's cabinet. Henderson has the heart and the unpretentious manners of the class into which he was born and as well the instincts of conservative judgment and refinement of taste which make him, on the one hand, personally likable whether with the high or the low, and, on the other hand, extremely susceptible to the subtle appeal of responsibility in political office and of the charm of cultivated society.

SENDS MAILS TO BELLIGERENTS

When the great world war started in August, 1914, it meant a great deal more work for Uncle Sam, postmaster.

It meant that he would have to study over the midnight oil for a long time figuring out how to get the mails delivered safest, quickest, and cheapest, to the belligerent nations. There was a ring of steel about Germany—how would she get her American mail? Holland, the Scandinavian countries, Turkey, all wanted mail, quick and unimpaired.

In the postal service, however, was a man who was trained to take care of emergencies of this character. A quarter of a century of work in Uncle Sam's division of foreign mails had fitted Robert L. Maddox for just such work, and for the last three years he has been amazing the higher postal officials by the efficiency with which mails were dispatched to belligerent countries. Twenty-five years ago Maddox entered the post service as a clerk at $1,000 a year. Today he is superintendent of foreign mails, and has to look after the dispatch of postal matter across the water to the nations battling so vigorously.

Nor is this all he is interested in. He is on a mission to the Isthmus of Panama, to arrange for greater expedition and safety in the handling of mails to South America.

IF

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

S. S. Widney is at Auburn, and Hollis Dilley and wife are guests of John Dilley and family, near Waterloo, this week.

St. Joe and New Haven met in a New Year's game of Basket Ball at New Haven, and the game was well played as the score indicates, 23 to 26 in favor of New Haven. The local team was a pick-up, never having practiced together, and going on a strange floor, we say they did fine. The boys received another trimming on Thursday evening from Spencerville, 19-20, indicating that each team had to work for all they had made. A fine crowd was present and great enthusiasm was manifested. The boys are evenly matched.

Glando Pine is a splendid cough medicine that can be prepared at home at a saving of about $2.00 to the pint. It is pleasant to take and contains no narcotics or habit-forming drugs. It keeps indefinitely. It can be used satisfactorily where any cough remedy is needed. It can be safely given to babies ten days old or adults ninety years of age.

Get three ounces—50 cents worth—of Glando Pine, with full directions for preparing, and you will have a cough remedy that is excelled by none.

For WHOOPING COUGH add an ounce of fluid extract of chestnut leaves.

Mr. A. T. Sharer, the owner of a machine shop at Haviland, Ohio, says: "My son had a severe cough for several years. After doctoring and trying a number of cough remedies, we began to think his case a hopeless one. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. The first bottle relieved him. He continued its use until he was cured. He is now well, and I believe Glando Pine saved his life." For sale by Druggists.

BRYAN AGAINST OWNERSHIP BY THE GOVERNMENT

Gives Newlands Committee His Views on Railroad Control.

COMPETITION PREFERABLE.

Federal Regulation Should Not Be Allowed to Exclude Exercise of State Authority, He Contends—Thinks Railroad Stocks Should Represent Actual Value and Be Stable as Government Bonds.

Washington, Dec. 11.—William J. Bryan, who startled the country ten years ago by advocating government ownership of railroads, appeared before the Newlands Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce last week in support of the claim that the states should be allowed to retain authority over the regulation of all transportation lines within their borders. Mr. Bryan explained that he had long regarded government ownership as inevitable, but only because of railroad opposition to effective regulation.

Against Government Ownership.

"Personally I cannot say that I desire government ownership," he explained, "because I lean to the individual idea rather than to the collective idea; that is, I believe that government ownership is desirable only where competition is impossible."

Alfred P. Thom, counsel to the Railway Executives' Advisory Committee previously had presented before the members of the Newlands Committee as one of his reasons for urging a better balanced and more systematic regulation of railroads the argument that this is the only alternative to government ownership. Calling attention to the restrictions imposed upon the transportation lines by conflicting state laws and regulations, to the practical cessation of new construction and to the impossibility under existing conditions of securing the new capital needed for extensions and betterments of railway facilities, he warned the Congressmen that unless they provided a fair and reasonable system of regulation that would enable the railroads to meet the growing needs of the country's business the national government would be compelled to take over the ownership of the lines with all the evils attendant upon such a system.

Preservation of Competition.

Mr. Bryan, on the other hand, holds that the further extension of federal authority over the railroads would be a step in the direction of government ownership. He advanced the view that the centralization of control in the hands of the national government would impose too great a burden upon the regulating body, would offer strong temptation to railroads to interfere in politics and would encourage the general movement toward centralization of power in the federal government at the expense of the states. He said that he did not object to consolidations of railroad lines so long as they did not destroy competition, that he knew of no complaint against great railway systems because of their size and that he believed that the preservation of competition was the test to be applied to all consolidations.

Regulation of Securities.

Mr. Bryan declared himself in favor of national regulation of railway stock and bond issues, but added that he saw no reason why that should exclude the states from acting on the same subject as to state corporations. "I would like to see the stock of a railroad, as long as it is in private hands, made as substantial and as unvarying as the value of a government bond," he asserted.

He suggested that railroad capitalization be readjusted to equalize it with actual valuation of the property represented, making due allowance for equities, and that when this was done the roads should be allowed to earn sufficient income to keep their stock at par and to create a surplus. The latter, he tentatively proposed, might be allowed to amount to 25 per cent of the capital.

Railway Earnings Low.

This subject of railroad capitalization and the amount of railroad earnings received further attention from the committee during its recent sessions. In answer to questions by Senator Cummins, Mr. Thom submitted figures showing the net earnings of the roads in recent years. These figures show that during the five years from 1905 to 1910 the average net earnings were 5.25 per cent of the net capitalization, while for the five years from 1910 to 1915 the average was only 4.56 per cent. The total earnings on the stock, computed by adding to the net operating income the income from the securities owned and deducting bond interest, were for 1910, 7.09 per cent; for 1911, 6.17 per cent; for 1912, 4.97 per cent; for 1913, 5.94 per cent; for 1914, 4.06 per cent; for 1915, 3.44 per cent, thus showing an almost continuous decrease throughout this six year period. It was announced that Halford Erickson, formerly chairman of the Wisconsin Railroad Commission, would submit more complete information on this subject to the Committee at a later date.

PLAN TO RESUME RAILWAY INQUIRY AFTER MARCH 4TH

Postponement Forced by Press of Congressional Business.

COUNTRY DEMANDS ACTION

Shippers, Investors and Representatives of All Branches of Business Demand Unification of System of Railway Regulation—Roads Ask Fewer Masters.

Washington, Dec. 18.—The Congressional Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has been conducting the inquiry into government regulation and control of transportation, last week decided to suspend its hearings on the subject and adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman, because of the pressure of other work before Congress. According to the resolution creating the committee, it is required to submit a report by January 8th next. It is understood that before that time the committee will ask for an extension of time and that the hearings will be resumed at a later date, when some of those who already have appeared before the committee will be questioned further and a great many others will be heard. It is probable, however, that the hearings will not be resumed until after adjournment of Congress on March 4th. In addition to regular routine business the commerce committees of the two houses are charged with the important duty of preparing and presenting the legislation asked for by President Wilson to make impossible a railroad strike without previous investigation. This will leave little or no time for the consideration of the general questions of railway regulation.

Country Wants Something Done.

Members of Congress and others who are interested in the inquiry undertaken by the Newlands Committee insist that there is no intention of abandoning it.

It seems doubtful, indeed, if the country would permit the matter to be dropped if there were evidence of a desire on the part of Congress to do so. The nation-wide evidences of interest evoked by the initiation of the Newlands inquiry show that the people of the country—shippers, consumers and investors, as well as railway men themselves—are alive to the fact that the railway situation is highly unsatisfactory and that steps must be taken without unnecessary delay to make it possible for the railroads to meet the growing needs of the nation.

From reports received here it seems as though almost every commercial organization and business interest in the country were engaged in studying the railroad question. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has been conducting an elaborate inquiry into various phases of the subject for many months past. Many local and state commercial bodies in every part of the country have committees engaged in study of the problem and have indicated a desire to come here and present their views. National organizations of manufacturers, lumbermen, coal operators, wholesale and retail dealers, have expressed through resolutions their desire for the unification of the system of railway regulation. The National Industrial Traffic League, speaking from the viewpoint of shippers using the railways, has indorsed exclusive federal regulation providing it is accomplished in such a way as to give full protection and prompt adjustment in matters relating to transportation within the states.

Many Interests Studying Problem.

All these organizations represent primarily the shippers of the country, but they are not the only ones who are taking a hand in the discussion. The investors of the nation, through their own associations and through committees representing the savings banks and other financial organizations, are preparing to show the necessity of improving railroad credit and protecting the rights of those whose money is invested in railway securities. Finally the railroads themselves, being vitally concerned in the improvement of existing conditions are planning to submit their views through their executives, operating officials and traffic experts and to assert their willingness to accept far reaching federal regulation along lines that will enable them to attract capital and to provide the facilities needed for the prompt and efficient handling of the country's transportation business.

Main Trouble Is Too Many Masters.

Not all of these interests are in accord as to the remedies that should be adopted. There seems to be a general agreement, however, that many of the difficulties which confront the railroads and which make it impossible for them to meet the requirements of the nation's commerce promptly and satisfactorily arise from the haphazard and often conflicting measures of regulation that have been adopted from time to time by the federal government and the forty-eight states, and that what is needed is a well ordered, systematic scheme of federal regulation that shall cover the whole country and make it possible for the railroads to provide the extensions and improved facilities so badly needed, while at the same time protecting fully the public interests.

SALT WATER FOR WOUNDS

Surgical Dressings Are Displaced by Saline Irrigation in Military Hospitals.

London.—Surgical dressings, says the Lancet, are now things of the past. Wounded soldiers in military hospitals are being treated by "saline irrigation," as the doctors call it, recently invented by Sir Almroth Wright.

This saline irrigation consists of a solution of warm water with from 5 to 10 per cent of salt in it. It can be kept at a normal standard of warmth in an ordinary Thermos flask suspended above the bed with a rubber tube conveying the fluid to a small glass tube.

Thus the new means of wound healing. Here is what a doctor has to say on its application.

The officer in question, who has been treating the wounded bluejackets from the battle of Jutland, told the writer: "We on no account apply a dressing. Surgical dressings—lint, bandage and wool—are not being used, except, of course, during the transportation of a wounded soldier from the field of battle when his wound must be covered up in the old way with lint and antiseptics.

"Take, for instance, the case I have here of a soldier who has a severe shrapnel wound on the knee. You see that, while the bedclothes are arranged in the usual way over the upper part of his body, a sort of "cradle" is formed over the lower part, so as to keep the wound quite clear from any possibility of contact with the coverings. Here the salt water is trickling down all the time, drop by drop from the glass tube on to the wound, running day and night without intermission and carrying off the poison from the wound and helping to cleanse and heal it."

The "saline irrigation" undertakes to clean up and heal most septic wounds in three or four days. The salt penetrates the seat of the poisoning and carries it off.

Sir Almroth Wright says of it: "The salt draws out from the infected tissues the lymph which has spent all its power of resistance to the poisonous bacteria, while it draws into the tissue from the blood stream the lymph which is the enemy of the microbes."

On the other hand, Sir Almroth argues that the ordinary dressing inclines to become a barrier to the free discharge of lymph from the wound; though it is contrary to truth to say that nurses allow dressings to stick and cause bleeding on removal.

"As regards burns," the doctor concluded, "the French have discovered a most efficacious method of spraying severe burnings with paraffin."

Jump from Bed in Morning and Drink Hot Water

Tells why everyone should drink hot water each morning before breakfast.

Why is man and woman, half the time, feeling nervous, despondent, worried; some days headachy, dull and unstrung; some days really incapacitated by illness.

If we all would practice inside-bathing, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of thousands of half-sick, anaemic-looking souls with pasty, muddy complexions we should see crowds of happy, healthy, rosy-cheeked people everywhere. The reason is that the human system does not rid itself each day of all the waste which it accumulates under our present mode of living. For every ounce of food and drink taken into the system nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out, else it ferments and forms ptomaine-like poisons which are absorbed into the blood.

Just as necessary as it is to clean the ashes from the furnace each day, before the fire will burn bright and hot, so we must each morning clear the inside organs of the previous day's accumulation of indigestible waste and body toxins. Men and women, whether sick or well, are advised to drink each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of washing out of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the indigestible material, waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Millions of people who had their turn at constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, nervous days and sleepless nights have become real cranks about the morning inside-bath. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will not cost much at the drug store, but is sufficient to demonstrate to anyone its cleansing, sweetening and freshening effect upon the system.

Obituary

Samuel T. Steward was born in DeKalb County, Ind., Nov 27th, 1851, and died in his home in Spencerville, same county, Jan 6, 1917. Age 65 years, 1 month, 0 months. All but one year of his life was spent in this county. Dec. 23, 1876 he was united in marriage to Mary J. Culbertson, and to them was born one daugter, who still survives; besides her they reared one nephew, Deloss White, of Garrett, whom they loved and cared for as if he were a son. For 19 years they lived on a farm in Jackson township and then moved into Spencerville. About 30 years ago he was thoroughly converted and united with the M. P. Church at Rehobeth. After moving to Spencerville he transfered his membership to the M. E. Church where it remained until the Lord called him from labor to reward.

He was an industrious man, a kind and faithful husband and father, a good citizen and neighbor. He leaves a wife, one daughter, Mrs. Guy Strong, of Jackson Twp; 4 grandchildren; 1 brother, 2 sisters; his nephew, whom they reared; and many other relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Funeral was held from the house at 10 o'clock Monday forenoon. Rev. J. C Valentine, officiating. Henry Beams, director.

The funeral of Orland Wilderson was held Monday afternoon from the U B. Church. Rev. H. C. Beauchamp, of Waterloo, officiating, assisted by Rev. D E. Hively, of Newville. Mr. Wilderson was aged 57 years and 9 months. He leaves one son, John Wilderson; one daughter, Mrs. Ethel Johnston, both of Ft. Wayne; one grandchild; two sisters, Mrs. John Simanton and Mrs. Rugman, of Auburn; and a number of brothers.

Among those beside the relatives who attended the funeral from a distance were:-Frank Fitch and wife, Manford Smith and wife, and Mrs. Mattie Presler, all of Hicksville, Ohio. Interment in Newville Evergreen Cemetery, with Henry Beams, of Spencerville, as director. Mr. Wilderson's last illness was of about 2 months duration, while he was not confined to his bed but a short time Death came in an instant and those about the house were not aware of the fact at the time he died Just about two minutes before he died he had set up on the side of his bed and had eaten just a small amount of food and upon retiring he passed away without a struggle. His death was a shock to his neighbors as they all expected him to be out in a short time.

Misunderstood Ireland.

The most that people in this country hear of Ireland is "poor old Ireland" and there is a general impression that Ireland is about the worst conditioned country in the world. But Ireland has a good side as well as a bad one. There seems to have been no particular reason for presenting the good side, while there has been, for giving the bad view. Mr. Shaw makes an effort to show real conditions and in particular presents her brighter side."---At Opera House, St. Joe, January 17.

GOV. GOODRICH MAKES ADDRESS TO THE ASSEMBLY

New State Executive Delivers First Message to the Legislature.

PEOPLE DEMAND ECONOMY

Lawmakers Urged to Aid in Conducting State's Business on Strict and Economical Basis—Many Important Questions to Be Settled.

Indianapolis, Jan. 8.—Gov. James P. Goodrich, in his inaugural message to the seventieth general assembly of Indiana today said that the question with which this session of the general assembly will have to deal will have little to do with national politics, but will aim to settle many important state questions. Governor Goodrich also urged the lawmakers not to let party affiliations interfere with business before the legislature. He also told the general assembly that the state's business will have to be on a strict business and economical basis.

Text of Inaugural Message.

Following is the inaugural message of Gov. James P. Goodrich to the seventieth general assembly:

Gentlemen of the General Assembly: The particular question before us is that of putting the state's business on a strict business basis with an attendant increase in efficiency—the universal complement of intelligent economy.

The questions with which we will have to deal during the session of the general assembly have little to do with national politics. In the consideration and settlement of the questions concerning the state's business, no partisan advantage attaches, save that which accrues to an individual or party which renders faithful and efficient service to the public. I trust that in both legislation and administration we may be able to rise above mere partisan consideration. In expressing this hope I wish to detract nothing from the importance of political parties, but on the contrary to argue against the abuses of political parties which come from exalting partisan considerations to the detriment of the general welfare.

While I hope that the majority members of the legislature will be disposed to stand together in all matters covered by the pledges of the party in power to the people of this state, on the other hand I trust that party affiliations may not interfere with the business before the legislature; that the view of the minority members may have due weight in our deliberations and that we may all work together as representatives of all the people of the state for the common good.

Promises to Fulfill Pledges.

I shall be glad, of course, to confer at any time with the members of the general assembly on matters pending before it and the executive branch of the state government.

I do not believe in executive dictation, but I do believe that the executive, as well as the general assembly, is bound to carry into effect the promises made to the people in a political campaign, and I shall recommend such legislation as I believe necessary to fulfill these pledges and such legislation as I believe to be demanded in behalf of the public we are sworn to serve.

It is possible for us to render a great service not only to the people of our state but to the cause of representative government by undertaking in a businesslike way to establish both economy and efficiency in the conduct of the state's affairs.

In doing this we must all adhere to the theory that "he serves his party best who serves his country best."

While this applies to all parties it is more difficult, however, for a majority party to apply this theory than it is for a minority party.

People Demand Economy.

The people are growing restive under the increasing cost of government. While they must realize that with the increasing functions of the state, undertaken in the light of its enlarged responsibility, and because of an advancing conception of the state's duties to the people, there must follow a constant increase in the cost of the government, yet they also understand that this condition demands the greatest economy in the conduct of the public business if democracy is not to break down of its own weight.

Padded Payrolls Cause Distrust.

Whenever we fill the state or national capitol with unnecessary employees; whenever we pad the public payrolls with sinecures and whenever we waste the public funds in unnecessary or extravagant appropriations we tend to bring the government itself into contempt, discredit the state as a factor in the daily life of our people and contribute to a feeling of distrust by the people with regard to those who occupy high public places.

We have just celebrated the centennial of Indiana; we are proud of the history of our commonwealth; we are not ashamed as a whole of the standards of public service which have been maintained and which year by year are growing higher. We may well aspire, however, to the distinction of establishing as the "Indiana idea" in state government, the maintenance of the same standards of economy, efficiency and service which prevail in the conduct of the most efficiently managed private business. To bring this about will require some sacrifice of our own personal interests and feelings. People demand economy and efficiency in the abstract, but are not always individually so anxious for it when the execution of the plan conflicts with their own interests.

To Recommend New Buildings.

We shall have to disappoint many of our friends in the work we undertake and to be content to receive much of our reward in the consciousness of duty performed.

We do not wish to restrict, but rather to widen the service rendered by the state to the people, particularly to the state's dependents in the care of our public institutions and likewise to those served by our educational system.

Many recommendations will be made to the legislature for the construction of new buildings and for the establishment of new state institutions. Unless there is absolute and imperative need for the immediate accomplishment of such work it should be deferred until industrial conditions are more nearly normal than they are at the present time. This policy not only will enable the state to construct additional buildings and new institutions at a much lower cost, but at the same time will furnish employment to our citizens when such employment will be needed more than it is under existing conditions. For this reason I recommend that the greatest scrutiny be shown and the greatest care exercised in authorizing appropriations for such purposes.

Can Abolish Many Offices.

I am convinced from a casual survey of the business of the state that there are numerous offices which can be abolished without any detriment whatever to the public service, but on the contrary, in many cases, will result in actually increasing its efficiency.

In making the recommendations hereinafter set out with regard to the elimination of public officials, the consolidation of various bureaus and offices, I want the general assembly to know I have no purpose in view except to promote the administration of the public business. It would be far easier personally for me to yield to the demand for places from the party whose candidate for governor I was in the last election, than it is to recommend the elimination of the offices hereinafter set out, but I am convinced that a point has been reached where the severest retrenchment must be practiced and the greatest care exercised in conducting the business of the state.

I shall submit to you for your consideration certain bills embodying in greater detail these recommendations and hold myself in readiness at all times to meet with you or the committee to whom the various bills may be referred.

Expenditure of Public Funds.

There has been an increasing tendency of late years to make open appropriations, leaving the expenditure of public money entirely under the control of the various boards, commissions and departmental heads.

Believing as I do in centralizing the control of expenditures, I believe that a law should be passed requiring the approval of the executive in the expenditure of all funds of this character. He should have nothing to do with the personnel of the employees or with their selection, but he should have something to say about the salaries paid and the amount of money expended for a particular purpose, and I, therefore, recommend that a bill be passed in accordance with this suggestion.

The Oil Department.

We have in the state at this time 59 oil deputies, a chief oil inspector in the statehouse and the clerical force under his charge, for which service in fees, salaries and expenses they are receiving approximately $125,000 each year.

I recommend that the entire oil department, as now constituted, be abolished at once; that the work now being done by this department be turned over to the pure food and drug department; that the commissioner be authorized to increase his present force of deputies by not to exceed three; that he be allowed an additional chemist and a sufficient increase in the appropriation for his department to cover the added expense. That the fees as now charged be paid into the state treasury.

State Statistician.

I recommend that the office of state statistician be abolished and that the statistical part of the work now being performed by this official be transferred to the executive department, the collection of statistics to be made by the various offices, departments and bureaus of the state government and published by direction of the governor, with the co-operation of the bureau of legislative and administrative information; that the work of the employment bureaus be transferred to the industrial commission. In order that the newly elected state statistician shall suffer no material loss on account of the abolition of his office, if this recommendation is followed out, I will appoint Mr. Roberts to a position with a salary equivalent to the one now fixed for his office. Many thousand dollars can be saved by the abolition of this office and the distribution of the work as indicated.

Attorney General.

The office of attorney general is a legislative office. It is the law-construing branch of the state service and the legal arm of the executive and administrative departments of state government. In addition to $19,200 expended every year for the payment of salaries in the attorney general's office, the state is now paying out large sums of money for legal assistants in the various departments. The state board of tax commissioners is spending $2,500 a year for special counsel; the state fire marshal employs a legal assistant at $2,000 annually; the state board of accounts employs a legal adviser at $2,800 annually. Besides the $6,000 expended annually by the public service commission in payment of the salary of its general counsel, the public service commission has expended over $3,000 since its creation in 1913 for special legal counsel. All this has become a serious financial burden. Any legal advice needed by any officer, bureau or department of the state government ought to be furnished by the attorney general, and I am convinced that the office of the attorney general should be made appointive.

I, therefore, recommend that the office be abolished as an elective office; that the governor be authorized to appoint an attorney general; that the attorney general and the deputies under him shall be the legal advisers of the various commissions and boards of the state; that all authority now enjoyed by officers, boards, bureaus and commissions to employ special counsel be abolished.

If this recommendation is carried into effect, Mr. Stansbury, the present attorney general, will be appointed to the position of attorney general, and I am fully convinced that the legal work of the various boards and commissions of the state itself can be performed more economically and efficiently than it has been in the past.

Public Library Commission.

The work of the public library commission and the state library, in my judgment, should be combined under one commission of four members. The libraries are a large factor in the educational system of the state and their efficient co-operation will be fostered by having the two different state agencies co-ordinated under the management of a single commission.

Legal Clerk to Governor.

I recommend that the office of the legal clerk to the governor be immediately abolished. All legal advice needed by the governor should be furnished by the attorney general.

Quartermaster General.

I call your attention to the fact that, effective last year, the federal government, under the National Guard law, is paying to the quartermaster general of this state $1,000 a year for his services rendered to the federal government. This makes his salary in this state, $800 in excess of that of the adjutant general, his superior officer.

I recommend that the salary of the quartermaster general be reduced $1,000 a year.

Conservation Commission.

I recommend that the office of state fish and game commissioner as now constituted be abolished; that the state board of forestry, the offices of state geologist and state entomologist be abolished and that there be created a commission of four, not more than two of whom shall belong to any one political party, to be known as a conservation commission, which commission shall serve without pay and have charge of and carry on the work now performed by the state board of forestry, the state fish and game commissioner, state geologist and state entomologist and also have charge of the public parks of the state; that they be authorized to carry on the work now authorized by law in the boards and offices abolished, and to select and employ the force necessary to do such work. The commission should be authorized to call on the state educational institutions for assistance. These institutions can be most helpful to the commission without any additional expense to the state.

I recommend in the enactment of this law that the work of the conservation of the fish, game and bird life of the state be separated from the law-enforcing branch of the service and that a chief game warden, with an adequate number of deputies, be appointed to have charge of the enforcement of the law and that experts be appointed by the commission to look after the propagation of fish, game and birds in the state.

The creation of a non-partisan, nonsalaried commission will make it certain that this work be kept out of politics and the work be made an efficient branch of the public service instead of merely an avenue for the reward of "deserving" partisans.

Three-Mile Road Law.

The three-mile road law was originally enacted for the purpose of enabling county commissioners to connect existing improved highways. It has been perverted from its intended use and millions of dollars expended each year in the construction of short highways, three miles or under in length. It is needless to say that this is a wasteful and inefficient method of constructing highways and the law should be repealed.

State Highway Commission.

The time has come when there should be created in Indiana a state highway commission, made up of four members, not more than two of whom should belong to any one political party. They should serve without salary, their expenses to be paid by the state; they should be given authority to establish main roads throughout the state, for the construction of which state aid is to be rendered. The aid of the state should be limited to roads established by the commission and the construction of such roads under the direction of this commission should be limited to a permanent wearing surface to be fixed by the commission and its engineers. In addition to the general public benefit, there is a special benefit to the property along which said highways are constructed, and for that reason the law should authorize county commissioners to cause to be assessed against abutting property according to benefits, an amount not exceeding one-fourth of the total cost of the road.

State aid should be limited to permanent roads. An examination of the reports of the highway commission of New York and other states shows that the difference between the cost of repair and maintenance of roads constructed with a wearing surface of brick or cement and the ordinary water-bound asphalt or gravel highways is sufficient not only to pay the interest on bonds issued for the construction of permanent roads, but to retire the bonds in the course of twenty years. If the aid of the state is limited strictly to roads of a permanent nature they will, if properly constructed and cared for, last for many generations.

Banking and Insurance.

I recommend that there be created in Indiana a department to be known as the department of banking and insurance, which shall be separate from the work of the auditor of state, and that the work now being performed by the auditor with respect to banks, trust companies, insurance, building and loan companies be transferred to this department.

I recommend that the governor be authorized to appoint the head thereof; that the employees be placed, as far as possible, upon a nonpartisan, nopolitical basis and be protected in their positions as long as they render efficient service to the state.

Fire Insurance.

The condition revealed by the investigation made under the direction of Governor Ralston relative to the conduct of the business of the fire insurance companies of Indiana discloses most clearly that the business of the companies is being carried on in violation of the anti-trust laws of the state.

Fire insurance, though a private contract, is not one in which its cost is determined by free agreement between the parties. Rates are fixed by rating or inspection bureaus. It is essential that these bureaus exist, as the individual companies could not make their own rates without making the cost prohibitive. It is not in the public interest that this power should be exercised without state supervision and regulation. The state should assume the power to regulate rates of insurance and to put a stop to rebating and discrimination.

Excise Tax.

I call your attention to the fact that the state tax rate for all purposes in Indiana, now 40.10 cents on the $100, is the highest of any state in the Union. This is due largely to the fact that while the most of the states have resorted to excise taxes of different kinds for the purpose of raising revenue, Indiana has confined itself, almost exclusively, to a direct tax on property within the state.

I believe that, in harmony with the practice of other states, we should turn our attention to caring for the increasing needs of the state, by excise and other indirect taxes and in this way diminish the burden now being borne under the general property tax.

I, therefore, recommend that reasonable excise taxes be levied on public service and other domestic and foreign corporations doing business in Indiana; and that the tax levied on insurance companies be increased.

Assessment of Corporation.

From reports made to the public service commission of the amount of taxes paid by public service corporations in the state, it appears that while many public service corporations are contributing as low as 2 per cent of their gross income, others are paying as high as 15 per cent. It is clear from an examination of the records that the taxes on these public service corporations have not been fairly or equally adjusted; they are grossly inadequate in some cases and almost confiscatory in others.

I, therefore, recommend, in order that there may be uniformity in the assessment of these corporations, that they be brought under the jurisdiction of the state board of tax commissioners and their assessments fixed by this board.

Publication of Reports.

Large sums of money are wasted every year in the publication of needless and unread reports of the various state officials and heads of departments. Thousands of dollars can be saved not only by a condensation of these reports, but by a centralization of the authority to publish them.

I recommend that all reports of the various offices and departments be made to the governor and that the governor be authorized to have published a year book to be signed by the various state officers, giving in condensed form the essential and useful parts of the reports of the various state officials and departments of the state's activity.

At a later date I will lay before the proper committees having charge of the bill touching this subject, full and detailed information with respect to this matter.

Publication of Law Books.

Since 1891 the state has undertaken to publish and distribute to the lawyers of Indiana the reports of the supreme and appellate courts at $1.50 a volume.

I can see no reason why the state should incur a loss in furnishing lawyers with these reports. I recommend that the law fixing the sale price at $1.50 a volume be repealed and that an investigation as to the actual cost of the work be made immediately, and that the state printing board shall be authorized to fix a price on these books that will fully compensate the state for the cost of publication and distribution.

Workmen's Compensation.

An examination of the reports of the industrial board shows that over 80 per cent of the workingmen injured in the course of their employment come within the 14 days waiting period and receive no compensation for the injury sustained. This leaves but 20 per cent to be compensated and this 20 per cent carries 45 per cent of the economic loss resulting through their injuries.

These facts, in my judgment, clearly demonstrate the unfairness and injustice of the two weeks waiting period, since it throws nearly 90 per cent of the economic loss upon the workingmen, and I recommend, therefore, that the law be amended so as to shorten this waiting period from 14 to 7 days.

Orphans' Home.

I call your attention to the fact that at this time there are in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' home at Knightstown but 106 children of soldiers of the Civil war; that the remaining 412 are either the children of Spanish-American, Philippine island and regular army children or the grandchildren of soldiers of the Civil war.

Only one state in the Union is now maintaining a state home for the dependent children of soldiers and sailors of the Civil war. It is inevitable that a time will soon come when there will be no such children to enter the Knightstown home. Without any detriment whatever to these children, this home can be used for the purpose of caring for the dependent children of the entire state.

I recommend, therefore, that the law under which this institution is maintained, be so amended as to provide, first: For the children of the soldiers of the Civil war and that thereafter it be thrown open on equal terms to children throughout the state and that an increased effort be made on the part of the state board of charities to place all children in private homes as rapidly as possible. It is universally conceded that the influence of good homes is far better for the children than life in a state institution.

Vocational Education.

All political parties and all other parties and groups, so far as I know, are committed to the program of vocational education. I hope we may have a healthy development of the program, though we ought to insist on the principle of a dollar's worth of service for every 100 cents expended.

The laws of this state already require children who are not employed to attend school until sixteen years of age. I am inclined to believe the law ought to be amended so as to require all children who are employed, up to the age of sixteen years, to return to school for part-time instruction. This step is in line with present educational tendencies and Indiana cannot afford to postpone the step very long.

City Government.

The Republican party in its last state platform pledged the enactment of a law giving to cities an opportunity to adopt the commission or the city manager form of municipal government. This pledge was made in the light of present tendencies in municipal government and I recommend that a law be passed giving cities such right.

Absent Voting.

Our present constitution requires the votes of voters to be cast in the precinct. I can see no reason why provision should not be made even under the present constitution whereby voters unavoidably detained from home on election day could mail their vote to their precinct and have it cast and counted in the precinct.

Seventeen states have a similar law and in my opinion we should have such in this state. I, therefore, recommend that a law be passed permitting voters absent from their home on election day to mail their vote to the inspector and have it cast and counted the same as though they were present in person.

Public Health.

The conservation of public health is now recognized as a problem demanding consideration of all enlightened governments. The discoveries in hygiene have been many and our state should not be slow to give them practical application. There is no economy that is superior to disease prevention. I therefore heartily recommend to the general assembly the enactment of wise measures calculated to protect and improve the public health.

Acceptance of Gifts.

There is a growing tendency among those possessed of great wealth to regard such possession as a trust and to dedicate their money for public purposes.

We should have a law in this state authorizing the governor and the state board of finance to accept gifts, devises and bequests for the use of the state, or for any of its institutions, educational, charitable or correctional, or for park purposes or any other public use and to make contracts, when necessary, with those desiring to make such gifts and bequests; to pay annuities upon such sums during the life of the donor.

I recommend that a law be passed conferring such power upon the governor and the state board of finance.

Impeachment Law.

Our processes of impeachment and of removing from public office officials who are faithless to the trust imposed upon them are too tedious and intricate to be effective remedies in the hands of the people.

I recommend the simplification of our impeachment law so as to make it possible to obtain the speedy removal from official places of those who fail to discharge their duty, or are guilty of such misconduct as to justify their removal.

Efficiency Survey.

I recommend that a complete efficiency survey of all offices, institutions and bureaus of the state of Indiana, shall be made. Its purpose is to eliminate duplication, waste, leakage and false motion in the operation of the state government and may be compared to similar surveys made by every well-managed private corporation. Such survey ought to permit further economies and the introduction of strictly business methods in the management of the state's affairs.

In order to carry into effect the proposed survey and to effect such immediate changes and modifications as can be made under executive direction and without authority of the general assembly, I ask that a reasonable sum be set aside to be used under the direction of the executive for the purpose of making surveys of the various institutions of the state that better methods of administration may be put into effect; that the result of such survey be submitted to the next general assembly for their consideration.

Constitutional Amendments.

I submit to you for your consideration certain proposed amendments to the constitution of our state, which I believe in the public interest should be passed by the general assembly for final submission to the people of the state for their ratification.

The finances of our state call for a more centralized and responsible control. Sound public policy requires that effective measures be adopted for giving the governor power over the budget which is commensurate with the present responsibility really vested in him by popular opinion.

I therefore recommend that a joint resolution be passed submitting a constitutional amendment by the terms of which there shall be prepared, under executive direction, a budget for submission to the legislature and that when such budget is submitted, while one one or more items may be reduced they cannot be increased. The amendment should further provide that the governor shall be authorized to vote any one or more items in any appropriation bill.

Tax Reform.

I recommend the adoption of a resolution submitting an amendment to the constitution authorizing the legislature to classify property, and a further amendment in connection with this, fixing a constitutional limitation upon the tax rate.

We have witnessed at almost every session of the legislature a constant demand on the part of public officials elected or appointed to office, to have their salaries increased.

I believe that there should be a constitutional prohibition against this practice, and I therefore recommend a constitutional amendment prohibiting the increase of the salary of any public official for the term of office for which he shall have been elected or appointed.

Registration of Voters.

Under the constitution, no registration law can be passed except that which would apply alike to all voters of the state. It is clearly unnecessary to incur the expense of registering voters in Indiana in more than eight or ten counties.

I therefore recommend that an amendment to the constitution be submitted authorizing the classification of counties and cities for registration purposes.

Superintendent Public Instruction.

This office is a constitutional office at the present time, and this official is elected by the people of the state; this office should be an appointive one and should be made on merit for an indefinite number of years, and the official be permitted to retain his place so long as he renders efficient service to the state.

I recommend that an amendment be submitted authorizing the appointment of the state superintendent of public instruction.

Constitutional Convention.

In this message I have already pointed out certain important measures for the inequalities of taxation; which require for their consummation constitutional amendments. It has been found impossible to amend the present constitution by the method proposed in the constitution itself, yet there is an immediate need for the changes specifically indicated and for other changes in conformity with the changed industrial and commercial fabric of society. The public interest requires that there be no further delay in changing the constitution so that we may meet squarely the important problems which confront us at this time. I believe, as a matter of fact, that these changes can be accomplished more satisfactorily through a constitutional convention than through any other method.

The question of holding a constitutional convention has been under public discussion for a number of years and, therefore, is not a new issue. At various times the Republican party has declared in favor of holding a convention to draft a new constitution, and in the recent campaign it declared in favor of a number of important amendments in which the people generally have deep concern because of the great benefits which I am sure will be derived from an immediate revision of the constitution. I feel justified in proposing that this legislature shall call a constitutional convention, to convene in January, 1918. I recommend that the general assembly provide for the election of a suitable number of delegates at large and the conduct of the election on a strictly nonpartisan basis.

Senator Jones' substitute for the Hitchcock resolution indorsing President Wilson's peace note, which approves the request for peace terms without indorsing the note itself, was passed by the senate at Washington.

35 INDIANA CITIES IN U. S. CENSUS

Fort Wayne Is in Second Place, With Evansville a Close Third.

SOUTH BEND COMES FOURTH

Estimates Are Made by Method of Arithmetical Progression, Bureau Having Decided It to Be Simplest and Most Accurate.

Indianapolis.—The census bureau at Washington does not make an annual population estimate as a mere pastime, but because it is required by law to do it. Under the existing federal statute the bureau must estimate once each year the population of the United States, the states and territories and the cities with a population of 8,000 or more according to the last preceding actual census. This means that an estimate must be made of the population of every city that had 8,000 persons or more on April 15, 1910.

These annual population estimates are used in computing annual mortality rates of cities and states, in some instances for fixing the compensation of certain county officials, and in several states the estimates of population are used as a basis for establishing the number of liquor licenses that may be granted. Many public service corporations use these estimates as a basis for the expansion of their operations.

This year's estimates, which have just been made public, are for June 1 of 1916. In making these estimates the method of arithmetical progression is adopted. The bureau several years ago decided that it is the simplest and comes nearer to accuracy in the majority of cases than any other formula. The bureau makes inquiry of each city for which an estimate is made as to whether any additional territory has been annexed during the last year.

Thirty-five Indiana cities are now dealt with by this annual estimate. Last year's estimate makes the following showing for them:

Risk Rates Fixed.

A combination exists among the fire insurance interests of Indiana to control rates in violation of a permanent injunction against the companies that was granted in 1910, according to H. H. Klayer, special insurance investigator employed by the state, who has filed a report with E. B. Stotsenburg, attorney general, covering the evidence found during an investigation, extending over several months.

Mr. Stotsenburg has decided to take no action on the report, but will turn over all the evidence collected to his successor, Ele Stansbury, who takes office the first of the year. Legal action against the fire insurance companies that might result from the investigation would be taken, if any is taken, by Mr. Stansbury.

Letters from fire insurance companies and agents of companies are cited in the report as proof that a combination does exist in Indiana to control fire insurance rates.

Mr. Klayer declares conditions that exist now are practically identical with those existing prior to 1910 when, in what is known as the Weir case, the companies were permanently enjoined from entering into a combination to control the premiums payable on fire insurance policies.

This injunction was a decree entered November 16, 1910, by Clarence E. Weir, judge of superior court, room 4, in a suit of the state of Indiana on relation of James Bingham, then attorney general, against a large number of insurance companies doing business in Indiana.

In the decision in the Weir case, the companies were told that they could "co-operate" with one another to procure just rates, and that such co-operation probably would be necessary in their business. The decision made it clear, however, that a combination to control rates would be in violation of the provisions of the injunction. It is understood that the fire insurance interests, should legal action result from the investigation, will offer the defense that their acts in regulating rates have been of a co-operative nature, and that no combination exists to force the payment of rates.

The report quotes a part of the decision in the Weir case, as follows:

"That the defendants at the beginning of this action and for a long time prior thereto had been in a combination among themselves having for its purpose the controlling of rates of premiums at which fire insurance should be written on property located in the state of Indiana and the abolishing and suppressing of all competition in such fire insurance business within such state, and that said purposes were and are unlawful."

The report declares proof that these conditions prevail at this time, is shown by a letter of the Germania Fire Insurance company of New York, by its agent, the Fletcher Savings and Trust company; by letters of the Hartford Fire Insurance company of Hartford, Conn., through its agent, the Indiana Trust company, and by letters of the Philadelphia Underwriters, the Rochester German Insurance company of New York; the Aetna Insurance company of Hartford, Conn.; the German-American Insurance company of Hartford, Conn.; the Continental Insurance company of New York; the Phoenix Insurance company of London, all through their agent, Emil Rassman.

The report says that the following conditions cited in the Weir case decision prevail at this time:

"That all officers, managers, agents and representatives of said defendants were at the time of the beginning of this action organized into unions, state associations, state leagues, local associations, boards and that by means of and acting through said unions, state associations, etc., have enforced among themselves common rates and have operated and co-operated together in such manner as to find and control the actions of said defendants for the purpose of carrying out said combination and fixing the rates."

The Indiana inspection bureau, sometimes known as the Sellers bureau, is the medium through which rates are controlled, according to the report, which says that the organization of this bureau is practically the same as when the companies were enjoined from combining to control rates.

Starts "Bad" Whisky War.

Whisky was "soaked" again "right where it lives." For Harry E. Barnard, state food and drug commissioner, made public orders that have gone out to the inspectors of the state board of health throughout the state, to wage a relentless war on all purveyors of whisky that is not up to standard. These inspectors already have sent in dozens of samples of "bad" whisky to the laboratories of the state food and drug department and much of it has been discovered to be in violation of the state food and drug laws.

Prosecutions of all saloonkeepers and others, who dispense liquor at retail, in flasks, that is not up to the required standard, are to be instituted by the state authorities at once, Barnard announced.

Whisky, according to rules of the state board of health, and according to other recognized standards, must contain 50 per cent alcohol. A lot of it that has been received in flasks by the state department, is found to have been "watered" and is low in alcohol content. Other samples have been discovered that are short measure. Still other samples are not labeled properly, Barnard said.

New Incorporations.

Bardach & Gran, Indianapolis, retail jewelers; caatpil, $10,000; directors, Max Bardach and Adolph Gran.

Cartinhour-Bowman company, Inc., Indianapolis; capital, $2,000; auto parts; directors, N. H. Cartinhour, A. S. Bowman, L. R. Zapf.

W. M. Stephenson company, Indianapolis; capital, $50,000; coal; directors, W. M. Stephenson, W. D. Jones, H. W. Lackersteen.

Anderson Loan association, Anderson, has increased its capital from $10,000,000 to $11,000,000.

SHORT STATE HAPPENINGS

Gary.—His new sled, a Christmas gift, carried nine-year-old Harold Halcomb in front of a Pennsylvania railroad flier and he was killed.

Sullivan.—Judge W. W. Bridewell has decided that Bicknell shall remain wet for two more years. The returns showed a victory for the drys by a narrow margin after the option election on August 8, but the judge found the recount showed the wets won by six votes.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

INDIANA GUARDSMAN MISSING

Lieut. Joseph G. Ellis of Company I, Third Infantry, Disappears After Being Mustered Out—Had About $700 in Pocket.

Indianapolis.—The police have instituted a search for Lieut. Joseph G. Ellis, Company I, Third Indiana infantry, of Plymouth. A letter from his mother stated that he had about $700 when he was mustered out last week and has not heard from him since that time.

Indianapolis.—Frank P. Litschert, assistant editor of the Muncie Press, has been named private secretary for Governor-elect James P. Goodrich.

Monticello.—Lowell Bliss, age fourteen, shot himself in the right arm when hunting, seriously lacerating it, when his gun was discharged as he climbed over a log.

Anderson.—As a precaution against the spread of scarlet fever in Lapel, where four cases have developed among school pupils, the holiday vacation will be extended another week.

Indianapolis.—Warden James Fogarty of the state prison at Michigan City, has been asked by Governor-elect James P. Goodrich to continue in that position, it was reliably reported here.

Cambridge.—In cranking his automobile after holding a service at Pleasant Hill, northwest of here, Rev. W. L. Weyant, pastor of the Baptist church, broke his right arm just above the wrist.

Logansport.—Mrs. Sarah Gotshall of this city will receive $30,000,000 from the $153,000,000 estate of Michener Tucker, owner of vast coal and oil interests in Pennsylvania, according to word received here.

Shelbyville.—The home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Derringer of Blue Ridge was destroyed by fire that drove them from the house in their night clothes and destroyed most of their furniture. The loss was $1,500.

Jeffersonville.—Kwasind Tribe No. 268, of the Red Men, held a jollification and bond-burning in celebration of the payment of all debt at the lodge building. Herman Rave of this city and Dr. William Keller of Louisville, past great sachem of Kentucky, spoke.

Bloomington.—For years Harry Kellogg, son of a Menlo (Ia.) banker, has been wandering about the country cashing checks on his father's bank. His father had made them all good but one check for $35 which Kellogg cashed here. The wanderlust has left—he now wants to go home and find out why his father failed to cash the check.

Peru. — The Woman's Franchise league, at the Wallace theater, presented "How the Vote Was Won," "His Place Is in the Armory" and "Back of the Ballot," and greatly pleased a large audience. The playlets were managed by Mrs. Frank M. Stutesman, Mrs. A. E. Cathcart, Mrs. Mary Mowbray, Miss Grace Armitage, Mrs. John Crume and Mrs. Richard Edwards.

Bloomington.—Dr. W. D. Home of Indiana university, chairman of the Bloomington library committee, has gone to New York to place before the Carnegie library commission a resolution adopted by the Bloomington city council providing $3,500 annually for the maintenance of a Carnegie library, and it is expected the city will receive $31,000 from the Carnegie commission for a library building here.

Danville.—A man who stole a horse belonging to John Wright of Amo, apparently has escaped from the vicinity. He fired five shots at persons in the home of Martin Mitchell when Mitchell refused to help him repair a wheel that broke on the buggy he was driving, and after being driven from there by Mitchell with a shotgun, he fired three shots at Jacob Howard, who refused to give the stranger a place to sleep.

Laporte.—Charles Gray, a well-to-do farmer who has been married to seven women within ten years, is looking for an eighth wife. A clairvoyant told him that his next venture into matrimony would result in a fortune. Mrs. Gray, the seventh, was given $700 alimony and Gray the divorce decree after a trial in which she proved she was related to William Jennings Bryan. Gray and his succession of wives have made their home on his farm in Porter county.

Veedersburg.—Oscar Goddard told authorities who directed a hot fire of questions at him how his wife had been murdered by his side in bed and how he fled in terror as he saw her lying there with her head crushed in. Screaming at the top of his voice, Goddard ran through the streets in his night clothes early in the morning attracting the attention of two men. Authorities found Mrs. Goddard dead in bed, her skull crushed and an ax covered with blood in the house.

Plainfield.—Police of central Indiana cities were notified to watch for August Cummings, seventeen, of Indianapolis, and Charles Pickel, sixteen, of 808 South Lafayette street, South Bend, who escaped from the state correctional school.

New Albany.—Charles Renshaw, sixty, is in a hospital here in a serious condition from a scalp wound and exposure, and William Brown, colored, of Louisville, is held in jail on a charge of highway robbery, accused of attacking Renshaw. The police say Brown confessed. Renshaw was found in an alley.

When a fellow marries a girl that can't cook he is often satisfied in having his mother-in-law come and spend the winter with him.

Miss Thelma Cole, of Napolion, Ohio, who is here visiting friends, was a Saturday night supper guest of Miss Margaret Tustison.

Mesdames Jennie Sechler and Emma Bishop attended a called meeting of the County W. C. T. U. which was held Wednesday afternoon at Auburn.

S. N. Brunson, wife and son Robert, of near Butler; Miss Clara Bash and Charley Bassett were Sunday guests of A. D. Brunson and wife.

The legislature will have to thrash out the auto tax law this winter again and the only objection is that the money should go into each county direct—the only right and just way. The distribution of the funds now is a graft.

708 prisoners has been confined in the county jail at Auburn, during the past four years, while 1916 shows a decrease over 1915 by 86. The total number received for 1915 was 208 and 1916 but 122. Public intoxication leads the list of offenses for which jail sentences were passed, being 38. Insane patients number 23 in the four years and but 6 were reported in 1915 and 6 in 1916.

A Farewell Reception.

The Rural Housewives Club and their husbands were very pleasantly entertained at the home of Wm. Hamilton and wife at a farewell reception, New Years night, for Mr. and Mrs. John Coburn, who expect to move on a farm near Indianapolis in the near future, and Mr. and Mrs. Mark Morr, who will leave soon for Minnesota. Fourteen members with their husbands also Mr. and Mrs. Lee O. Tustison, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Tustison, Mrs. Anna Bachtol, George Hart, and several children were present. The rooms were beautifully decorated with crepe paper in holiday colors, red and green. Large Christmas bells were suspended from the ceilings. The evening was spent in games conducted by Mesdames Winifred Hart, Bertha Coburn and Josephine Coburn. The gentlemen were very curtious and just before supper took each lady for an Aeroplane after which all sat down to a bountiful two-course supper. First course consisted of Sandwiches, pickles, escalloped oysters and coffee. Then the gentleman giving the best description of his wife's wedding dress received a box of stationary. This was given to Lee O. Tustison. Second course consisted of Ice cream and cake. Mrs. Edith Abel presented in behalf of the R. H. C., a beautiful silver tea set to both Mrs. Coburn and Mrs. Morr. At a late hour all departed feeling the evening to be one well spent and long to be remembered.

DRINK A GLASS OF REAL HOT WATER BEFORE BREAKFAST.

Says we will both look and feel clean, sweet and fresh and avoid illness.

Sanitary science has of late made rapid strides with results that are of untold blessing to humanity. The latest application of its untiring research is the recommendation that it is as necessary to attend to internal sanitation of the drainage system of the human body as it is to the drains of the house.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the phosphated hot water is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, billious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatic stiffness; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Two months ago the class of ladies in the Lutheran Sunday School taught by Mrs. Thornburg challenged the class taught by Howard Pervines to a contest in attendance, the losers to banquet the winners. Mr. Pervines's class proved the winners having increased their attendance from 7 to 20 in the given time. Forty ladies sat down to a sumptious dinner at the parsonage last Wednesday; after which Mr. Pervines thanked the hostesses not only for their hospitality, but also for the challenge which has put new vigor and spirit into his class. The afternoon was spent in a social way.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with [illegible] thia, and has been used for generations [illegible] ush and stimulate clogged kidneys; [illegible] utralize the acids in the urine so it [illegible] ger is a source of irritation, thus [illegible] bladder disorders.

LADIES! SECRET TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Bring Back its Color and Lustre with Grandma's Sage Tea Recipe.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

Fate plays strange tricks. Do you ever stop to consider that seemingly trivial incidents sometimes change the whole course of a person's life?—missing a train at a junction point; suffering a slight injury that becomes infected and necessitates amputation of a limb; a few words of back-fence gossip; a stolen kiss; a misunderstood letter, etc. Fate continues to play strange tricks on Whitaker.

Previous installments of "The Destroying Angel" told how Hugh Whitaker, thinking he faced death, married an innocent girl to save her honor and left the country immediately. Five years later he reappeared in New York, robust and wealthy, and found an old friend, Drummond, engaged to marry his supposed widow, now a famous actress known as Sara Law. She disappeared. Drummond is thought to have committed suicide, as her previous lovers had done. Whitaker learned he was endangered by mysterious agents and went to the country place of Martin Ember, his friend. Drummond turned up, a raving morphomaniac, and tried to kill Whitaker, who was helped by a beautiful Miss Fiske.

—14—

"The most amiable person I know!" he cried, elated. "Greetings!"

She paused by the steps, looking up, a fascinating vision.

"You're able to stand without assistance?"

"As a matter of fact, I can move only at the cost of excruciating agony."

She considered him with a sober face and smiling eyes. "I don't believe you. You're a fraud. Besides, I didn't come to see you at all; I came to find out why Mr. Ember dares so to neglect me. Did you deliver my invitation?"

"I did, unwillingly. He was desolated, but he couldn't accept—had to run back to town immediately after dinner."

"He's as great a fraud as you are. But since he isn't here, I shall go."

"Please—I'm famished for human society. Have pity. Sit down. Tell me where you've been with the boat."

"Merely to the head of the bay to have the gasoline tanks filled. A most boresome errand. If I promise to come over this evening and play you a rubber or two—will you permit me to go home now?"

"On such terms I'll do anything you can possibly suggest," he declared, enchanted. "But . . . how will you get here? Not alone, through the woods! I can't permit that."

"Elsie shall row me down the shore and then go back to keep cook company. Sum Fat can see me home—if you find it still necessary to keep up the invalid pose."

"I'm afraid," he laughed, "I shall call my own bluff. . . . Must you really go so soon?"

"Good afternoon," she returned demurely; and ran down the steps and off to her boat.

Smiling quietly to himself, Whitaker watched her cast the boat off, get under way, and swing it out of sight behind the trees. Then his smile wavered and faded and gave place to a look of acute discontent. Three mortal hours to fritter away in profitless anticipation . . .

At seven Whitaker was merely nervous.

By eight he was unable to sit still.

Half an hour later the house was too small to contain him. He found himself at the end of the dock, tingling with impatience, but finding some little consolation in the restless sweep of the wind against his face and body. He could see little—a mere suggestion of the shore line picked out with the dim, semiphosphorescent glow of breaking wavelets. Some minutes elapsed. The pallor of the east grew more marked. Whitaker fancied he could detect a figure moving on the Fiske dock.

Then, startled, he grew conscious of the thick drone of a heavily-powered motor boat near inshore. Turning quickly, he discovered a black, vague shape not twenty yards from where he stood, showing neither bow nor sidelights: a stealthy and mysterious apparition creeping toward the dock with something of the effect of an animal about to spring.

And immediately he heard a man's voice from the boat, abrupt with anger:

"Not this place, you ass—the next."

"Shut up," another voice replied. "There's somebody on that dock."

At the same time the bows of the boat swung off and the shadow slipped away to westward—toward the Fiske place.

A wondering apprehension of some nameless and desperate enterprise, somehow involving the woman who obsessed his thoughts, crawled in Whitaker's mind. Automatically he turned back, let himself down to the beach, and began to pick his way toward the Fiske dock, half running despite his stiff ankle. But he had not gone half the way before he pulled up with a thumping heart, startled beyond expression by a cry in the night—a cry of wild appeal and protest ringing clear down the wind, a voice whose timbre was unmistakably that of a woman: "Aux secours! Aux secours!"

Twice it cried out, and then was hushed as grimly as the first incoherent screams. No need now to guess at what was towards: Whitaker was running, heedless of his injured foot—pitching, slipping, stumbling, leaping—somehow making progress.

By now the moon had lifted above the beach high enough to aid him somewhat with its waxing light; and, looking ahead, he could distinguish dimly shapes about the dock and upon it that seemed to bear out his most cruel fears. The power boat was passably distinct, her white side showing plainly through the tempered darkness. Midway down the dock he made out struggling figures—two of them, he judged: a man at close grips with a frantic woman. And where the structure joined the land, a second pair, again a man and a woman, strove and swayed.

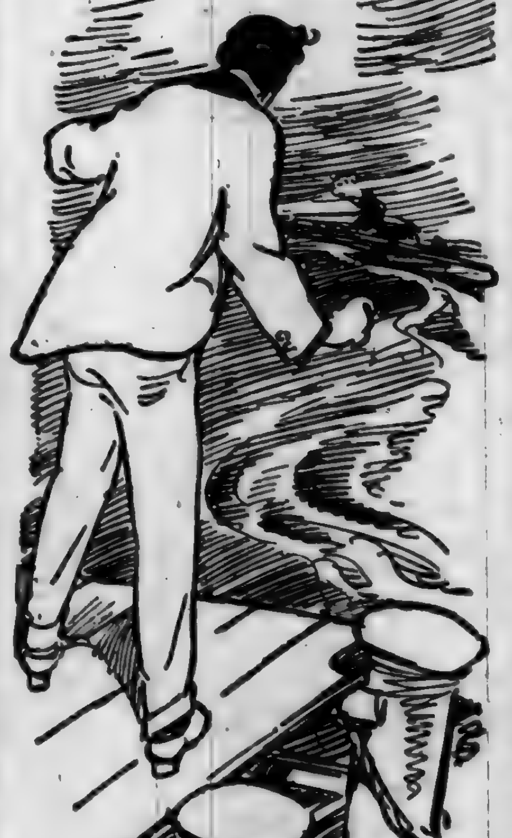
For all his haste, he was too slow; he was still a fair thirty yards away when the struggle on the dock ended abruptly with the collapse of the woman; it was as if, he thought, her strength had failed all in an instant—as if she had fainted. He saw the man catch her up in his arms, where she lay limp and unresisting, and with this burden step from the stage to the boat and disappear from sight beneath the coaming. An instant later he reappeared, standing at full height in the cockpit. Without warning his arm straightened out and a tongue of flame jetted from his hand; there was a report; in the same breath a bullet buried itself in the low earth bank on Whitaker's right. Heedless, he pelted on.

The shot seemed to signal the end of the other struggle at the landing stage. Scarcely had it rung out ere Whitaker saw the man lift a fist and dash it brutally into the woman's face. Without a sound audible at that distance she reeled and fell away; while the man turned, ran swiftly out to the end of the dock, cast off the headwarp and jumped aboard the boat.

She began to sheer off as Whitaker set foot upon the stage. She was twenty feet distant when he found himself both at its end and at the end of his resource. Frantic with despair, he thrashed the air with impotent arms; a fair mark, his white garments shining bright against the dark background of the land. Aboard the moving boat an automatic fluttered, spitting ten shots in as many seconds. The thud and splash of bullets all round him brought him to his senses. Choking with rage, he stumbled back to the land.

On the narrow beach, near the dock, a small flat-bottomed rowboat lay, its stern afloat, its bows aground—as it had been left by the women surprised in the act of launching it. Jumping down, Whitaker put his shoulder to the stem.

As he did so, the other woman roused, got unsteadily to her feet, screamed, then catching sight of him staggered to his side. It was—as he had assumed—the maid, Elise.



Aboard the Moving Boat an Automatic Fluttered.

"M'sieur!" she shrieked, thrusting a tragic face with bruised and blood-stained mouth close to his. "Ah, m'sieur—madame—ces canailles-la—!"

"Yes, I know," he said brusquely. "Get out of the way—don't hinder me!"

The boat was now all afloat. He jumped in, dropped upon the middle thwart, and fitted the oars in the rowlocks.

"But, m'sieur, what mean you to do?"

"Don't know yet," he panted—"follow—keep them in sight—"

The blades dipped; he bent his back to them; the rowboat shot away.

A glance over his shoulder showed him the boat of the marauders already well away. She now wore running lights; the red lamp swung into view as he glanced, like an obscene and sardonic eye. They were, then, making eastwards. He wrought only the more lustily with the oars.

Happily the Fiske motor boat swung at a mooring not a great distance from the shore. Surprisingly soon he had the small boat alongside. Hastily he disengaged the mooring hook, located the switch and started the motor. Half a mile away the red light was slipping swiftly eastward over silvered waters. The Trouble leaped out like a live thing, settling to its course with the fleet precision of an arrow truly loosed.

Probably no more severe critic of his own chivalric foolishness ever set himself to succor a damsel in distress. Withal he entertained not the shadow of a thought of drawing back. As long as the other boat remained in sight; as long as the gasoline and his strength held out; as long as the Trouble held together and he retained the wit to guide her—so long Whitaker determined to stick to the wake of the kidnapers.

A little more than halfway between their starting point and the head of the bay, the leading boat swung sharply in toward the shore, then shot into the mouth of a narrow indentation. For two or three minutes he could see nothing of the other.

Empty of all other craft, weird and desolate in moonlight, the Little Peconic waters widened and then narrowed about the flying vessels. Shore lights watched them, now dim and far, now bright and near at hand. Shelter Island sound received them, slapped their flanks encouragingly with its racing waves, sped them with an ebbing tide that tore seawards between constricted shores into the lonelier wastes of Gardiner's bay. Their relative positions were unchanged: still the Trouble retained her position.

When the chase rounded the buoy, instead of standing, as any reasonable beings might have been expected to, on to Fisher's island or at a tangent north toward the Connecticut littoral, they swung off something south of east—a course that could lead them nowhere but to the immensities of the sea itself.

Whitaker's breath caught in his throat as he examined this startling prospect. He shook a dubious, vastly troubled head. But he held on grimly in the face of dire forebodings.

Once out from under the lee of Gardiner's island, a heavier run of waves beset them, catching the boats almost squarely on the beam: fortunately a sea of long, smooth, slow shouldering rollers, as yet not angry. Now and again, for all that, one would favor the Trouble with a quartering slap that sent a shower of spray aboard her to drench Whitaker and swash noisily round the cockpit ere the self-bailing channels could carry it off. He was quickly wet to the skin and shivering. The hour was past midnight, and the strong air whipping in from the open sea had a bitter edge. They still had moonlight, but the wind was blowing with an insistent, unintermittent force it had not before developed. A haze, vaguely opalescent, encircled the horizon like a ghost of absinthe. By four-thirty, when the twilight was moderately bright, Whitaker was barely able to distinguish the leading boat. The two seemed as if suspended, struggling like impaled insects, the one in the midst, the other near the edge, of a watery pit walled in by vapors.

The end came just before dawn, with a swiftness that stunned.

They were precisely as they had been, within a certain distance of one another, toiling on and ever on like strange misshapen spirits doomed to run an endless race. The harsh, shapeless light of imminent day alone manufactured a color of difference: Whitaker now was able to see as two dark shapes the men in the body of the leading boat. Now suddenly the man at the wheel cried out something in a terrible voice of fright, so high and vehement that it even carried back against the booming gale for Whitaker to hear. Simultaneously he put the wheel over, with all his might. The other jumped from his seat, only to be thrown back as the little vessel swung broadside to the sea, heeling until she lay almost on her beam ends. The next instant she ceased, incredibly, to move—hung motionless in that resistless surge, an amazing, stupefying spectacle. It seemed minutes before Whitaker could force his wits to comprehend that she had struck and lay transfixed upon some submerged rock or reef.

A long, gray roller swept upon and over her, brimming her cockpit with foaming water. As it passed he saw the half-drowned men release the coamings, to which they had clung on involuntary impulse to escape being swept away, scramble upon the cabin roof, and with one accord abandon themselves to the will of the next wave to follow. As it broke over the boat and passed, he caught an instantaneous glimpse of their heads and arms bobbing and beating frantically as they whirled off through the yeasty welter.

But he saw this without pity or compassion. If he had been able to have his will with them, he would have sunk both ten fathoms deep, without an instant's respite. His throat was choked with curses that welled up from a heart wrenched and raging at this discovery of cowardice unparalleled.

They had done what they could for themselves without even hesitating to release the woman imprisoned in the cabin.

Do you think that Miss Fiske is in any way connected with the Drummond - Law - Ember - Whitaker affair? If so, in what manner?

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

DAWN FAIRIES AND BIRDS.

"It was very early one morning," said Daddy, "and the Little Birds wanted to get up.

"Hush," Said His Mother.

"First one Bird started to twitter and chirp.

"'Hush,' said his mother, 'you will wake up all the other little Birds. It's too early to get up yet.'

"'But, mother,' chirped the little Bird. 'I'm so very wide awake.'

"'Take another nap,' said his mother.

"'I can't,' said the little Bird. 'I haven't another nap left in me. Not even a wee one.'

"'Put your head under your wing, and try,' said his mother.

"But still the little Bird would not get to sleep again. He chirped some more and begged his mother to let him get up and play and sing.

"And as he had made so much noise begging his mother to let him get up all the other Birds were waking up, shaking their feathers and trying their little voices.

"'There, there,' said the little Bird delightedly. 'All the Birds are getting up.' And before his mother could stop him he sang a long and wonderful trill.

"'That was beautiful,' said his mother for she loved her little Bird's voice. 'But this evening you must go to bed much earlier.'

"'I will,' said the little Bird, 'because then I will be sleepy. But now, oh, how wide awake I am!'

"Somehow none of the other mother Birds were angry because their Children had been awakened. They all wanted to get up early that morning in Birdland—they didn't know just why at first but after a little while they found out.

"Their wings had all been touched by the Fairy morning dust. This dust makes the little Creatures wake up, while the evening dust puts them to sleep. The Fairies have dust for the Birds, for Animals and for Boys and Girls—and when they get out of sleepy-dust, they get a fresh supply from old Mr. Sandman who keeps a storehouse of sleeping dust.

"But the morning dust the Fairies love to sprinkle over the little Birds. They are so awake and fresh and lovely, in the early morning, the Fairies think.

"When the Birds had all opened their eyes and had tried their voices they suddenly saw a great big Bush full of dewdrops.

"'Water, water, dewdrop water to drink,' shouted the Birds.

"They flew to the bush and then from all around they saw the Dawn Fairies—all just the colors of the early morning.

"'T-r-i-l-l, trill,' called the little Birds.

"'Good morning, best of good mornings,' said the Dawn Fairies, and as they spoke there fell from their wings little baskets lined with moss and filled with tiny Worms for the Birds' breakfasts.

"'Oh, t-w-i-t, twit,' said the Birds. And they began to eat their breakfasts.

"'We're to have a concert,' said the Fairies, 'for soon, soon, you will have to be off for a warmer spot than this, and we want a concert before you go.'

They Took Reserved Seats.

"'But won't you come and visit us?' asked one of the Birds.

"'Indeed we will,' said the Dawn Fairies. 'But we had to have some excuse for waking you up to give us a concert this morning. We felt so much like one.'

"'We are flattered,' sang the Birds. Some of them made bows, and others hopped around and around the Fairies singing,

The Fairies of the Dawn,
Who Wake us up at Morn,
Make us Happy, Free and Gay,
Hurrah, oh Hurrah!

"The Fairies laughed at the little verse the Birds sang, and then they took reserved seats on the best branches of the low trees near by.

"'The concert stand will be the bush which holds the dewdrops,' said the Queen of the Dawn Fairies. And all the Birds took their places on the bush from where they sang solos, duets in chorus and in groups of six and eight. The Dawn Fairies were delighted and just before the concert was over they gave the Birds acorn cups filled with rare Flower Honey!"

The Longest Word.

A teacher one day asked her class if they knew which was the longest word in the English language. A small hand waved frantically.

"Well, Johnny, what is the longest word?"

"Smiles," promptly answered Johnny.

"But that has only six letters!"

"Yes'm, I know it, but it's a mile between the first and last one."

JOSH BILLINGS ON BEER.

"I never drank but three glasses of beer in my life, and that made my head untwist ez tho it wuz hung on the end of a string. I wuz told it wuz owing to my bile being out of plum. I guess it wuz, for I never biled over wuss than I did when I got home that nite. My wife wuz afraid I wuz going to die, an' I was afraid I shouldn't, fer it seemed ez everything I had ever eaten wuz coming to the surfus. I believe if my wife had not pulled off my boots just ez she did they would have cum up, too.

"Oh, how sick I wuz! Fourteen years ago, and I can taste it now!

"Some people say beer is not intoxicating. But if I wuzn't drunk that nite I had sum of the most natural symptoms a man ever had and kept sober.

"It wuz about eighty rods from where I drank the beer to mi house. I wuz just two hours on the road, and had a hole busted through each of my pantaloon neez, and I didn't hev any hat, and tried to open the door by the bell-pull, and hiccouped, and saw everything in the room trying to get around on the back side of me. I sot down a leetle too soon and missed the chair about twelve inches. My wife said I wuz az drunk ez a beast, and ez I said, I began to spit up things freely.

"If beer is not intoxicating it used me almighty mean. If ever I drink any more it will be with my hands tied behind me and my mouth pried open."

SOME FACTS ABOUT BEER.

A pint of beer contains eight-tenths of an ounce of alcohol, equivalent nearly to a tablespoonful of whisky.

While cold beer tastes cool and pleasant to a hot man, it does not cool him off.

It heats him up.

The alcohol and solids are burned into heat.

The effect of alcohol is to send an excess of blood to the skin.

Whenever a large amount of blood goes to the skin it causes a feeling of warmth.

When a man drinks beer he causes himself to feel hot.

He also actually increases his body heat.

He increases his chances of sunstroke at least 100 per cent.—Dr. W. A. Evans, Chicago.

WHAT SCIENCE SAYS.

In appearance the beer-drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind will commonly provoke acute disease, ending fatally. Compared with other inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. It is our observation that beer-drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous classes of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Intellectually a stupor amounting almost to paralysis arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger, senseless and brutal.—Scientific American.

NO UNEMPLOYED IN COLORADO.

A reference to the "army of unemployed caused by prohibition" would subject one to ridicule in Colorado. Not for a score of years, says the Denver Times, has there been such a shortage of men in Colorado's many lines of industry. Every mining camp in the state is said to be short of help, and the same is true of the farming communities, and when the mines and farms send to the city for help they find the same situation. "Labor in Colorado seems to be very generally employed," says W. L. Mansfield, who is in charge of the free employment bureau conducted by the United States immigration service. "We are getting very few applications for jobs."

SEND HIM TO KANSAS.

Gov. E. L. Philipp of Wisconsin, in the course of an address before an audience in a Milwaukee church, was asked, "What would you do with a man who had been a drunkard for sixty years?" The governor's reply as quoted by the press was as follows: "There surely would be a course that would bring out the man in him after all. There is one man whom I have pardoned from prison whom I feared would go back to drinking so I sent him into the center of Kansas. He can't get liquor there and he is living a straight, clean life. I believe he is a credit to the community in which he lives."

MADE IN AMERICA.

Uncle Sam does not hesitate to interfere with the personal liberty of paupers, criminals and lunatics from other countries who want to come to this country to make it their home. He puts up the bars and refuses them admittance. Is it right then to license saloons to manufacture these paupers, criminals and lunatics here at home and out of our own people?

WHY LICENSE IT?

If alcoholism is a disease, why license a trade to propagate it?

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.—Adv.

Worn Tires for Sole Leather.

An ingenious Maine cobbler has substituted material of worn tire casings for leather and patrons mob his shop. Leather prices are quoted as "over the moon" and the new substitute, if generally adopted, ought to help materially in stopping the kiting of man's most pressing necessities.

A MINISTER'S CONFESSION

Rev. W. H. Warner, Myersville, Md., writes: "My trouble was sciatica. My back was affected and took the form of lumbago. I also had neuralgia, cramps in my muscles, pressure or sharp pain on the top of my head, and nervous dizzy spells. I had other symptoms showing my kidneys were at fault, so I took Dodd's Kidney Pills. They were the means of saving my life. I write to say that your medicine restored me to perfect health." TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Driver's Regard for Faithful Animals Proved That His Heart Was in the Right Place.

A man, who was driving a heavy hauling wagon one morning recently in a New Jersey street, stopped his horses suddenly and hurried across the street to a bakery wagon. His had been an early breakfast, and now the pangs of hunger increased as he saw nice, fat sugar-coated doughnuts.

Returning presently with a five-cent bag of the dainties, he accosted one of his horses:

"Hey, Bill, have one on me?"

Bill looked lovingly at his owner and greedily swallowed the food.

And Jerry, the other horse, was not forgotten. But when the driver with a "Old pard, have one," offered him one he smelled it carefully, but mindful of his weak digestion. perchance, refused with a gentle shake of his head.

Bill, still hungry, ate the second doughnut, while the driver climbed back on the wagon munching his cake, wholly unconscious that he had shown one observer a beautiful trait of character.—Indianapolis News.

FRANCE'S NEW HERO

Gen. Robert George Nivelle, who has succeeded General Joffre as commander in chief of the French forces, carried out one of the most striking achievements of the war—the recovery at a single stroke of almost all the territory gained by the Germans before Verdun.

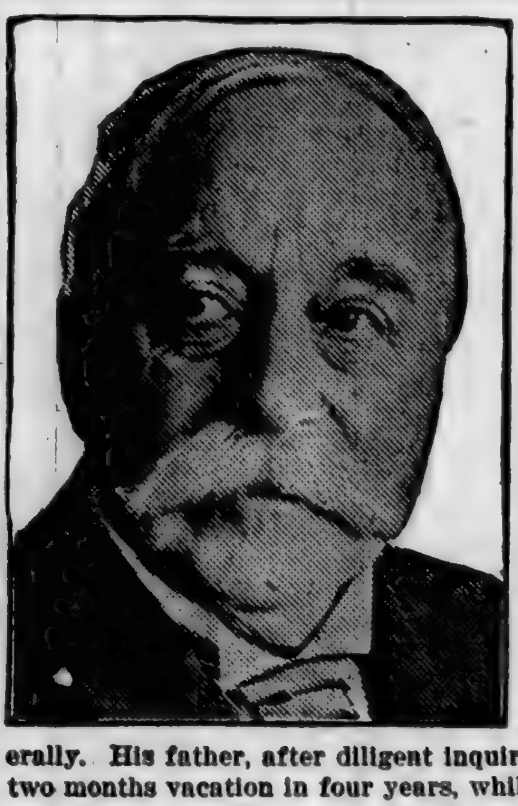
General Nivelle, whose mother was English, is sixty years old and one of the numerous "discoveries" of "Papa" Joffre. At the beginning of the war he was a colonel in command of the Fifth regiment of artillery and about to be retired. He was promoted to general of brigade on October 24, 1914, and a few weeks later placed in command of the Sixty-first infantry division. On December 23, 1915, he received his three stars and was appointed commander of the Third army corps.

Nivelle is said greatly to resemble the authentic portraits of Cardinal Richelieu. In action he is alert, quick, gesticulating and gives the impression of having great reserves of energy, both physical and mental. He has also the reputation of being a strict disciplinarian and possibly is the greatest gunner in the army. With him artillery is the deciding arm.

The general is a great admirer of England, speaks English and is fond of reciting old-time English war verse. More than this, he frankly asserts that he is more than half English, because his father married a Miss Sparrow of Deal and he has several relatives in the British navy.

Nivelle is the friend of inventors. Let one get a pass to his headquarters and he receives the most assiduous attention, particularly if he has brought a product of his work with him.

WHY DEWEY ENTERED NAVY



Ever hear how it came that George Dewey, admiral of the United States navy, and hero of the battle of Manila, happened to go to Annapolis? It's a funny story, as told by his third cousin, Col. Elias Dewey of Chicago.

"The fact that the West Point cadets got eight weeks' vacation in four years, while the 'middies' received but one week in that length of time was the reason the future admiral was sent into the naval branch of the service," says Colonel Dewey.

"George lived at Montpelier, Vt., in the middle of the last century, and my home was at Malone, N. Y. Our fathers were second cousins, and both of us youngsters received appointments to West Point at the same time. My father wouldn't let me go because there were many Indian wars then and he was afraid I would get scalped. It happened that George was some lad in those days and had a good time generally. His father, after diligent inquiry, found that the West Point boys had two months vacation in four years, while the 'middies' had to be satisfied with a single week. This meant that Dewey, Sr., would have had George around a long time if he went to West Point. He thought he could get along with one week, that he could manage it somehow. So he sent him to Annapolis."

MIRACLE MAN OF THE MOUNTAINS

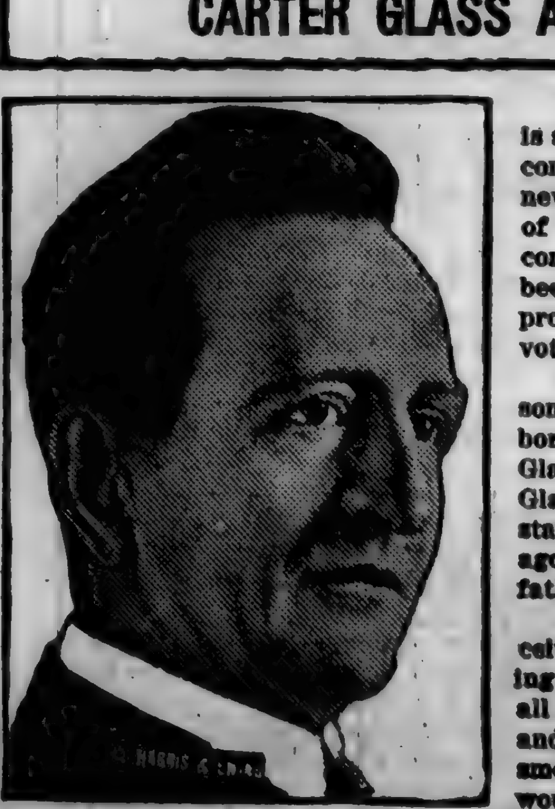
Some time ago trachoma broke out in a dangerous degree in the Appalachian regions of Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and West Vriginia, and for a year the federal health authorities have been working to stop the spread of the infection. At a cost far less than the cost of a single torpedo boat, the government has checked the spread of this infection, which might have proved an expensive plague if it had been allowed to spread.

But the picturesque figure in the fight is the Miracle Man of the Mountains, the "gov'ment doctor," Dr. John McMullen, who with his faithful nurses has wrestled with the power of darkness and brought light to hundreds of eyes. It was difficult to persuade these simple, childlike people at first to submit to operations on their eyes; now during the latter months of the fight against trachoma Doctor McMullen's clinics have lasted from daylight to dark and hundreds have waited patiently in line for their chances.

Doctor McMullen would not tell it himself, but it is a fact that in Muhlenberg county he held a four-day clinic and in that time operated 60 times. He examined and treated 400 people, and at any time could look down and see a hundred in line waiting to reach him. To do what he did he had to begin work at sunrise, and, except for lunch, stopped only when the sun went down.

The service has three hospitals in Kentucky and one each in the other three states where trachoma is prevalent.

CARTER GLASS AND HIS SON



Representative Carter Glass, who is secretary of the Democratic national committee, is not a lawyer. He is a newspaper man and banker, but one of the Virginian's sons is now quite convinced that his dad would have been successful had he followed the profession of the law instead of devoting his energies to finance.

It appears that Mr. Glass has a son among the troops on the Texas border. He is a bright youth and Mr. Glass is proud of him. The younger Glass, like other boys of his age, started to smoke cigarettes some time ago, much to the discomfiture of his father, who protested against it.

A short time ago Mr. Glass received in his mail a package containing three photographs of his soldier son, all in uniform. Later a letter came, and in it the boy wrote that he stopped smoking cigarettes, "which no doubt would be gratifying," the boy said.

Mr. Glass read the letter, and read again. Then he took up the photographs. In two of them young Glass held firmly between his fingers a cigarette.

"It's no use," wrote Mr. Glass to his son, "it's no use. I'd like to believe that you have cut out cigarettes, but the preponderance of evidence is against you."

LESSON FOR JANUARY 14

JOHN THE BAPTIST AND JESUS.

LESSON TEXT—John 1:19-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—Behold, the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.—John 1:29.

John began his public ministry in the summer of A. D. 26 and the baptism of Jesus probably took place in January, A. D. 27. The delegation from Jerusalem to interview John must have appeared along toward the latter part of February.

I. John the Witness (vv. 15-18). John's ministry created great excitement. The people were in expectancy. All classes were reasoning as to who this strange but marvelously forceful man might be. Some thought perhaps he was the Christ (Luke 3:15). To settle this question a committee was sent to Jerusalem to investigate. Malachi, the prophet, has suggested the coming of Elijah (Mal. 4:5) before the Messiah should come, and another prophecy indicated that the prophet should be like unto Moses (Deut. 18:16-18). John freely confesses to this delegation that he is not the Christ nor Elijah nor the prophet predicted by Moses. How foolish and silly are those modern ones who profess to be the messenger of the covenant or some other fanciful title, indicating the return of the witness which is to precede the coming of Christ. John exercises humility in the way he states his real position though he does apply to himself the prophecy of Isaiah (Isa. 40:3-5) which sets forth what his mission was to be. A voice can be heard but not seen. With our bodily eyes we never see a spirit. No man ever saw the soul of his nearest friend. We do see God, however, in his works, in his marvelous deliverances and his guidance of the world and his answers to prayer.

II. John the Baptizer (vv. 19-29). As John had denied that he was the Christ or Elijah, the priests and Levites made bold to question his authority at a later time (Matt. 21-23), and still later the authority of the apostles and the priests (Acts 5:28). John answers them with another display of his humility. His baptism in water was nothing to the baptism of the coming one (See Matt. 3:11; Acts 1:5). Though Christ was in their midst, they were blind and did not recognize him. (See vv. 10, 11; ch. 8:19; 16:3). John's baptism of repentance denotes a baptism which a penitent submitted to that he might receive the pledge and assurance that his sins were forgiven. Baptism meant the cleansing of the people from past sins that they might be fitted for entrance into the kingdom. Baptism is not conversion. It is a witnessing and a symbol of a spiritual truth that we are dead unto sin, and have risen to newness of life (Rom. 6:3-5). Like John, our voice must be not only that of humility but it must be really a voice with a message from God, one that sounds an unmistakable note, one that can be heard wherever we go, one that will make men happier, stronger, braver, more like God, to prepare the way for Christ in the hearts of men.

III. The Witness of the Spirit (vv. 28-34). The writer is very explicit, stating the exact time that these things occurred, for he was an eye witness. John first testifies that Jesus was the Lamb of God, referring of course to the sacrificial lamb, the atoning sacrifice of the Old Testament (Gen. 22:7-8; Ex. 12:3; Isa. 53:7). As the Lamb of God, Jesus would take away the sins of the world; thus the thought is primarily that of atonement, a substitution of another and the deliverance from the guilt of sin. The next day after John's witness to the delegation from Jerusalem, he saw Jesus coming unto him, and said to the assembled people, "Behold the Lamb of God." This refers not so much to his character, that of innocence, meekness and patience, as to his office, his completed work of atonement by the sacrificial death wherein he takes away the sins of the world. On the ground of the propitiation for sin which Jesus wrought (I John 2:2; Matt. 20:28; II Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13) sin is removed from the sinner as far as the East is from the West. God dealt in mercy with men before Christ's time because of the lamb which was slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8). Here John says that at first he did not recognize Jesus as the Messiah, but he does bear record that he saw the spirit descending at his baptism, and it abode upon him.

The work of Christ is for the whole world till all its sin is removed.

He is actually removing sin from the world, and when he comes again, sin will be banished. Luke's record adds that this same Messiah is to baptize with the Holy Ghost and fire.

Christians are to be on fire for God.

The gift of the holy spirit at Pentecost was the first and most manifest expression of this power of Christ who is the real baptizer. Begotten of God (Luke 1:35), possessed of all the attributes of the Father (Phil. 2:6), the one in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwelt bodily (Col. 2:9) he is to be honored and worshiped as God (Heb. 1:6).

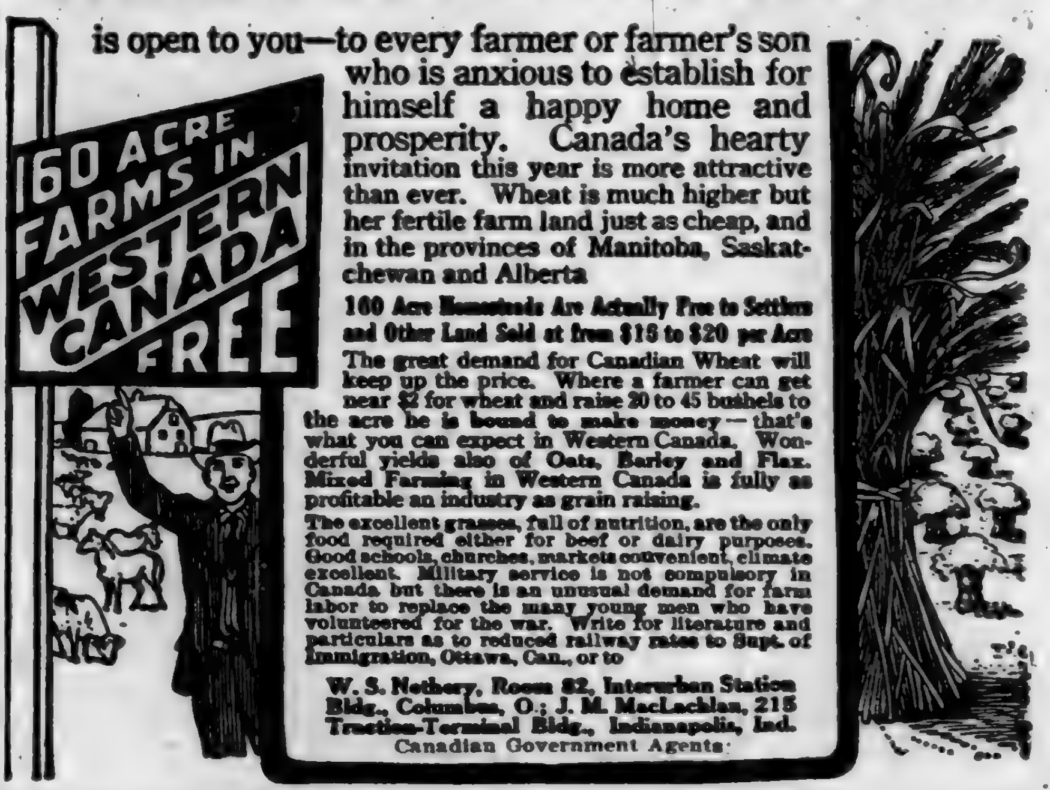
Canada's Liberal Offer of Wheat Land to Settlers



160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

is open to you—to every farmer or farmer's son who is anxious to establish for himself a happy home and prosperity. Canada's hearty invitation this year is more attractive than ever. Wheat is much higher but her fertile farm land just as cheap, and in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta
160 Acre Homesteads Are Actually Free to Settlers and Other Land Sold at from $15 to $20 per Acre
The great demand for Canadian Wheat will keep up the price. Where a farmer can get near $2 for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre he is bound to make money — that's what you can expect in Western Canada. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming in Western Canada is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising.
The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is an unusual demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. A Great Discovery
(BY J. H. WATSON, M. D.)
Swollen hands, ankles, feet are due to a dropsical condition, often caused by disordered kidneys. Naturally when the kidneys are deranged the blood is filled with poisonous waste matter, which settles in the feet, ankles and wrists; or under the eyes in bag-like formations.
As a remedy for those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation caused by uric acid—as scalding urine, backache and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gout, it is simply wonderful how quickly Anuric acts; the pains and stiffness rapidly disappear.
Take a glass of hot water before meals and Anuric to flush the kidneys.
Step into any drug store and ask for Anuric, many times more potent than lithia and eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

It's a powerful, invigorating tonic and nervine which was discovered and used by an eminent physician for many years, in all cases of "female complaints" and weaknesses. For young girls just entering womanhood; for women at the critical "change of life;" in bearing-down sensations, periodical pains, ulceration, inflammation, and every kindred ailment, the "Favorite Prescription" is guaranteed to benefit or cure.

Office Day Thursday's of Each week in Town Hall, St. Joe.

S. S. Class Entertained.

On Monday evening, the Leader Class of the M. P. Sunday School met at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Shilling The meeting was called to order and several select readings given by members of the class Mr. Howard Shilling favored them with several instrumental selections. Business session being over, the evening was spent in social hour and music on the Victrola, to which twenty-seven (27) in number enjoyed very much. Last but not least, the hostess served a very delightful lunch in cafetaria style. Declaring Mr and Mrs Shilling and son to be delightful entertainers, all departed for their homes at a late hour.

Mrs. Brown Dies Saturday

DeForrest Brown of this place, was called to Auburn, the last of the week, by the illness and death of his mother, Mrs. Sylvia Brown. She had been in poor health for a number of years, death releasing her from pain Saturday night at about 12 o'clock. The funeral was held at Newville, Wednesday.

A Birthday Surprise.

Mrs. George Wilmot gave an oyster supper, Saturday evening, to the following guests:—Mr. and Mrs. David Poper, Ella Wilmot and wife, Clyde Mason, wife and little daughter Vivian, and James Malone and wife. The supper was in honor of Mr. Wilmot's birthday and was also a surprise to him.

If You Only Knew the Labor That Goes Into Every "Ad," You Would Never Skip Another One

By J. R. HAMILTON
Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

Every little three-line item you read has turned the wheels of some great factory. Every time you see a cut price the number of gray hairs in the world has been increased.

Many an advertisement is planned a year before it ever finds its way into print. One advertisement in Philadelphia a few years ago opened up the copper mines in Colorado six months before it ever appeared. A thousand miners began digging copper on a contract of brass beds that were going to be made that were going to be advertised.

You see perhaps some piece of muslin wear advertised here whose trimming is pretty, or some gown whose design is elegant. The chances are that a hundred styles were discarded or changed to get this one for you. And all the while the buyer of your favorite store was picking and choosing he had you in mind. He was building the advertisement that would catch your eye and please your fancy and your pocketbook.

If you had been there you would have heard him telling the manufacturer, "My customers are particular. They must have the best that there is at the lowest price that can be made. You've got to give me something better than you give to anyone else."

Every one of these buyers is fighting for you, and it is up to you to show your loyalty to them.

The store that advertises to trick its customers is almost a relic in this present day.

Many a time you find a bargain that turns out better than the advertisement claimed it to be, and you think somebody, somewhere, has made a mistake. But there was no mistake. It was put there purposely to win your confidence.

Every ounce of human ingenuity is brought to bear upon the advertising of the present day. To write the real story of a single item would be to write a chapter in the history of commerce.

These merchants who have figured on costs till their eyes gave out; these buyers who have studied every angle of their work, are trying to tell you through their advertising just what they have done for you. And the least you can do is to read what they have to say.

The report of all their efforts is in this paper today The advertising news to you should be interesting news afte this.

SAFETY DEMANDS FEDERAL CONTROL OF THE RAILROADS

Only Way to Meet Emergencies of Nation, Says A. P. Thom.

STATES' RIGHTS PRESERVED

Principles Which Railways Hold Should Govern Regulatory System in Interests of Public and the Roads—Compulsory System of Federal Incorporation Favored.

Washington, [illegible].—That the interests of national defense require that control of railway lines should rest with the federal government and not with the states was the claim advanced by Alfred P. Thom, counsel to the Railway Executives' Advisory Committee, in concluding his preliminary statement of the case for the railways before the Newlands Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce.

"We must be efficient as a nation if we are to deal successfully with our national emergencies," said Mr. Thom, "and we must appreciate that efficient transportation is an essential condition of national efficiency. If we are to halt and weaken our transportation systems by state lines, by the permanent imposition of burdens by unwise regulation, we will make national efficiency impossible."

States' Rights Would Not Suffer.

Mr. Thom cited many instances in which shippers in one state were injuriously affected by selfish regulations imposed on the railroads by neighboring states. He pointed out that federal regulation would be no invasion of the rights of the states but would be the means of preserving the rights which they acquired when they entered the Union, one of which was the right to the free movement of their products across state boundaries.

What the Railroads Advocate.

The principles which the railroads believe should be incorporated in any just system of regulation were summarized by Mr. Thom as follows:

1. The entire power and duty of regulation should be in the hands of the national government, except as to matters so essentially local and incidental that they cannot be used to interfere with the efficiency of the service or the just rights of the carriers.

2. As one of the means of accomplishing this, a system of compulsory federal incorporation should be adopted, into which should be brought all railroad corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.

3. The Interstate Commerce Commission under existing laws has too much to do and is charged with conflicting functions, including the investigation, prosecution and decision of cases. The latter duties should be placed in the hands of a new body which might be called the Federal Railroad Commission. Regional Commissions should be established in different parts of the country to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission by handling local cases.

4. The power of the Commission should be extended to enable it to prescribe minimum rates and not merely maximum rates as at present. This would increase their power to prevent unjust discriminations.

Justice to Public and Roads.

5. It should be made the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the exercise of its powers to fix reasonable rates, to so adjust these rates that they shall be just at once to the public and to the carriers. To this end the Commission, in determining rates, should consider the necessity of maintaining efficient transportation and extensions of facilities, the relation of expenses to rates and the rights of shippers, stockholders and creditors of the roads.

6. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be invested with the power to fix the rates for carrying mails.

7. The federal government should have exclusive power to supervise the issue of stocks and bonds by railroad carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce.

8. The law should recognize the essential difference between things which restrain trade in the case of ordinary mercantile concerns and those which restrain trade in the case of common carriers. The question of competition is not the only fair criterion.

9. The law should expressly provide for the meeting and agreement of traffic or other officers of railroads in respect of rates or practices. This should, however, be safeguarded by requiring the agreements to be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and to be subject to be disapproved by it.

"My legal proposition," Mr. Thom said, "is that the Constitution as it now is gives full authority to Congress to regulate the instrumentalities of interstate commerce in all their parts. If the power of regulation is to reach the public requirements, it must be coextensive with the instrumentalities of commerce."

Mr. Thom explained that the roads are not asking either of the Committee of Congress any increase in reve[illegible] but that they are merely asking [illegible]action of a system which will [illegible]sible to any need that may

A suit to set aside a conveyance of land in this county has been filed in the DeKalb Circuit Court by Ethel Ruth Johnson. The defendants in the case are John Wildeson and Jane Patterson.

The plaintiff charges that on December 14, 1916, Orlin Wildeson, who died the 5th of this month, was inclined to make a deed conveying eighty acres of land owned by him to the defendant Jane Patterson. She says that the defendants, John Wildeson, and herself, are the only two heirs at law of Orlin Wildeson, and are each entitled to one-half of the property of the deceased.

The reasons as given in the complaint for setting aside the conveyance are: First, tnat at the time of making the deed to Jane Patterson, Wildeson was of unsound mind Second, that undue influence caused him to make the deed Third, the deed was not duly executed Fourth, the deed was made under duress and compulsion Fifth, it did not represent his wishes, as he was under the influente of drugs at the time he executed the instrument Sixth, it was not a deed for the reason that it was not to take effect until after his death; and seventh, it could not be termed a will for it was not executed as such.

The complaint asks that tne deed be set aside, that Jane Patterson make and deliver to the heirs at law a conveyance of the premises in question, that there be an accounting for all rents and profits, and the plaintiff recover her costs of the action. Howard Benninghoff of Ft. Wayne, is attorney for the plaintiff.—Star.

Try your skill -Get a Prize

February 1st. and 2nd., you will have an opportunity to show your skill in baking bread or picking out seed corn and run a chance of being paid handsomely for your trouble. The officials of the Tri-township Farmers' Institute Association have made arrangements to award prizes to the ladies of the Tri-townships for the best loaf of bread and will give the gentlemen prizes for the best ten ears of seed corn, the corn being raised on their own farm. Here is a chance to help make the coming institute more interesting, learn some of the fine points about bread and corn and possibly carry off one of the coveted prizes. The boys and girls put up a nice exhibit last year and now let us older folks follow their good example this year.

Prizes will be awarded little girls under 13 years for cakes, and girls over 13 years for bread. The boys will have a corn show the same as last year. All rules will be the same as last year except that essays are not required with exhibits. Also bread and cakes must be baked in standard pans. See premium lists for details

One of the interesting features of the Institute this year will be the demonstration of the model kitchen by the "Rural Housewives' Club" of Coburntown. These ladies are making preparations with the vim and enthusiasm for which their organization is noted and their session is going to be something that no one can afford to miss. We understand that some of the business men are co-operating with the ladies in supplying furniture, plumbing, etc. Watch the program for this demonstration. There has never been anything like it in this community and no one with a home to care for should fail to hear the good suggestions these ladies will have to offer.

The allies have stated their terms of peace. They ask that Alsace and Lorraine be restored to France and that the Turks be expelled from Europe. They demand the restoration and indemnification of Belgium, Serbia and Montenegro; the evacuation of invaded territories in France, Russia and Roumania, with "just reparation" and the liberation of Italians, Slavs, Roumanians and Czechs from foreign domination. All this is set forth in the reply of the entente to President Wilson's note, received at Washington.

WILL PROBE HIGH COST OF PRODUCE

Resolution in Senate Calls for Investigation.

GIVEN BY SENATOR NEGLEY

Provides for Appointment of Committee of Five Who Would Be Given Wide Authority—Wants Report at This Session.

Indianapolis.—Definite steps to bring about an investigation of the high cost of living in Indiana were taken in the senate when Senator Negley of Indianapolis introduced a resolution for that purpose. The resolution calls for the appointment of a special senate committee of five members, whose duty it shall be to make thorough investigation of the relative cost of production of the food and fuel products marketed to the consumer in the state of Indiana as compared to the cost to the consumer and the expense of delivery and distribution of such food and fuel products in the usual and ordinary channels of trade between the producer and the consumer, the profits accruing to all middlemen operating in the delivery and distribution of such food and fuel products between the producer and the consumer and the possible existence of secret combinations between persons, firms and corporations engaged in the producing, handling, marketing and distributing of food and fuel products for the purpose of avoiding free competition in the production, distribution and consumers' cost in food and fuel products in the state of Indiana.

The committee would be authorized to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and to compel such witnesses to testify under oath, or affirmation, to require the production before it of books, records, contracts, freight bills, bills of lading, and all other papers pertaining to the production, purchasing, handling, storing, selling and distribution of food and fuel products and to hold either public or private meetings, or both, for such purposes.

Provision is made for the employment of counsel and the committee would be authorized to make its report to the legislature at this session in order that needed legislation migth be enacted.

Senator Negley says that if this investigation is ordered by the senate it will be a real investigation and no whitewashing party but that the committee will go to the bottom of the situation in record-breaking time.

Lieutenant Governor Bush has announced the appointment of the senate committees. The chairmen of the committees are as follows:

Cities and towns, James; judiciary, A. Gemmill; federal relations, Grant; constitutional revision, English; rivers and waters, Nedji; finance, McConaha; railroads, White; public morals, White; rules, Mercer; legislative apportionment, Robinson; mileage and accounts, Smith; employing assistants and incurring indebtedness, McKinley; organization of courts, White; education McConaha; banks, Metzger; criminal code, Kinder; phraseology of bills, McKinley; corporations, Metzger; public health, Beardsley; congressional apportionment, Lanz; insurance, Wolfson; mines and mining, Mercer; rights and privileges, Dobyns; reformatories, Lanz; soldiers' and sailors' monument, Negley; city of Indianapolis, McCray; telegraphs and telephones, Porter; fees and salaries, Robinson; natural resources, Wolfson; military affairs, Hudgins; benevolent institutions, McCray; manufactures, Mercer; elections, Spaan; claims and expenditures, Nedji; prisons, Nedji; county and township business, Kinder; public libraries, Reser; roads, Dobyns; public printing, James; journal, Gemmill; agriculture; Signs; labor, Green; swamp lands and drains, Smith; public rights and franchises, Robinson; executive appointments, Green; enrolled bills, Gemmill; public buildings, Lanz; state library, Robinson; joint rules, McConaha.

Goodrich Is Inaugurated.

In the presence of the Indiana legislature and a large crowd of other spectators, James P. Goodrich of Winchester, Republican, was inaugurated as governor of the state of Indiana to succeed Samuel M. Ralston, Democrat, who has served in that office for the last four years. Immediately preceding this ceremony, Edgard D. Bush of Salem, Republican, was inaugurated as lieutenant governor, to succeed William P. O'Neill of Mishawaka, who filled the office second to the chief executive. The latter ceremony took place in the senate chamber, because the lieutenant governor is presiding officer of the senate.

Governor Ralston made a short speech, introducing Governor Goodrich and wishing him a successful administration. Mr. Goodrich responded with a brief speech, after which a reception was held by Mr. and Mrs. Ralston and Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich in the governor's office.

At the afternoon's session of the legislature, which was a joint session, Governor Goodrich delivered his first message to the lawmakers, in which he made a number of important recommendations for laws which he believes should be enacted.

The Republican majority in each branch of the legislature is pledged to carry out the program as outlined by Governor Goodrich, and bills relating to many of the propositions will be introduced in the house or senate at once.

Lieutenant Governor Bush said in his inaugural address that in his opinion the lieutenant governor has authority to cast the deciding vote in every case where the vote is a tie, including the passage of bills, and that he will follow that policy. This will be the first time that a lieuteant governor has done this. The senate is a tie, politically, with 25 Democratic and 25 Republican members.

The chairmen of the house committee are as follows: Elections, Dynes; ways and means, McGonagle; judiciary, A. Miller of Howard; judiciary B. Vasey; courts, Harris; banks, Symons; building and loan associations, Alldredge; education, Kessler; Indiana reformatory, Gentry; state prison, Southard; swamplands, Overmyer; military affairs, Dilworth; claims, Miles; trust funds, Duffey; fees and salaries, Jinnett; sinking fund, Sipe; rights and privileges, Harker; railroads, Davis of Lake; manufactures and commerce, Davis of Jay; county and township business, Blackmore; agriculture, Swain; benevolent institutions, Jameson; public morals, Myers; mileage, Waltz; corporations, Woods of Marion; rivers and waters, Williams; public expenditures, Elkenberry; federal relations, Duffey; city of Indianapolis, Montgomery; cities and towns, Anderson; engrossed bills, Wright of Randolph; roads, Mendenhall; statistics and immigration, Day; insurance, McClaskey; printing, Geddes; reformatory institutions, Mason; drains and dikes, Wood of Jasper; mines and mining, Wright of Clay; labor, Behmer; medicine, Reed; natural resources, Coggins; congressional apportionment, Buller; legislative apportionment, Clapp; telephones and telegraph, Kuhlman; soldiers' monument, Scott; soldiers' home and soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home, Scott; libraries, Mason; criminal code, Hyland; public buildings, Miltonberger.

Cost of Relief and Correction.

State and local charitable and correctional institutions in Indiana cost the taxpayers $5,053,539.19 for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1916. Inmates at that time numbered 19,411, according to an announcement by the board of state charities.

In the state institutions alone a total of 13,218 persons were inmates on that date. County infirmaries contained 3,341 persons, and county jails held 1,093 persons, while orphans' homes, receiving public wards, held a total of 1,759 inmates, the announcement said.

The year's new admissions to these classes of public institutions, which could not well be totaled, the board said, owing to duplications, were as follows:

State institutions	8,004
County poor asylums	1,793
County jails, including recommitments	40,075
Orphans' homes receiving public wards	1,010
There were aided by township overseers of the poor	97,298
And the children brought into school under the compulsory school attendance law numbered	30,794

The expense incurred by the above agencies amounted to $5,053,539.19, classified as follows

State institutions—

New Incorporations.

The Vigo County Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, Terre Haute; no capital; to fight tuberculosis; directors, L. J. Cox, A. Herz, Mrs. H. T. Schloss.

Fairfield Loan company, Tippecanoe county, has terminated its official life.

United States Rubber company of Delaware has announced that $10,000 of its capital stock is to be represented in Indiana.

Elkhart Motor Supply company, Elkhart, has increased its capital from $50,000 to $100,000.

SHORT STATE HAPPENINGS

Winchester.—The Hillgrove (O.) post office, a few miles east of Union City, has been discontinued, and the patrons there will be served by rural route carriers from the Union City office.

Indianapolis.—Alonzo Moffett, newspaper publisher of Elwood, died in a hospital here following an operation. He was formerly president of the State and National Democratic Editors' association.

State Happenings

Hammond.—Mrs. Caroline Turner, eighty-five years old, and one of the first white settlers in Indiana, died here.

Wabash.—The two proprietors and two customers in the Brewer Brothers' store here were robbed by a masked bandit, who obtained $40.

Elkhart.—Mr. and Mrs. Ira C. Mills celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage at a family reunion of their seven children and 14 grandchildren.

Crown Point.—Miss Augusta Kopelke, seventy, a noted teacher of German and a sister of Judge Johannes Kopelke, was found dead in bed here.

Elwood.—Dr. J. R. Hildrup, who has been practicing medicine at Windfall since 1870, assisted the stork for the thousandth time when a son was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Shaw.

Shelbyville.—Samuel Smith, living south of Shelbyville, was injured about the head when his horse was climbing a hill, the fifth wheel of the buggy broke and he fell in the street.

Lawrenceburg.—Sparks from a defective flue caused a fire in the home of Allen N. Perlee, a farmer living in Sparta township, that destroyed the house. The loss was about $4,000.

Washington.—The dropping of a redhot bolt on the top of a refrigerator car covered with tar caused a fire in the Baltimore & Ohio railroad shops. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

Newcastle.—Edward Breeze, fifteen, son of Edwin Breeze, was injured seriously when he was shot in the hip with a small rifle by a companion, Donald Johnson. The two boys were preparing to go hunting.

Greencastle.—Rev. A. M. Hootman, who has been pastor of the First Christian church here four years, has resigned, effective April 1, to accept a call to another church. Mr. Hootman came here from South Bend.

Portland.—Application for admission to the Jay county bar was made by Miss Adah Halfhill, for many years official reporter in the Jay circuit court, and stenographer for Judge J. J. Moran when he was on the appelate court bench.

Fort Wayne.—Harry McMichael of Paulding, O., near the Indiana-Ohio state line, dreamed that his house was burning, and that his wife was calling him for help. He got out of bed in his sleep, jumped from a second-story window and broke a leg.

Evansville.—When shooting rats in a smokehouse near Millersburg, Warrick county, Victor Fehd, fifteen, suffered a badly shattered arm when a muzzled-loading shotgun exploded in his hands. His arm was amputated at the elbow at a hospital here.

Richmond.—The Eastern Indiana Hospital for the Insane will open its third farm colony here. It will have room for 20 patients. It is believed 10 per cent of the patients will be cared for eventually in these colonies, where they are self-supporting.

North Vernon.—Efforts to find the body of Ralph Lloyd, twenty-one, who drove into Big creek with a team of horses when the stream was too high to ford and was drowned, have failed. Lloyd was on his way to the home of his fiancee, Miss Clarice Buckles, when the accident occurred.

Covington.—A special session of the grand jury was called here by Judge Schoonover to investigate the murder of Mrs. Oscar Goddard, slain as she was asleep. Goddard, held in jail, still maintains that she was struck on the head with an ax by robbers. Two persons asleep in a nearby room were not awakened.

Bedford.—Ernest Kersey, who recently was acquitted of the alleged murder of Henry Sidwell, near Huron, has filed suit for divorce in the Lawrence circuit court from Eunice Kersey, in which he asks for the custody of their three children. Refusal to attend to their home or to care for their children and threats to kill him are the charges made.

Brazil.—George Moran, who has been arrested several times on charges of violence in connection with strike riots here, was found not guilty by Mayor Jones of shooting a revolver within the city limits. Witnesses who told the police they saw Moran shoot into the air in the business district, developed bad memories when on the witness stand. Mayor Jones told Moran he was sure Moran was guilty, and advised him to leave Brazil.

Rushville.—James B. Wilson, a cripple, who rides in a wheel chair, was arrested and placed in jail on a charge of intoxication. When arraigned before Mayor Bebout, Wilson wanted to know how the police could determine whether he was drunk, since they could not see him stagger. The city authorities agreed to release him if he would leave Rushville, and Wilson went to Connersville. He said he was sent here from Indianapolis by a bartender.

Tell City.—Esarey Deming Ray, an eccentric man who has lived in a shack here for years, is missing. His brother-in-law, George Masey, and several other men have investigated rumors that Ray has been seen, but have found no trace of him.

Alexandria.—Gambling has stopped in Alexandria, and the "blind tiger" operators apparently have decided to take no chances, since Oswald Ryan became prosecutor of Madison county. Two Alexandria fraternal organizations that sold liquor to members have closed the bars because of the change in prosecutors.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

She Had Heard of One.

"Whoever saw a perfect man?" asked an evangelist at a revival meeting. "There is no such thing. Every man has his faults, plenty of them."

Of course, no one had ever seen a perfect man, and consequently the statement of the revivalist was received with silence. The revivalist continued:

"Whoever saw a perfect woman?"

At this juncture a tall, thin woman arose.

"Do you mean to say, madam," the evangelist asked, "that you have seen a perfect woman?"

"Well, I can't just say that I have seen her," the woman replied, "but I have heard a great deal about her—my husband's first wife."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

FALLING HAIR MEANS DANDRUFF IS ACTIVE

Save Your Hair! Get a 25 Cent Bottle of Danderine Right Now—Also Stops Itching Scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, luster and luxuriance which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy and have the appearance of abundance; an incomparable gloss and softness, but what will please you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp. Adv.

Don't Be Envious.

Crush all envy out of your heart. The envious person is in pain upon all occasions which ought to give him pleasure. The relish of his life is past, and the objects which administer the highest satisfaction to those who are exempt from this passion give the quickest pangs to persons who are subject to it. All the perfections of their fellow creatures are odious. Don't be envious.

The Destroying Angel

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

AUTHOR OF "THE POOL OF FLAME," "THE BRONZE BELL," "THE BLACK BAG," "THE BRASS BOWL."

COPYRIGHT BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE.

DID you ever risk your life and come within a breath of losing it while trying to save a friend? There is a mighty thrilling episode pictured in this installment.

Taking up the thread of the story, you will recall that Hugh Whitaker, returning to New York five years after his supposed death, finds his wife, now a famous actress known as Sara Law, engaged to marry Drummond, his old partner. Drummond supposedly commits suicide. Sara Law disappears. Whitaker, assailed mysteriously, goes to the country place of Martin Ebmer.

He becomes acquainted with charming Miss Fiske, living near by, and discovers spies are watching her. One night she is abducted in a motor boat when Whitaker starts to make a call. He follows the kidnapers in another launch and sees their boat wrecked on a reef.

CHAPTER XIII.

Debacle.

The Trouble, meantime, was closing in upon the scene of tragedy with little less than locomotive speed. Whitaker applied the reversing gear; then, while the engine reversed with a heavy and resentful pounding in the cylinder-heads, he began to strip off his coat. The boat, moving forward despite the resistance of the propeller, drove heavily against the wreck, broadside to its stern. As this happened Whitaker leaped to the wreck just in time to grasp the coaming and hold on against the onslaught of a hurtling comber. Thunderings benumbed him, and he began to strangle before it passed. . . .

He found himself filling his lungs with free air and fighting his way toward the cabin doors through the water waist deep. In another breath he had torn them open, wide, discovering the woman, her head and shoulders showing above the flood as she stood upon a transom, near the doorway, grasping a stanchion for support. Her eyes met his, black and blank with terror. He snatched through sheer instinct at a circular life preserver that floated out toward him, and simultaneously managed to crook an arm round her neck.

Again the sea buried them beneath tons of raging dark water. Green lightnings flashed before his eyes, and in his ears there was a crashing like the crack of doom. His head was splitting, his heart on the point of breaking. The wave passed on, roaring. He could breathe. Now if ever . . .

As if stupefied beyond sensibility, the woman was passive to his handling and he managed somehow to drag her from the cabin to the cockpit and to jam the life ring over her head and under one arm before the next wave bore down upon them.

They came to the surface in the hollow of a deep, gray swale, fully fifty feet from the wreck. Whitaker retained his grasp of the life-preserver line. The woman floated easily in the support. He fancied a gleam of livelier consciousness in her staring eyes, and noticed with a curiously keen feeling of satisfaction that she was not only keeping her mouth closed, but had done so, apparently, while under water.

Then suddenly, the lift of a wave discovered to him the contour of the shore. Instead of being carried in to the rock-strewn beach, they were in the grip of a backwash which was bearing them not only out of immediate danger, but at the same time alongshore toward a point under whose lee he hoped to find less turbulent conditions.

Three times he essayed to speak before he could wring articulate sounds from his cracked lips and burning throat.

"You . . . all right?"

She replied with as much difficulty:

"Yes . . . you may . . . let go . . ."

To relax the swollen fingers that grasped the lifeline was pure torture.

He attempted no further communication. None, indeed, was needed. It was plain that she understood their situation.

Some minutes passed before he became aware that they were closing in quickly to the shelving beach. He glanced over his shoulder. They were on the line of breakers. Behind them a heavy comber was surging in, crested with snow, its concave belly resembling a vast sheet of emerald. In another moment it would be upon them. It was the moment a seasoned swimmer would seize.

His eye sought the girl's. In hers he read understanding and assent. Of one mind, they struck out with all their strength. The comber overtook them, clasped them to its bosom, tossed them high upon its great glassy shoulder. They fought madly to retain that place, and to such purpose that they rode it over a dozen yards before it crashed upon the beach, annihilating itself in a furious welter of creaming waters. Whitaker felt land beneath his feet.

The rest was like the crisis of a nightmare drawn out to the limit of human endurance. The undertow tore at Whitaker's legs as with a hundred murderous hands. He came out of it eventually to find himself well up on the beach leaning against the careened hulk of a dismantled catboat with a gaping rent in its side. At a little distance the woman was sitting in the sands, bosom and shoulders heaving convulsively, damp, matted hair veiling her like a curtain of sunlit seaweed.

He moved with painful effort toward her. She turned up to him her pitiful, writhen face, white as parchment.

"Are you—hurt?" he managed to ask. "I mean—injured?"

She moved her head from side to side, as if she could not speak for panting.

"I'm—glad," he said dully. "You stay—here . . . I'll go get help."

He raised his eyes, peering inland.

Back of the beach the land rose in long, sweeping hillocks, treeless but green. His curiously befogged vision made out a number of shapes that resembled dwellings.

"Go . . . get . . . help . . ." he repeated thickly.

He started off with a brave, staggering rush that carried him a dozen feet inland. Then his knees turned to water, and the blackness of night shut down upon his senses.

* * * * * * * *

When Whitaker awoke the afternoon was cloudy-warm and bright, so that his eyes were grateful for the shade of a white parasol that a girl was holding over him. He grew suspicious of his senses; and when the parasol was transformed into the shape of a woman wearing a clumsy jacket of soiled covert cloth over a nondescript garment of weirdly printed calico—then he was sure that something was wrong with him.

Besides, the woman suddenly turned and bent over him an anxious face, exclaiming in accents of consternation: "O dear! If he's delirious—!"

His voice, when he strove to answer, rustled and rattled so that he barely managed to say: "What nonsense! I'm just thirsty!"

"I thought you would be," said the woman, calmly; "so I brought water. Here . . ."

She offered a tin vessel to his lips. He sat up suddenly, seized the vessel and buried his face in it, gradually tilting it, while its cool, delicious sweetness irrigated his arid tissues, until every blessed drop was drained. Then, and not till then, he lowered the pail and with sane vision began to renew acquaintance with the world.

He was sitting in the lee of the beached catboat. The woman he had rescued sat quite near him. The gale was still booming overhead, but now with less force (or so he fancied); and the surf still crashed in thunders on the beach a hundred feet or more away; but the haze was lighter, and the blue of the sky was visible, if tarnished.

The sands curved off in a wide crescent, ending in a long, sandy spit. There was a low, ragged earth bank rising from the sands. Midway between the beach and where the hazy uplands lifted their blurred profile against the faded sky, stood a commonplace farmhouse, in good repair, strongly constructed and neatly painted; with a brood of out buildings. Here and there, in scattered groups and singly, sheep foraged.

With puzzled eyes Whitaker sought counsel and enlightenment of the woman, and found in her appearance quite as much to confound anticipation and deepen perplexity. What she had worn the night before he could not say; but it certainly could have had nothing in common with the worn, stained, misshapen jacket covering her shoulders, beneath it the calico wrapper scant and crude beyond belief, upon her feet the rusty wrecks that once had been shoes.

As for himself, his once white flannel trousers were precious souvenirs, even though the cloth had contracted to an alarming extent—uncomfortable as well; while his tennis shoes remained tolerably intact, and the canvas brace had shrunk upon his ankle until it gripped it like a vise.

But these details he absorbed rather than studied, in the first few moments subsequent to his awakening. His chiefest and most direct interest centered upon the woman. There was warm color in the cheeks that he had last seen livid, there was the wonted play of light and shadow in her fascinating eyes; there were gracious rounded curves where had been sunken surfaces, hollowed out by fatigue and strain; and there remained the ineluctable allurement of her tremendous vitality. . . .

"You are not hurt?" he demanded. "You are—all right?"

"Quite," she told him with a smile significant of her appreciation of his generous feeling. "But you? Haven't you slept at all?"

"Oh, surely—a great deal. But I've been awake for some time—a few hours."

"But I—! What time is it?"

"I haven't a watch, but late afternoon, I should think—going by the sun. It's nearly down."

"Good heavens!" he muttered, dashed. "I have slept!"

"You earned your right to. . . . You needed it far more than I." Her eyes shone, warm with kindness.

She swayed almost imperceptibly toward him. Her voice was low pitched and a trifle broken with emotion:

"You saved my life—"

"I—? Oh, that was only what any other man—"

"None other did!"

"Please don't speak of it—I mean, consider it that way," he stammered. "What I want to know is, where are we?"

Her reply was more distant. "On an island, somewhere. It's uninhabited, I think."

He could only echo in bewilderment: "An island . . .! Uninhabited . . .!" Dismay assailed him. He got up, after a little struggle overcoming the resistance of stiff and sore limbs, and stood with a hand on the coaming of the dismantled catboat, raking the island with an incredulous stare.

She stirred from her place and offered him a hand. "Please help me up."

He turned eagerly, with a feeling of chagrin that she had needed to ask him. For an instant he had both her hands, warm and womanly, in his grasp, while she rose by his aid, and for an instant longer—possibly by way of reward. Then she disengaged them with gentle firmness.

She stood beside him so tall and fair, so serenely invested with the flawless dignity of her womanhood that he no longer thought of the incongruity of her grotesque garb.

"You've been up there?" he asked, far too keenly interested to scorn the self-evident.

She gave a comprehensive gesture, embracing the visible prospect. "All over. . . . When I woke, I thought surely . . . I went to see, found nothing living except the sheep and some chickens and turkeys in the farmyard. And the farmhouse—apparently it's ordinarily inhabited. Evidently the people have gone away for a visit somewhere. It gives the impression of being a home the year round. There isn't any boat—"

"No boat!"

"Not a sign of one, that I can find—except this wreck." She indicated the catboat.

"But you can't do anything with this," he expostulated.

The deep, wide break in its side placed it beyond consideration, even if it should prove possible to remedy its many other lacks.

"No. The people who live here must have a boat—I saw a mooring buoy out there"—with a gesture toward the water. "Of course. How else could they get away?"

"The question is, how we are to get away," he grumbled, morose.

"You'll find the way," she told him with quiet confidence.

"I! I'll find the way? How?"

"I don't know—only you must. There must be some way of signaling the mainland, some means of communication. Surely people wouldn't live here, cut off from all the world . . . Perhaps we'll find something in the farmhouse to tell us what to do. I didn't have much time to look round. I wanted clothing, mostly—and found these awful things hanging behind the kitchen door. And then I wanted something to eat, and I found that—some bread, not too stale, and plenty of eggs in the henhouse. . . . And you—you must be famished!"

What do you suppose Whitaker and Miss Fiske will find on the island—a solution of the whole mystery?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

An Infant Industry.

"How is our old friend Blank getting on?" asked the returned traveler.

"Fine," replied the grocer. "He's making a fortune out of an infant industry."

"How's that?" queried the r. t.

"He is manufacturing incubators," exclaimed the grocer.

ARMY'S ELECTRICAL EXPERT

CLINEDINST ©

George Owen Squier, lieutenant colonel in the United States army, who already has an international reputation for discoveries in the fields of electricity and chemistry, is by the war department officially declared to have made an epoch-marking discovery in sea telegraphy. Experiments initiated and carried out by him have shown that Morse signals in cable communication can be read audibly, instead of visually by flashes, as at present. The device employed is an audion cable receiver. Experiments have been carried on between points in the United States and Alaska.

Colonel Squier is a son of Michigan, whose proficiency in physics and chemistry, when a student at West Point, led to his going to Johns Hopkins university, after his graduation from the National Military academy in 1887. He originally entered the artillery service, but after 1898 he was connected with the signal corps, and he is now of the aviation corps. During 1901-1902 he was busy supervising the installation of the Philippine cable-telegraph system. In 1912 he was sent to London as military attache at the embassy, and was there when the war began. Later he was sent for to organize the aviation corps of the United States army, in which work he accomplished remarkable results. He organized schools for instruction of aviators and laid foundations which promise in time to make this part of the service thoroughly efficient.

His writings on the sine-wave systems of telegraphy and ocean cabling, multiplex telephony, absorption of electro-magnetic waves by vegetable organisms, and on electro-chemical effects attributed to magnetism, have given him fame, now to be enhanced by this latest application of ingenuity to a detail of intercontinental communication, which has large significance, financial and social.

HE UPSET A TRADITION

© International Film Service

Forty-two years ago a German-Jewish boy, fourteen years old, landed in New York from Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, with $13.40 in his pocket. He did not tarry in New York, but went West and stopped at Salt Lake City, Utah. Today he is one of the wealthiest men of the state, a pioneer in railroad building, and on January 1 he was inaugurated governor—the first non-Mormon and the first Democrat to be elected to that high office. His name is Simon Bamberger.

"You people of America—you native-born—do not know what splendid opportunities your country offers," says Governor Bamberger. "Nowhere else in the world could I have found the opportunity given me to rise in life, and I am the proudest American citizen in this country. I am an American, not a hyphenate, but an American. It has been an unwritten law for twenty years in Utah that no one should be governor of the state unless he was a Mormon and a Republican. That I, a foreigner, should have overturned tradition is gratifying beyond expression."

MISS BOARDMAN WAS SHOCKED

CLINEDINST ©

Miss Mabel T. Boardman, president of the American Red Cross, is what is known in impolite parlance as a "crank" for sanitation and cleanliness. She believes as firmly in this principle in peace as in war and her friends declare Miss Boardman believes cleanliness is not only next to godliness, but comes near being first. Her horror can be pictured then when on a recent visit to the South, she was obliged to view the shiftless state of personal cleanliness in which the darkies, many of them, revel.

She finally caught a gray-haired old negro smoking a villainous corncob pipe on the steps of his cabin and prepared to do battle with him on the spot.

"How in the world do you expect to go to heaven with a breath like that?" she sniffed, congratulating herself on having struck a weak point in the pious old fellow's armor.

"Hee, hee," snickered the darkey, rocking back and forth in his mirth. "When ah dies, lady, ah 'spects to lose mah breaf."

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

The forest service now owns improvements valued at more than $5,300,000. Their construction has been pushed as rapidly as available funds would permit, and the rangers have also done a great deal of improvement work during spare time. There are now 2,528 miles of road, 22,124 miles of trail, 20,030 miles of telephone line and 1,090 miles of firebreak, nearly 2,000 field headquarters and a quantity of range improvements which facilitate the administration of grazing business.—Washington Star.

Beginning to Appreciate Chestnut.

It is said that England is gradually learning to appreciate the nutritious value of the chestnut, where it is chiefly used for stuffing and in the preparation of vegetarian dishes. In a large quantity the chestnut does not make a cheap vegetable, but in flesh-forming ingredients they excel all other vegetables. The Italians use the chestnut to give the flavor and strength to a variety of dishes.

Mrs. Lucile Provines spent Wednesday the guest of her mother, Mrs. Flora Gee.

The Culture Club met Wednesday evening with Mrs. Benjamin Hamilton, an associate member. Nineteen members responded to roll call. One new member, Mrs. L. W. Spayd, was admitted to the Club, two guests were also present. The lesson subject under discussion was "The Angel Barred the Way" and "Stolen Waters are not Sweet". The discussion of the lesson was followed by a song by the Club. Mesdames Lena Meek and Pluma Hamilton each favored the Club with piano solos. After the regular program was carried out several contests were held and a fine luncheon served by the hostess. The evening was fully enjoyed by all present.

GRANDMA NEVER LET HER HAIR GET GRAY

She Kept Her Locks Dark and Glossy, with Sage Tea and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and not a medicine. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

DRINK HOT WATER BEFORE BREAKFAST

Says you really feel clean, sweet and fresh inside, and are seldom ill.

If you are accustomed to wake up with a coated tongue, foul breath or a dull, dizzy headache; or, if your meals sour and turn into gas and acids, you have a real surprise awaiting you.

To-morrow morning, immediately upon arising, drink a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is intended to first neutralize and then wash out of your stomach, liver, kidneys and thirty feet of intestines all the indigestible waste, poisons, sour bile and toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal.

Those subject to sick headaches, backache, bilious attacks, constipation or any form of stomach trouble, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store and begin enjoying this morning inside-bath. It is said that men and women who try this become enthusiastic and keep it up daily. It is a splendid health measure for it is more important to keep clean and pure on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing disease, while the bowel pores do.

The principle of bathing inside is not new, as millions of people practice it. Just as hot water and soap cleanse, purify and freshen the skin, so hot water and a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Limestone phosphate is an inexpensive white powder and almost tasteless.

He Found Out.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer tells a yarn of a young man who had been reading medical literature and quack advertisements and got to imagining all sorts of things were wrong with him. He went to a doctor who gave him some tablets after telling him he had a bad case of 'pernospera." The young man had to go to a public library before he could run down the word's difinition. Finally he found it, as follows. "Pernospera—A blight that attacks the bean." That cured him.

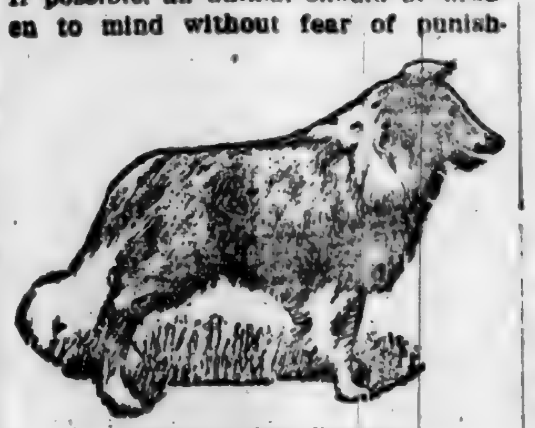
TRAINING COLLIE DOGS

Unfailing Source of Help and Satisfaction to Farmer.

First Essential in Breaking Animal for Any Purpose Is to Teach Him to Mind—Pup Learns Quickly What Is Wanted.

Upon farms where stock is kept, a well-broken collie dog is an unfailing source of help and satisfaction, while an unbroken, untrained dog is a continual nuisance. In handling stock with a dog, it is important that the dog be well-trained, and that great care be exercised while the animals are getting used to being managed by him. When those two conditions are fulfilled it is surprising how easily and economically stock can be taken care of.

The first essential in breaking a dog for any purpose is to teach him to mind. Dogs are intelligent and affectionate animals and are usually gratified to do the will of their master. If possible, an animal should be broken to mind without fear of punishment. In breaking dogs to handle stock it is a great advantage to have stock that is used to being driven by a dog, upon which to break the puppy. Stock that is not used to a dog is often easily frightened, or it may fight the dog.



Friend of Any Farmer.

It is an excellent plan to have an older and well-broken dog to assist in the training, as dogs are imitative.

The puppy quickly learns what is wanted by association with the older dog. In training dogs avoid shouting. It is as easy to teach them to mind a single word or a whistle, and much more satisfactory, and remember that much more can be accomplished by kindness than harshness.

PRESIDENT HAS ENTENTE REPLY

Note Received at Washington Shows Very Little Desire for Peace Now.

WILL NOT MAKE STATEMENT

Refuse to State Their Objects in the War Until the Hour of Negotiations—Belgium Also Sends Note — Statement From Berlin.

Washington.—Following is the translation of the entente allies' reply to President Wilson's peace note, transmitted to the state department by Ambassador William G. Sharp in Paris:

"Ambassador Sharp to the Secretary of State. American Embassy, Paris, Jan. 10, 1917.

"The allied governments have received the note which was delivered to them in the name of the government of the United States on the 19th of December, 1916. They have studied it with the care imposed upon them both by the exact realization which they have of the gravity of the hour and by the sincere friendship which attaches them to the American people.

"In a general way they wish to declare that they pay tribute to the elevation of the sentiment with which the American note is inspired and that they associate themselves with all their hopes with the project for the creation of a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world.

"The allies have as profound a desire as the government of the United States to terminate as soon as possible a war for which the central empires are responsible and which inflicts such cruel sufferings upon humanity.

Not Time for Peace.

"But they believe that it is impossible at the present moment to attain a peace which will assure them reparation, restitution, and such guaranties to which they are entitled by the aggression for which the responsibility rests with the central powers and of which the principle itself tended to ruin the security of Europe; a peace which would, on the other hand, permit the establishment of the future of European nations on a solid basis.

"The allied nations are conscious that they are not fighting for selfish interests, but above all to safeguard the independence of peoples, or right, and of humanity.

"The allies are fully aware of the losses and suffering which the war has caused to neutrals as well as to belligerents, and they deplore them; but they do not hold themselves responsible for them, having in no way either willed or provoked this war, and they strive to reduce these damages in the measure compatible with the inexorable exigencies of their defense against the violence and the wiles of the enemy.

"The allied governments believe that they must protest in the most friendly but in the most specific manner against the assimilation established in the American note between the two groups of belligerents; this assimilation, based upon public declarations by the central powers, is in direct opposition to the evidence, both as regards responsibility for the past and as concerns guaranties for the future; President Wilson in mentioning it certainly had no intention of associating himself with it.

"If there is a historical fact established at the present date, it is the willful aggression of Germany and Austria-Hungary to insure their hegemony over Europe and their economic domination over the world.

"Germany proved by her declaration of war, by the immediate violation of Belgium and Luxemburg, and by her manner of conducting the war, her systematic contempt for all principles of humanity and all respect for small states; as the conflict developed the attitude of the central powers and their allies has been a continual defiance of humanity and civilization.

Cites Enemy's Atrocities.

"Is it necessary to recall the horrors which accompanied the invasion of Belgium and of Serbia, the atrocious regime imposed upon the invaded countries, the massacre of hundreds of thousands of inoffensive Armenians, the barbarities perpetrated against the populations of Syria, the raids of Zeppelins on open towns, the destruction by submarines of passenger steamers and of merchantmen even under neutral flags, the cruel treatment inflicted upon prisoners of war, the juridical murders of Miss Cavell, of Captain Fryatt, the deportation and reduction to slavery of civil populations, etc.?

"The execution of such a series of crimes perpetrated without any regard for universal reprobation fully explains to President Wilson the protest of the allies.

"They consider that the note which they sent to the United States in reply to the German note will be a response to the questions put by the American government, and, according to the exact words of the latter, constitute a 'public declaration as to the conditions upon which the war could be terminated.'

"President Wilson desires more. He desires that the belligerent powers openly affirm the objects which they seek by continuing the war; the allies experience no difficulty in replying to this request.

"Their objects in the war are well known; they have been formulated on many occasions by the chiefs of their divers governments. Their objects in the war will not be made known in detail, with all the equitable compensations and indemnities for damage suffered, until the hour of negotiations.

Their Terms Stated.

"But the civilized world knows that they imply in all necessity and in the first instance the restoration of Belgium, of Serbia, and of Montenegro and the indemnities which are due them; the evacuation of the invaded territories of France, of Russia, and of Roumania, with just reparation; the reorganization of Europe guaranteed by a stable regime and founded as much upon respect of nationalities and full security and liberty of economic development which all nations great or small, possess, as upon territorial conventions and international agreements suitable to guarantee territorial and maritime frontiers against unjustified attacks; the restitution of provinces or territories wrested in the past from the allies by force or against the will of their populations; the liberation of Italians, of Slavs, of Roumanians, and of Tcheco Slovaques (Czech Slavs) from foreign domination; the enfranchisement of populations subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turks; the expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman empire decidedly . . . (apparent omission) to western civilization.

"The intentions of his majesty the emperor of Russia regarding Poland have been clearly indicated in the proclamation which he has just addressed to his armies.

"It goes without saying that if the allies wish to liberate Europe from the brutal covetousness of Prussian militarism it never has been their design, as has been alleged, to encompass the extermination of the German peoples and their political disappearance.

"That which they desire above all is to insure a peace upon the principles of liberty and justice, upon the inviolable fidelity to international obligations with which the government of the United States has never ceased to be inspired.

"United in the pursuits of this supreme object, the allies are determined, individually and collectively, to act with all their power and to consent to all sacrifices to bring to a victorious close a conflict upon which they are convinced not only safety and prosperity depends but also the future civilization itself. "SHARP."

Belgium Sends Supplementary Note.

Washington.—A supplementary Belgian note, which accompanied the entente allies' reply to President Wilson's peace appeal, pays tribute to the sentiment of humanity which prompted the president of the United States to send his note to the belligerent powers, and declares ardent wish to end the war. It refers to the German treatment of Belgium as "barbarous," and alleges the former government, after the occupation of Belgian territory, displayed no better observance of the rules of international law or the stipulations of The Hague convention. The heavy taxation imposed on the country, and the deportation of Belgian workers, are denounced.

Germany Denies Allies' Charges.

Berlin.—"We offered peace and meant what we said. The offer was spurned. We shall fight on until that peace which might have been gained by diplomacy is won by our sword."

In substance, this is what Germany, speaking for her allies, Austro-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey—told the neutral world on Thursday.

The note is, in effect, a reply to the entente's rejection of that offer.

"The form in which they clothe their communication," says the note, "excludes an answer to them." For this reason that which the central powers feel they should make known to the world is told in the message to the neutrals.

Reiteration of the assertion that the responsibility for the continuance of the war does not rest with the central powers, a statement of the central powers' case in the conflict, emphatic refutation of the accusations made in the entente's reply to the peace offer and a renewed expression of "the will to victory" are the main features of the note.

Restoring Lost Hearing.

The newest therapeutic machinery on record is that now being tried out in a French hospital to restore the hearing of soldiers who have lost it in battle. The machine is a phonographic instrument which pronounces vowels forcibly. These vowel sounds cause a vibration which acts upon the sensitive drum of the ear like massage, overcoming its numb paralysis. A number of tests have already demonstrated the power of the instrument to restore hearing to soldiers who are totally deaf. It must be tried continuously for several hours a day for two weeks at least.

Knowledge Extraordinary.

A group of Chinese boys were discussing the relative merits of two billboards—one advertising Carnation Milk, the other Bull Durham. One of the boys was explaining the signs to the others, so: "In America they have he cows and she cows. The she cows give milk, and the he cows give tobacco."

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

LABOR UNION VS. SALOON.

From an address by Rev. Father James E. Cassidy of Fall River, Mass.:

"Unionism, as I conceive it, stands for brotherly help. Saloonism stands for brotherly robbery. Unionism stands for self-protection. Saloonism stands for self-destruction. Unionism stands for self and brotherly benefit. Saloonism stands for self and brotherly injury. Unionism stands for conservation of strength and increase of wage. Saloonism stands for the dissipation and diminution of both. Unionism stands for the 'full dinner pail.' Saloonism stands for a pocketful of beer-checks. Unionism stands for better homes and the highest standard of workmanship. Saloonism stands for wretched homes and ruined workmanship. Well you know it, better than do I, you whose homes it has made desolate, whose wives and daughters it has devoured, whose sons and fathers it has consumed, whose little ones it has fed upon. You know what the saloon stands for. You know it stands for the fattening of the few while the many perish and die. But you will say to me: If the saloon be such a deadly enemy of labor, why does not unionism fight it? And I answer, sane, skilled, disinterested, farsighted unionism has always fought it and the more skilled the members, the more deadly the conflict. And organized labor is slowly shutting off its wind and will eventually destroy it.

INSURANCE TESTIMONY.

Results of the medico-actuarial investigation based on statistical data from 43 American life insurance companies covering an experience of 25 years shows (1) that individuals who took two glasses of beer or a glass of whisky or an equivalent amount of alcohol in any form, each day, showed a mortality 18 per cent higher than the average of the group; (2) that the mortality among those who had indulged in occasional alcoholic excesses previous to their application for life insurance was 50 per cent higher than the average, which means the loss of four years to such lives; (3) that men who acknowledged the habit of indulging somewhat freely, but who were still considered acceptable for insurance, showed a mortality of 86 per cent higher than the average.

BEER MOST DEADLY.

Dr. S. H. Burgen, a practitioner 35 years, 28 in Toledo, O., says:

"I think beer kills quicker than any other liquor. My attention was first called to its insidious effects when I began examining for life insurance. I passed as unusually good risks five Germans, young business men, who seemed in the best health, and to have superb constitutions. In a few years I was amazed to see the whole five drop off, one after another, with what ought to have been mild and easily curable diseases. On comparing my experiences with those of other physicians I found they were all having similar luck with confirmed beer drinkers, and my practice since has heaped confirmation upon confirmation."

DOGS AS JAIL INMATES.

From the Portland (Ore.) Evening Express:

Nine months after the prohibition law went into effect, City Marshal Jack Carter of Marshfield, has no prisoners in the jail except four dogs, says the Portland Evening Telegram. From one of the wettest towns in the state this has become one of the dryest and the marshal this week started a round-up of all the stray dogs in town. "There's nothing else to put in jail," he said, "and we might as well keep the Hotel-de-Carter open even if it's with dogs."

CUT OUT LIQUOR SHIPMENTS.

Big express companies are refusing C. O. D. liquor shipments into dry territory. "The reason why we do not care to transport liquor into dry territory," says Mr. Simpson, general superintendent of the Wells-Fargo company, "is because such operations are nothing more than conducting saloons. It does not seem fair to vote out the operation of saloons and permit express companies to come right along and conduct the same traffic."

TOURIST BUSINESS BOOMING.

"One of the most logical arguments I heard against prohibition when it was an issue in this state was that it would decrease, even ruin, the tourist business. But if it continues to hurt Colorado tourist trade as it has this year, I am afraid the state will not have enough room to handle the crowds," is the comment of Arthur J. Dodge, manager of the Civic and Commercial association of Denver.

NO CALLS FOR RELIEF.

"In 1915 I distributed over 600 garments and 98 pairs of shoes, besides medicines, etc.," states Mrs. S. J. Merry, chairman relief committee, Rose City Park (Ore.) W. C. T. U. "At the end of the fourth month of prohibition, calls for clothing, medicine and other assistance ceased. The supplies on hand remain uncalled-for.

PROVE HIS CHARACTER.

The only man you have in your town who can prove his good moral character is the saloon keeper.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE MUSKRATS.

"Mr. and Mrs. Muskrat," said Daddy, "had been very much worried about their fur in the summer. It had been far from nice and they had looked quite plain and ugly.

"'Dear me,' said Mrs. Muskrat, 'I wonder if we will ever look the same again. We used to be so good-looking.'

"'Do I look as wretchedly as you do?' asked Mr. Muskrat, not very politely.

"'If anything you look worse,' said Mrs. Muskrat.

"Mr. Muskrat did not seem to be in the least offended. He simply shook his tail, which is so much like Mr. Rat's, with no fur or hair on it, and he sighed unhappily.

"When the fall came along their fur began to improve.

"'Look!' said Mrs. Muskrat to her husband. 'We are growing better looking every day.'

"'Quite true, my dear,' said Mr. Muskrat. 'You are almost good-looking now.'

"'Isn't that splendid?' said Mrs. Muskrat. 'And you yourself are looking quite distinguished and stylish.'

"'Ah, it's the cold weather that agrees with us,' said Mr. Muskrat.

"'Yes, none of these summer climates for me,' said Mrs. Muskrat. 'That's really why we look so ugly in the summer. We don't like it and it doesn't like us. It's a regular game of tit-for-tat that we play with the summer months.'

As Handsome a Couple as Could Be Found.

"And still more time went by and every day Mr. and Mrs. Muskrat looked more beautiful. Their fur became very fine and they knew they were about as handsome a couple as could be found.

"They were very clever too, and avoided all the traps that were set for them, and all the ways the big Men who came out with guns had, they discovered, and got the best of them every time.

"'The very idea,' said Mrs. Muskrat. 'Just because we're handsome they'd like to use us on their fur coats and dresses. I can be just as stylish here without going on any dress or coat.'

"'They say we keep them warm,' said Mr. Muskrat.

"'Well, we can keep ourselves warm,' said Mrs. Muskrat, and they were more careful than ever not to be caught.

"How they disappointed the hunters. They had been seen and almost caught, but every time they had been able to get away and the Men who hunted were very cross about it.

"'Those muskrats always get the best of us. There are two we've seen again and again. And they're the same two every time. How smart they are! But what good fur they would make.'

"Mr. and Mrs. Muskrat thought that if they were so smart they would not make good fur at all! They would simply refuse to make good fur!

"'Well,' squealed Mr. Muskrat to his wife, 'we always have our good bank to go to for our sleep, and we love to sleep, don't we, my love?'

"'Ah yes,' squealed Mrs. Muskrat. 'We do like a little nap, and the warm snow keeps us so comfortable.'"

"Daddy!" exclaimed Nancy, "do they sleep under the snow?"

"I don't see how they can keep warm that way," said Nick. "The idea of calling the snow warm—and yet I've been warm when I've been buried in the snow for fun. But for a long time—and to sleep there! Ugh!" And Nick shivered thinking about it.

"The Muskrats," said Daddy, "burrow under the snow in the side of a bank and there they sleep during the winter. But they do not sleep all the winter like some of the Animals do. They have to keep awake when danger is near and they have to be on the look-out that they are not trapped and caught.

"And from the way Mr. and Mrs. Muskrat planned everything they did, and from the way they escaped so many times from all the Men who were hunting them, I am quite sure they will live a long time. For if they escaped from some of the narrow adventures they have had, I am sure there are no more dangerous adventures that they cannot get away from!

"We can just imagine, too, how often Mr. and Mrs. Muskrat call each other beautiful now that it is winter and their fur is so perfect."

Bad Company.

Bad company is like a nail driven into a post, which, after the first and second blow, may be drawn out with little difficulty, but being once driven up to the head, the pincers cannot take hold to draw it out; this can be done only by the destruction of the wood.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for January 21

FIRST DISCIPLE OF THE LORD JESUS.

LESSON TEXT—John 1:35-49.
GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus saith unto him, follow me.—John 1:43.

The words "I see" or "behold" occur fifteen times in this first chapter. John was a witness to the Son of Man. This term, "Son of Man," occurs eighty times in the gospel. The words "Come and see," or their equivalents, occur nine times in this lesson. This is a great invitation lesson. It would be interesting if the scholars would tell what the voices are which say, "Come," and those which are urging them to "stay" away from God. Bethabara was probably two miles from the fords of the Jordan, where John baptized. Jesus was thirty years old, just entering upon his ministry. Tiberius Caesar was the emperor and Pontius Pilate the governor of Judea.

I. The Son of Man Attracts Men. (vv. 35-39) not by his ethical teachings nor alone by his works and his character, but what he was and inspired in others attracted men to Jesus (John 10:41). Crowds still gathered around the baptizer who "changed the hearts of men as by a spell." John, the Baptizer, brought terror to men. He broke through the crust of self-righteousness and indifference, and compelled men to see their need of forgiveness and of a new life, but the time had come when John must step aside, and Jesus "to increase," to begin his ministry. Four successive days are noticed in this chapter. Andrew (v. 40), and doubtless the apostle John, who wrote this account, were the two disciples (v. 35) to whom John, the Baptizer, speaks. It is interesting to note the different kinds of men who were attracted to Jesus; the aggressive Peter, the reflective Thomas, the practical Judas. He had what the souls of men needed, and they followed him. Aware of their questioning, Jesus turns to them with the question: "What think ye?" the first recorded words of his public ministry. This is a great testing question of every man's life. What is the aim and purpose of your life? Jesus, the kingdom of God, goodness, righteousness, usefulness or on the other hand selfishness, worldliness, success, ambition, money, pleasure? These disciples who had listened to this testimony of the baptizer, replied that they wanted to know where he dwelt, implying that they would like to talk with him and discuss the problems which were arising in their minds. Three steps of Christian experience are here suggested. These two disciples heard, they looked and they followed. Other steps must come shortly, but we must first look at Jesus as the Lamb, if we are to follow him as our example. We must believe what he has done (Rom. 3:25) before we can ask what would Jesus do or try to imitate him. It is by following that we demonstrate that we have really looked unto him and been saved.

II. The Son of Man Cares for His Own. (vv. 39-42). The instruction which they received from abiding with him impelled them, as we have already indicated, to go out and spread the good news. The greatest act in the life of Andrew was the bringing of his brother Peter to Jesus. Jesus changed Peter's name, and gave him a prophecy of his future life and career. He saw the possibilities within him, though it took much instruction, bitter experiences, prayer and long abiding with Jesus before he attained to those possibilities. It is this passage which gave rise to the organization of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which has adopted, first, the "Rule of Prayer," that of daily prayer for the spread of Christ's kingdom among young men; second, "The Rule of Service," to make an earnest effort each week to bring at least one young man within the hearing of the gospel of Jesus Christ. On the morrow Jesus would go forth to Galilee, that is to the East side, across the Jordan river, and on the way he found Philip. It was Philip who asked the question, "Show us the Father," and of whom the question was asked as to the resources sufficient to feed the hungering multitude (John 6:5). John, the Evangelist, alone tells us about Philip. Philip saw not only the resources of Jesus, but he saw a union of the law of the prophets (v. 45) in this Jesus, and therefore could and did invite his brother to Jesus.

Christianity would soon fill the earth if Christians would put forth the personal effort here suggested.

Nathaniel (v. 46) repeated a proverb of the country, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Philip's reply was: "Come and see," and to his amazement Jesus reveals not only his character but his supernatural power; whereupon Nathaniel's reply was: "Thou art the Son of God, the King of Israel" (v. 49). Jesus, seeing his faith, promised that he should see still greater things (vv. 50, 51).

Everybody in this lesson who found Jesus seemed to go at once for some one else, and though some were sceptical, yet their scepticism ended, even as Nathaniel's, in following him.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

A Private Matter.

"What is that Miss Yowler singing?" asked father.

"'I'm Falling in Love With Someone,'" answered daughter.

"Well, there are a lot of gossips in this neighborhood. If that's the way she feels she ought to keep it to herself."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET.

A well known actress gives the following recipe for gray hair: To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

Waste of Energy.

Clarence announced his coming by a series of howls. "Oh, my finger, my finger!" he said.

"Poor little finger," mother cooed. "How did you hurt it?"

"With the hammer."

"When?"

"A long time ago," Clarence sobbed.

"But I didn't hear you cry."

"I didn't cry then; I thought you were out," said Clarence.

Few Now Care to Walk.

It is hardly too much to say that the automobile as she is at present driven has made walking for pleasure or walking for health—walking of every sort, in fact, except mere pavement strolling or hurried, rabbitlike dashes for the shelter of the nearest trolley car—practically impossible, a source of annoyance and perpetual discomfort instead of a pleasure.—Exchange.

Truthful Excuse.

"The sheriff caught his young assistant writing love letters in business hours today."

"What did the young fellow say when he was taxed with doing so?"

"Said he was not shirking his duty as they were writs of attachment."

Wrong Place.

"I see where some scientist is going to the Canary islands to study the psychology of the ape."

"Well, this is the first time I ever knew the ape was a singing bird."

Pressing a Proverb.

"Never count your chickens before they're hatched."

"I did worse than that," commented the Chicago market operator. "I tried to corner the entire egg supply."

Diplomacy.

When Work Is Hard

That kidney troubles are so common is due to the strain put upon the kidneys in so many occupations, such as:

Jarring and jolting on railroads, etc.

Cramp and strain as in barbering, moulding, heavy lifting, etc.

Exposure to changes of temperature in iron furnaces, refrigerators, etc.

Dampness as in tanneries, quarries, mines, etc.

Inhaling poisonous fumes in painting, printing and chemical shops.

Doan's Kidney Pills are fine for strengthening weak kidneys.

An Indiana Case

George W. McCrary, W. Fourth St., Paoli, Ind., says: "My back was so sore and lame, I could hardly lift anything. The kidney secretions were highly colored and passed too often day and night. I took a great deal of medicine, but steadily grew worse until I tried Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me and I give them the credit for saving my life."

She Was Shopping.

She had been sitting in the furniture shop for nearly two hours, inspecting the stock of linoleums. Roll after roll the perspiring assistant brought out, but still she seemed dissatisfied. From her dress he judged her to be a person of wealth, and thought it likely she would have a good order to give. When at last he had shown her the last roll he paused in despair.

"I'm very sorry, madam," he said apologetically, "but if you could wait I could get some more pieces from the factory. Perhaps you would call again."

The prospective customer gathered her belongings together and rose from the chair.

"Yes, do," she said, with a gracious smile, "and ask them to send you one or two with very small designs, suitable for putting in the bottom of a canary's cage."—Chicago Journal.

PILE SUFFERERS

Can Avoid the Pain and Expense of an Operation

There is no more annoying and embarrassing disease immaginable than Piles. It causes suffering to thousands of people who can find no relief in the remedies ordinarily used; who fear the pain and serious after effects frequently accompanying an operation, and in many instances cannot afford the expense of such an operation, which involves not only high surgical and hospital bills, but loss of time during convalescence. To Pile sufferers we offer quick and possibly permanent relief in

OPPORTUNITIES THAT ARE MISSED

Why Wait? Why Not Go to Western Canada Now?

The writer has frequently heard the remark that "after the war we will go to Western Canada." It does not occur to those making the remark that if they wish to secure lands in Western Canada, whether by homestead or purchase, the best time to go is now. After the war the welcome will be just as hearty as ever, but the chances are that land values will increase and today homesteads are plentiful and land is reasonable in price. There is no question about what the land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will do, what it will give under proper cultivation.

Farmers in Western Canada are paying for their land holdings with the proceeds of last year's crop. That this is no idle statement may be gleaned from the three following items, which are picked out at random:

"In the spring of 1916 a half-section of land was offered for sale at $17.00 per acre. There were 105 acres of summer-fallow, which because the owner could not at the time find a buyer, were seeded to wheat. A yield of 40 bushels per acre, 4,200 bushels all told, grading No. 1, was obtained. The price the day the grain was sold (which was very early in the season, before grain prices advanced to round about $2.00) was $1.60, which brought the handsome total of $6,720.00. Three hundred and twenty acres at $17.00 equals $5,440.00, so that a buyer, by placing less than half of the whole under crop, would have made a profit of $1,280.00."—Robson Messenger, Robson, Sask.

"That the 'Indiana Boys' farm this year raised sufficient crop to pay for the land, all the machinery and all overhead expenses as well as make a handsome profit, is the information given by N. B. Davis, the manager. The wheat yield was over 22,000 bushels. Of twelve cars already sold, nine graded No. 1, and Mr. Davis has sold over 2,000 bushels locally for seed at $2.00. Naturally, when he gets to Indiana he will be a big booster for Alberta."—Bassano Mail, Bassano, Alta.

"Oscar Castalor, who bought land at Blusson after the crop had been put in last spring, for $3,800.00, has threshed 3,900 bushels of wheat, which is worth at present prices about $7,500.00. He refused an offer of $5,000.00 for the land after the crop had been taken off."—Lethbridge Herald, Lethbridge, Alta.

Reports from the wheat fields are highly encouraging and show that the wheat crop of many farmers in Western Canada was highly satisfactory.

Coblenz, Sask.—W. A. Rose has threshed an average of 33 bushels per acre and 83 bushels of oats.

Gleichen, Alberta.—Up to date 237,812 bushels of grain have been received by local elevators, of which nearly 180,000 bushels were wheat. Seventy-one cars of grain have already been shipped.

Stoop Creek, Sask.—James McRae has threshed 5,400 bushels of grain, 2,000 bushels of which were wheat, grading No. 1 Northern. One field averaged 44 bushels per acre, and a large field of oats averaged 83 bushels.

If information as to the best location is required, it will be gladly furnished by any Canadian Government Agent, whose advertisement appears elsewhere.—Advertisement.

No Precaution Neglected.

The little son of a clergyman recently appeared at breakfast with distinct evidences of a hastily made toilet.

"Why, Edmund," his mother remonstrated, "I believe you forgot to brush your hair."

"I was in such a hurry to get to school," he explained.

"I hope you didn't forget to say your prayers?" she asked anxiously.

"No, sirree!" was the emphatic assurance; "that's one thing I never forget. Safety first!"—Harper's Magazine.

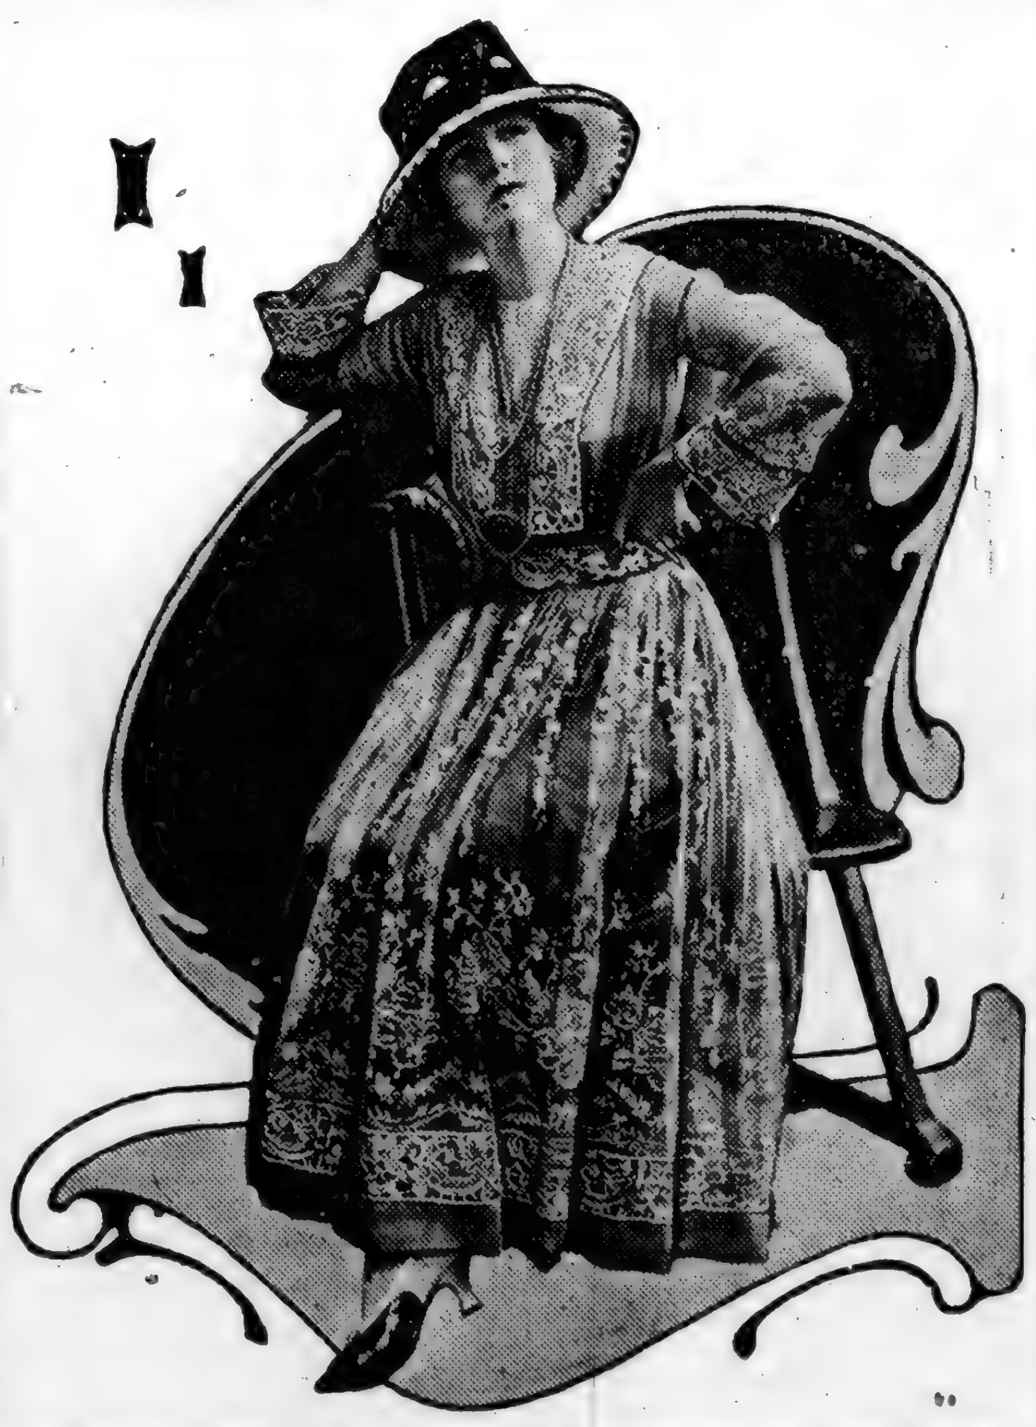
Worn Where Summer Smiles



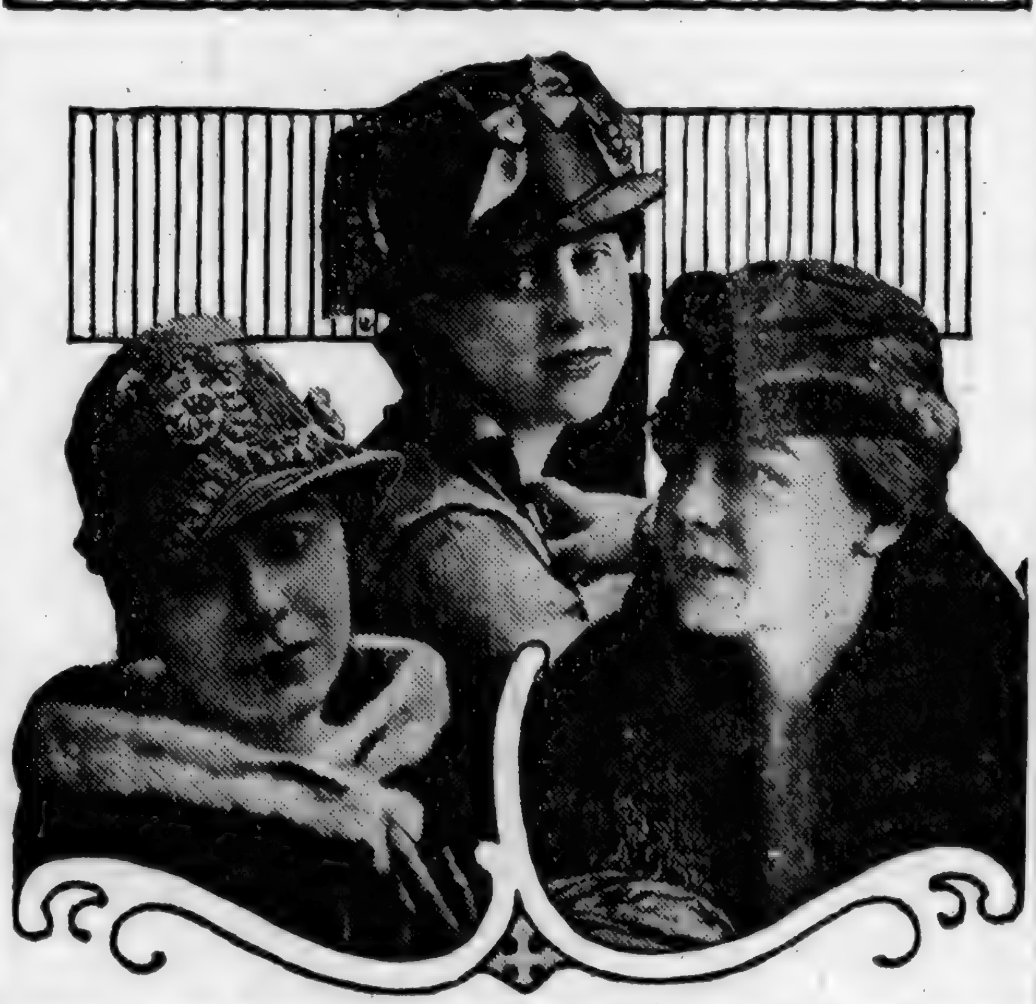
The simplest styles are the wisest choice in designs, whenever handsome lace or rich embroidery is to be made into a frock. Designs in the lace or embroidery must not be marred or interfered with, and a plain skirt or bodice shows them up to best advantage. It's a case of painting the rose and adorning the lily, when they are tucked or shirred or draped or otherwise thrown out of balance.

Embroidered net, chiffon, and lace are combined to make the lovely frock that is pictured here. The net forms the skirt, which is bordered by lace and finished at the bottom with a fold of chiffon. Lace makes the narrow, loose belt headed by a metallic ribbon. It finishes the sleeves, which are of net, and borders the bodice at the front. Wherever it is set on to the net in the bodice a metallic ribbon joins them.

The bodice opens over a small chemisette of chiffon, and the frock is worn over a skirt of striped silk and a low underbodice of silk, which repeats the colors in the skirt. In the model the underskirt and bodice are in black and white and the ribbon used is silver gauze.

The low shoes and the hat are both in black and white, and the entire costume is one more triumph for the artist who knows how to use this brilliant contrast. It is nearly always good and in this instance it is superb.

Millinery of Two Minds



Two hats that do not commit themselves to any particular season or clime, and one that announces its devotion to winter, are shown in the group of new millinery pictured here. It would seem like beginning the winter all over again to invest in winter millinery at this late date. So, if occasion demands something new in the way of headwear, the ever-ready lady betakes herself to some smart millinery establishment. There she views the new things made in anticipation of the spring for those who journey south to meet it.

There she will find hats of satin, hats of silk, hats of combinations of three fabrics with straw braids, and hats of many other things. They are not the hats of summertime, but will not find themselves out of place under sunny skies. Neither are they winter hats, yet they are not too airy and fragile to face snow flurries. They are hats of the demi-season, and you may wear a fur scarf or no scarf at all with them.

At the left a hat of nattier blue faille silk is shown, embellished with black silk soutache braid and lovely little handmade roses of silk. They are in a soft rose color and are set flat against the hat. A lot of fine handwork makes this an expensive bit of luxurious headwear, but its excuse for extravagance is its loveliness.

At the center of the group is a hat of black satin, a simple narrow-brimmed shape. Its claim to originality rests upon the deep flounce of black lace that falls from the top of the crown. It falls over a collar of silver ribbon, and terminates at each side of the front. The collar is finished with the simplest and most self-satisfied of little bows, which asserts its high quality, perched at the front of the crown. The owner of such a hat will bless the milliner who created it, for it can be worn almost anywhere.

A small, quiet little turban is draped with soft satin and finished at the edge with a band of fur. One little ostrich plume has the temerity to curl and nod squarely at the front. This little hat is meant for wintry weather, and is modest in design and price, so that it is not much of an extravagance even though it be the last of several predecessors in the present season.

Julia Bottomley

For the Little Ones.

Encourage the child to wait on itself and you will be saved much work and will be giving the child an education which it will never be able to value until it has reached years of discretion. There are so many little helps that can be offered to make work attractive to children. For instance, a successful way to teach a child to put its soiled clothes out of sight is to make for its own use a little laundry bag of some cheerful color and on it embroider the word "Laundry." Hang it on a peg low enough for the child to reach and you will not have to remind the child more than two or three times of its duty.

If you cannot afford to have nursery furniture for the child's room, you should at least let the child share a bureau or dressing table with someone so that it can be taught quite young to put hair ribbons, handkerchiefs, etc., in a certain place. Let it understand that the space reserved is all its very own.

I called in doctors who told me to try different things but they did not cure my pains. One day my husband came home and said, 'Why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash?' Well, I got them and took about 10 bottles of Vegetable Compound and could feel myself regaining my health. I also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and it has done me a great deal of good. Any one coming to my house who suffers from female troubles or Change of Life, I tell them to take the Pinkham remedies. There are about 20 of us here who think the world of them."—Mrs. FLORENCE ISELLA, Box 197, North Haven, Conn.

Woman Soldier Lived to Be 108.

There is a tombstone in St. Nicholas' churchyard, Brighton, to a woman soldier. It is erected to the memory of Phoebe Hessel, who was born in Stepney in the year 1713, and states:

"She served for many years as a private soldier in the Fifth Regiment of Foot in different parts of Europe, and in the year 1754 fought under the command of the duke of Cumberland at the battle of Fontenoy, where she received a bayonet wound in the arm. Her long life, which commenced in the time of Queen Anne, extended to the reign of George IV, by whose munificence she received comfort and support in her last years. She died at Brighton, where she had long resided, December 12, 1821, aged one hundred and eight years."

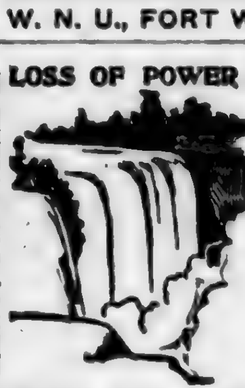
The New Method

(BY L. W. BOWER, M. D.)

Backache of any kind is often caused by kidney disorder, which means that the kidneys are not working properly Poisonous matter and uric acid accumulate within the body in great abundance over-working the sick kidneys, hence the congestion of blood causes backache in the same manner as a similar congestion in the head causes headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish, irritable, have spots appearing before the eyes, bags under the lids, and lack ambition to do things.

The latest and most effective means of overcoming this trouble, is to eat sparingly of meat, drink plenty water between meals and take a single Anuric tablet before each meal for a while.

Simply ask your favorite druggist for Anuric. If you have lumbago, rheumatism, gout, dropsy, begin immediately with this novel treatment.



LOSS OF POWER and vital force follow loss of flesh, or emaciation. These come from impoverished blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery enriches the blood, stops the waste of strength and tissue, and builds up healthy flesh.

Thin, pale, puny and scrofulous children are made plump, rosy and robust by the "Discovery." They like it too.

In recovering from "Grippe," or in convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, or other wasting diseases, it speedily and surely invigorates and builds up the whole system. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, rouses every organ into natural action, and brings back health and strength.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. Easy to take as candy.

Each husband choosing his wife as a partner all were seated at small tables, and after the first course, Mr. C. A. Patterson in a clever poem "Bug Finish" warned us of the enemies in our camp—the Germs and Microbes in the delectable food we had eaten and that "A little bug would get us some day," but even that did not deter us from visiting the Cafeteria again. Between courses the ladies responded to roll call with various clever toasts (or roasts) on man. Later the party repaired to the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. B Leighty for the program proper. It has been said that "Anticipation is the greatest joy in life." But the excellent program rendered by the husbands proved Realization to be even greater.

The great "hit" of the evening was the Orchestra under the leadership of Mr. F. M. Thornton with the Harmonica, Mr. C. A. Woodcox, Baritone; Mr. J. C. Hull, Violin; and Mrs. Lora Leighty, as Pianist. The rendition of "Georgia Camp Meetin" and "Arkansaw Trav'ler" deserve opicial mention. We refrain from making further comment on these musicians as they are young in their chosen profession and may be over-whelmed with applications for engagements.

The L. L. C. made no mistake when they placed this quotation on their Club program,

All men are dust,
But our are Gold-dust.

HIS IS GAY LIFE

Grocery Boy Has Charming Prospect, It Would Seem.

Lad Who Bounces In and Out of Other People's Kitchens May Be Happy—Things to Divert Inquiring Youth.

Life of every sort is a pleasant affair to those who are interested in the people they meet, interested, perhaps, to the point of curiosity; interested, at least, to the point of forgetting their own precious troubles. A grocery boy, who is just a grocery boy and nothing but a grocery boy, considers himself a most unfortunate youth. He must get up in the dark and feed and pretend to groom an unwilling horse. He must fill kerosene cans or empty potato barrels or grind coffee or run errands or deliver groceries to impatient customers the whole day long and far into the dark of the evening. His feet get numb and cold and he is forever carrying about good things to eat with his own stomach complaining of neglect. It is, you see, a difficult place that the grocery boy has in life, a place that may be looked upon as one of the most unhappy and uninteresting variety.

Nevertheless, there is, for the grocery boy who is interested in the people he meets, interested to the point of self-forgetfulness, and a healthy curiosity, a charming prospect, remarks a writer in the Indianapolis News. You can imagine for yourself how entertaining it would be to go bouncing into everybody's kitchen at the most unexpected times, to know whether or not this woman had washed her last night's dishes, and whether or not this one had scrubbed her floor, ignoring, of course, the fact that if she has scrubbed it your clumsy feet are tracking it up again in the most awful way. Think what a treat it must be, no matter how hungry and complaining a stomach you have, to smell the variety of smells, to see all the pots a-boiling, to know what everybody in the neighborhood is going to have for supper, to glimpse the table in the lighted dining room all spread and waiting for the head of the family to come home.

A grocery boy that is in the mood to enjoy these things is not troubled by the fact that the other head of the family is scolding him and the grocery and things in general because he was not there an hour or so ago. He is off with a slam to the next house to see what they are having for supper. He knows where the good cooks live, and where the cold boiled ham and potato chip eaters dwell. You may consider it likely that grocery boys grow weary of the sight of food, but food on the grocery shelves or in grocery wagons is never the same as found on the stove or on its way to the supper table. It may seem to you an unhappy thing to be fed only by sights and smells of other folk's suppers, but it is a very happy thing to go banging in and out of everybody's back doors, being warmed by everybody's cheerful kitchens and by the realization that in every house in town there is going to be some sort of supper. And then, of course, every grocery boy realizes that there was never such a cook as his mother and that after all the best supper of them all is waiting and warm for him.

Resolutions of Respect.

Green be his memory, in the Order's heart,
He loved so well, through all his true life's span;
Bless'd be his rest, who acted well his part,
Who honor'd God in doing good to man.

And when a few more days are flown,
And the last lingering sand is gone,---
With Jesus nigh;---
How blessed then to lay me down and die."

In Memory of Brother Samuel L. Steward, who died Jany. 6th., 1917.

Once again the Supreme Chancellor of the Universe hath summoned, through death, a Brother Knight, from the labors of the Castle here to the joys of the beautiful Castle in the New Jerusalem. He has completed his labors of Friendship in helping his fellow brother; of Charity in relieving the cries of the distressed, and in Benevolence in ministering at the bedside of the sick. As a recompense of his service under the tri-colored banner, he has received the plaudit, "well done," from the Great Father.

AND WHEREAS, The all-wise and merciful Father has called our beloved and respected Brother home; and he having been a true and faithful Brother of our Mystic Order, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That Spencerville Lodge, No. 321, Knights of Pythias, of Indiana, in testimony of our loss tenders to the family of our deceased Brother our sincere condolence in this deep affliction, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family.

Clarence Hart had the misfortune Sunday morning to loose one of his horses. When he went to the barn he found the horse standing on 3 legs and calling in B. E. Widney, they found that its right leg behind was broken off. No marks of any kind were found and just how it happened, no one knows. The loss is considerable as the team matched in fine shape. They killed the horse Sunday.

IF

you are a business man, if you are a professional man, if you are employed at a daily wege, make up your mind to deposit weekly a certain sum of money in the bank. You'll be surprised how the sum will grow. Cash in bank gingers up the man who has it there. He has more confidence in himself. The business man is ready for a dull season. He is ready for an opportunity.

So is the professional man. The man who is working for a daily wage and who hasn't any money in bank frequently is fearful of a loss of his situation. He does not work as well or with the confidence in himself as does the man with something laid aside for a rainy day.

Glando Pine is a splendid cough medicine that can be prepared at home at a saving of about $2.00 to the pint. It is pleasant to take and contains no narcotics or habit-forming drugs. It keeps indefinitely. It can be used satisfactorily where any cough remedy is needed. It can be safely given to babies ten days old or adults ninety years of age.

Get three ounces--50 cents worth--of Glando Pine, with full directions for preparing, and you will have a cough remedy that is excelled by none.

For WHOOPING COUGH add an ounce of fluid extract of chestnut leaves.

Mr. A. T. Sherer, the owner of a machine shop at Haviland, Ohio, says: "My son had a severe cough for several years. After doctoring and trying a number of cough remedies, we began to think his case a hopeless one. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. The first bottle relieved him. He continued its use until he was cured. He is now well, and I believe Glando Pine saved his life." For sale by Druggists.

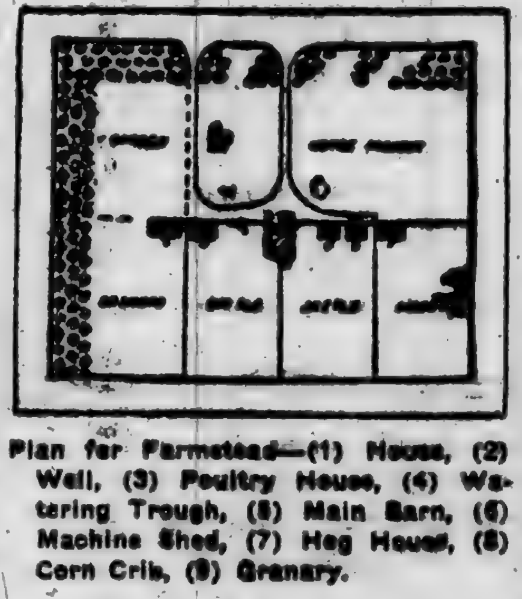
MODEL PLAN FOR FARMSTEAD

Sketch Shows Suitable Arrangement of Building, Windbreaks, Etc., on Small Farm.

In response to a query The Farmer gives the following plan for placing buildings on a small farm:

We submit herewith a sketch showing a suitable arrangement for buildings, windbreaks, etc., on a farm that must face the north. A south or east face is very much to be preferred if it can be had. We believe it is better to have the farmstead next to the road, about half way from either corner, rather than to have it set back in the middle of the farm.



Plan for Farmstead—(1) House, (2) Well, (3) Poultry House, (4) Watering Trough, (5) Main Barn, (6) Machine Shed, (7) Hog House, (8) Corn Crib, (9) Granary.

COVERING FOR MANURE HEAP

If Protection of Some Kind Is Not Given Valuable Nitrogen and Nitrates Are Lost.

The manure heap is a scene of bacterial activities. When it lies very long the nitrogen is transformed into ammonia and escapes. When it escapes it is gone forever.

Some of the manure changes into nitrates, and these are washed away and lost if the manure heap is uncovered.

Nitrates are soluble, and when they are washed away the farm loses all their value. A part of the nitrates are attacked by bacteria and become nitrogen gas.

Seed corn must be stored in a dry place where it is well enough protected to insure it from severe freezing. Lofts of stables are not always dry.

Next Week Is Farmers' WEEK.

Two Big Days-Thursday and Friday-Big Program.

February 1st. and 2nd., will be the two red-letter days of the year for the farmers of the South-eastern part of DeKalb when the Annual Farmers' Institute will be held at Widney's Opera House in St. Joe This institute has gained a state wide reputation for its excellent programs. All who attended last year thought that the program was about as good as could be made but the management tells us that the meeting of next week will outclass anything in the institute line ever held in this part of the county. The event will be featured by practical demonstrations, playlets, stereopticon lectures, and addresses by noted authorities and speakers of the state; along with this there will be some remarkably good music. The "Efficient Kitchen" demonstration by the Rural House wives Club mentioned in the last issue of The News will be something new and original The merchants have co-operated with the club in furnishing a practical kitchen which will be right on the stage. The ladies will act a playlet which will demonstate the cause and desirability of the arrangement No home maker can afford to miss this number.

Prof. A. G Phillips, in charge of the Poultry Department of Purdue will speak on important phases of farm poultry. He is rapidly becoming recognized, all over the country as an authority on this subject.

Dr. H. L. Frye is fortunately able to come and deliver his lecture on "Hog Cholera" He has addressed thousands of the farmers of the United States on this important subject. He will illustrate his lecture with pictures

James Kline, who has been a hired man, a renter and now the owner of a large stock farm, will represent the extension department along with Mrs. H J. Deller, a farmer's wife, who beleives in farm life, farm children and all things that stand "For a Better Community"

The Davis Quartette will have charge of the first evening's program. Entertainment is their specialty and they never fail to please. "More Precious than Gold" will be the title of the lecture to be given by C. M. Graham, on the second evening Mr. Graham is a clever wit and philosopher.

The High Schools expect to "open your eyes" with exhibits of the work they have been doing this year. The Common Schools will have displays of interest to every one. All indications point to a dandy Corn and Bread Show Everybody seems to want to help make the show a howling success and are going to bring in exhibits. This is to be a Farmers' event and let us see the Farmers show their colors The town folk are going to help. They beleive in the Farms of this community and want to do their part The town ladies think they can bake as good bread as anybody and they are going to try to prove it at the Bread Show. Let all work together and "Whoop Her Up", Thursday and Friday of next week.

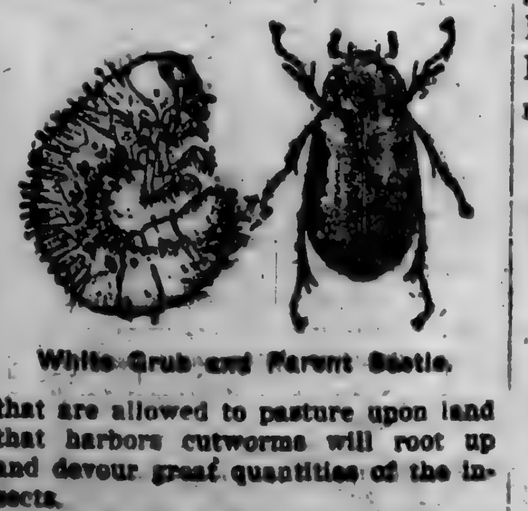
KILLING WHITE GRUBS

Plowing in Late Fall and During Winter Will Help.

According to Their Life Cycles Pests Will Be Abundant Next Year, Causing Much Damage to Various Farm Crops.

Every effort should be made to prevent destruction by white grubs, which, according to their life cycles, will be abundant in 1917 and 1918, causing damage to timothy and small grains in 1917 and to corn in 1918.

Late fall and winter plowing will destroy many of the hibernating cutworms as well as such insect pests as white grubs. This, therefore, should be practiced when earlier plowing is impracticable. Farm poultry trained to follow the plow are also a great value in destroying the pest, and hogs that are allowed to pasture upon land that harbors cutworms will root up and devour great quantities of the insects.



White Grub and Parent Beetle.

In most cases the moths lay their eggs in the late summer or early fall in fields which are covered with grass or weeds. The worms hatch in a few weeks, feed upon this vegetation until cold weather, and then hibernate as partly-grown caterpillars. When the infested field is broken up and planted to corn or other wide-row crops in the spring, the worms are deprived of their natural food and are compelled to attack the newly-planted crop. They continue to consume an enormous amount of food until they have attained their full growth, and change to the pupal or resting stage in late June or early July.

I Am The State

James H. Shaw delighted a good audience with his lecture, "I Am the State" Wednesday evening. While he had been advertised to speak on Ireland, the fact was news to him, so with a brief discussion on Ireland, he passed to the lecture named above. Mr. Shaw proved that he is a master of his subject by the way he held his hearers in wrapt attention for one hour and fifty minutes. At no time did the audience show weariness or lack of interest, but each listener followed every detail of the discussion of the problems confronting our government today. That Mr. Shaw is a 100% lecturer was attested by the fact that every person who heard him two years ago was present on Wednesday night.

He Was Just Lost

Rev. J. C. Coons had a little trouble getting to his appointment at Fairview. Sunday evening The night was very dark and as he turned west at Saylor's Corners his horse turned in a wide circle going into an open field at the south of the road and came out in front of the David Poper home. He recognised the place and started on the right road once more, this time his horse turned into the lane at the Saylor home and went to the barn. The reverend gentleman called for help and Mr. Saylor came out and started him on the right road and he finally reached the place he had started for—Fairview, without any more trouble.

It was announced at Washington that Dr. Cary T. Grayson, friend and private physician of President Wilson, was honored for four years of successfully keeping the president in good trim by a promotion to medical director in the navy with the rank of rear admiral.

Senator Wadsworth introduced a resolution in the senate at Washington directing the army engineering chief to grant permission to the Woman's Titanic Memorial association to erect a Titanic memorial on public grounds.

* * *

State department officials at Washington said that while Ambassador Gerard had been requested to send on a report of his speech and has done so, the report did not contain an offer of resignation, as reported from Cologne.

* * *

The president sent a special message to congress at Washington formally announcing the death of Admiral Dewey and paying tribute to the dead naval hero by saying that "the people and the government of the United States will always rejoice to perpetuate his name in all honor and affection."

* * *

The United States government at Washington has been forced to go to England to secure its 16 and 14-inch shells for the navy. The navy department awarded to Hatfields, Limited, of London, contracts for 3,000 16-inch shells, at $514 each, and 4,500 14-inch shells, at $350 each, delivery in 16 months.

* * *

Sovereignty over the Danish West Indies, after half a century of negotiation, passed to the United States with the exchange of ratifications of the purchase treaty by Secretary Lansing and Danish Minister Brun at Washington.

* * *

Sherman L. Whipple of Boston, a Democrat and a noted criminal lawyer, was invited by the rules committee at Washington to act as counsel in the peace note leak investigation, which, it now appears, will extend deeply into Wall street stock speculation.

Indorsement by the Vatican of President Wilson's peace efforts was transmitted to the president at Washington, as the administration sought to work out the next move in the peace negotiations.

APPORTIONMENT BILL IS KILLED

Measure to Change Districts Is Defeated.

VOTE ON BILL 24 TO 22

Democrats Plan to Oppose Governor's Program for the Abolition of a Number of State Elective Offices.

Indianapolis.—The first roll call on which theer was a division along political lines in the senate came when the committee on congressional apportionment made a favorable report for the passage of the bill introduced by Senator Lanz to change the First, Second and Third districts, and which would make the Second district securely Republican. When the report was read in the senate the question was on the adoption of the favorable report. Twenty-four Democrats voted against it and 22 Republicans voted for it. Thus the report was not adopted and the bill was killed. It was evident that the Democratic members were better prepared for a vote than were the Republicans.

There has been some talk among Democratic senators about a plan by which they hope to prevent the passage of Republican party measures. The senate contains 25 Republicans and 25 Democratic members, and Lieutenant Governor Bush (Rep.) has announced that he will cast the deciding vote in all cases where the vote is a tie, including the vote on the passage of bills. In order that there may be no tie votes, it is said that a plan has been quietly laid by the Democrats to have one Democratic senator absent each day. If they carry out this plan it will mean that no Republican measure can receive more than 25 votes, while there would be 24 against it. There would be no tie vote.

Democratic representatives, who are in the minority in the house, held a caucus and determined that they would stand together on political measures, but that they would vote as individuals on all other measures. They say that the program of Governor Goodrich for the abolition of a number of state elective offices and making them appointive does not meet with their approval, because they believe the people should have as large a voice as possible in the selection of public officials, and therefore the Democrats will oppose the governor's plan to abolish these offices. The plan to call a constitutional convention appears to be gaining ground and members of both parties in the legislature are saying that this bill probably will be passed. The bill proposes that delegates to a constitutional convention should be elected next fall and that the convention should be held next winter.

The senate passed the bill introduced by Senator Thornton for the purchase by the state of the old statehouse at Corydon at a price of $[illegible],000. If this bill is passed by the house the state will take the old statehouse and transform it into a museum and a memorial in connection with the state's centennial celebration.

Print Fewer Copies.

A decision to decrease the number of copies of the acts of the legislature of 1917 to 22,000 copies was reached at a meeting of the state printing board, composed of the governor, Edward Jackson, secretary of state; Otto Klauss, auditor of state, and Phil Zoercher, reporter of the supreme court.

More than 26,000 copies of the acts of the 1915 legislature were printed, and of these almost 5,000 copies are at the statehouse, undistributed.

About 19,000 copies are distriuted after each session of the legislature in the 92 counties of Inidana. The remaining copies printed are offered for sale at 50 cents a volume.

Because of the high cost of paper, the publishing of the acts of the present legislature will cost considerably more than heretofore, and it was the desire of the board to estimate the number of volumes actually needed for distribution and sale. As many as 30,000 copies have been printed after former sessions of the general assembly.

No change in the distribution of copies to the counties or in the allotment to each county will be made, it was announced.

Mileage for Senators.

Members of the legislature receive ten cents a mile for traveling from their homes to Indianapolis and back when they attend the session of the assembly. Of course it does not cost them ten cents a mile railroad fare, but they get it just the same. The senate committee on mileage made its report, and the report was adopted by the senate, allowing the senators the following sums for mileage:

Pinkney S. Armstrong, Owensville, $67.20; Andrew H. Beardsley, Elkhart, $56; Ohmig Bird, For Wayne, $56.40; Robert Bracken, Frankfort, $18.80; Walter S. Chambers, Newcastle, $18; D. Frank Culbertson, Vincennes, $46; Lem P. Dobyns, Greensburg, $19.20; Thomas Dorrell, Greenwood, $5.60; Edward P. Elsner, Seymour, $25.20; Charles A. Erskine, Evansville, $68; James R. Fleming, Portland, $33.20; Willard Gemmill, Marion, $28.80; Thomas Grant, Lowell, $56.80; William T. Green, Albion, $64; Charles A. Hagerty, South Bend, $56; G. H. Hazen, Boonville, $79.60; Joseph P. Hemphill, Rising Sun, $42; Joseph M. Hirsch, Cannelton, $82.80; Thomas J. Hudgins, Martinsville, $12; James H. Humphreys, Linton, $34; Rowland H. Jackson, Versailles, $40.80; Edward B. James, Dana, $30; Dwight M. Kinder, Gary, $70; Jacob Kolsem, Terre Haute, $29.20; George L. Laney, Rockville, $26; Charles W. Lanz, Bedford, $34.80; Walter McConaha, Richmond, $27.20; Arthur D. McKinley, Muncie, $22; Marion H. Maston, South Whitley, $46; W. S. Mercer, Peru, $30; Edward F. Mezger, Logansport, $31.20; James J. Nedjl, Whiting, $68; E. A. Norman, Hope, $24.80; James Porter, Washington, $57.60; John G. Reidelbach, Winamac, $40.80; Alva O. Reser, Lafayette, $25.60; Austin Retherford, Anderson, $15.20; Charles O. Signs, North Manchester, $40; Abram Simmons, Bluffton, $39.60; Oscar B. Smith, Knox, $50; Gabriel R. Summers, South Bend, $56; Michael C. Thornton, New Albany, 46; Glenn Van Auken, Auburn, $61.60; William M. White, Crafordsville, $17.60.

Senators English, McCray, Negley, Robinson, Spaan and Wolfson, all of Marion county, received no allowance for mileage.

STATE NEWS BREVITIES

Jeffersonville.—The dock of the Louisville and Jeffersonville Ferry company here, which was sunk by ice two weeks ago, was torn from its moorings by the high water, and was carried over the falls.

Rockport.—After biting ten other dogs, several hogs and horses, a dog was killed near Grandview, and an examination has shown it had rabies. People in that neighborhood are carefully watching all stock.

Indiana Crop Estimates.

The following table, prepared by George C. Bryant, field agent for the bureau of crop estimates, United States department of agriculture, shows the estimated production of specified farm products in 1916, by counties, in thousands of bushels (i. e. 000 omitted), based on acreage figures for 1915 furnished by the state bureau of statistics:

State Gets Fees.

Dr. A. F. Nelson, state veterinarian, will turn back to the state $11,000 in fees collected from fertilizer companies of the state. Both Governor Ralston and Governor-elect Goodrich, it was learned, upheld the contention of the state board of accounts that the money should be put in the state treasury.

New Incorporations.

Home Lawn Mineral Springs company, Martinsville, has authorized the issuance of $37,500 additional preferred stock.

Farmers' State bank of Roanoke has increased its capital from $25,000 to $30,000.

Winona Telephone company, Plymouth, has increased its preferred stock from $100,000 to $200,000.

Century Electric company, Indianapolis, has dissolved.

The Darnell Motor Sales company, Indianapolis, has dissolved.

State Happenings

Sullivan. — Dave Criss, a painter, is suffering from smallpox. He is under a strict quarantine.

Logansport.—Fire believed to have been of incendiary origin destroyed 12 box cars in the Panhandle yards here.

Anderson. — A jury in the circuit court acquitted Lester Holman, twenty-six, who was accused of mistreating a fifteen-year-old girl.

South Bend.—Joseph Hool, a herb doctor, who learned his profession while a captive of Indians for three years in the thirties, died here, aged ninety-nine years.

Sullivan.—Arthur Dixon and Benton Grantham, each thirteen years old, of Terre Haute, who had run away, were found at Farmersburg by Town Marshal Bedwell and were returned to their homes.

Indianapolis.—The federal grand jury extended its probe of election law violations to Evansville. It was learned that 30 politicians of Evansville has been subpenaed to appear before the jury.

Hammond.—Kenneth Farnham of Boston pleaded guilty to the embezzlement of $1,100 from the American Glue company of Hammond and was sentenced to from one to five years in prison by Judge V. S. Reiter.

Evansville. — William P. Miedreich, former representative from Vanderburg county, has been appointed a special justice of the peace here for 60 days to take the place of Benjamin Morris, regular justice, who is sick.

Richmond.—The Wayne county board of commissioners is considering a plan for the erection of a monument in honor of Oliver P. Morton, Indiana's war governor, at his birthplace at Centerville, six miles west of here.

Petersburg.—Henry and O'Brien Milry were grading a road east of here and unearthed the skeleton of a man who had been buried more than a half century. Old nails were found near the skeleton, but the coffin had disappeared entirely.

South Bend. — Julius Neland, three, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Neland, died at St. Joseph's hospital of burns he suffered when he fell into a tub of boiling water. The baby was playing in a room where his mother was doing a washing.

Columbus.—When a smokehouse at the W. T. Hager farm, near Clifford, caught fire, Hager telephoned to Clifford, and the operator there called every person who had an automobile. Help arrived quickly and the Hager home was saved, although the heat broke the window's and blistered the paint.

Indianapolis.—Many negro men testified before the federal grand jury in its inquiry into the last election in Evansville. Officers of the Vanderburg county Republican committee also were called before the grand jury. The inquiry into the Evansville election probably will occupy the time of the grand jury for several days.

Indianapolis.—The members of the legislature considered the appeal of David Bayer, the Fort Branch leper, who made a public statement in which he asked the legislature to defeat a bill to establish a state leper's home. He wishes to spend his declining days quarantined in his present home. Dr. J. N. Hurty, state health officer, has recommended that the state care for him.

Indianapolis.—The National Anti-Suffrage association jumped into the fight to prevent the passage of a suffrage bill by the Indiana legislature. Most of the legislators were at their homes, but their desks were filled with antisuffragist literature. "This fight is only proof of our strength," said Mrs. Felix McWhirter, leader of the votes for women forces. "We are going to win.

Indianapolis.—The Panama canal graft cases were ended when the government dismissed indictments returned in July, 1915, against John Burke, former manager of the commissary department in the Canal zone, Ricardo Bermudes and Pascal Canavaggic. District Attorney Slack said the evidence of the government was used in suits in New York and found insufficient.

Franklin.—At the missionary conference of the Christian churches in Johnson county, held here, Greenwood was chosen for the 1917 conference. The following officers were elected: President, W. W. White, Union; vice president, Rev. Edgar Pettus, Greenwood; secretary, Livy Young, Franklin; superintendent Sunday schools, E. C. Crater, Edinburg; Christian Endeavor, Lester Sellers, Franklin; C. W. B. M., Miss Nellie Linton, Trafalgar; education, Rev. Carl Burkhart, Franklin. Rev. L. E. Sellers of Indianapolis, secretary of the temperance board of Christian churches in America, and Mrs. Louise Kelly of Waukegan, Ill., spoke Friday night.

Franklin.—Charles Golden, colored, who shot and killed his wife here, October 28, 1916, is on trial in the Johnson circuit court on a charge of murder.

Greencastle.—A petition is in circulation at Cloverdale to dissolve the town school corporation and to erect a joint township and town high school building costing about $40,000.

Lyons. — An epidemic of measles here is so widespread that almost every family is affected. A quarantine proved ineffectual and now all children are attending school who are able to be out.

The DESTROYING ANGEL

By Louis Joseph Vance

A new mystery develops in this installment of "The Destroying Angel." Whitaker finds much in Miss Fiske's manner to puzzle him and make him wonder if—well, read for yourself.

You will recall that Whitaker, returning to New York several years after his supposed death, discovers his wife, now a famous actress known as Sara Law, about to marry Drummond, his old partner. Drummond disappears, supposedly a suicide, and Sara, asking her husband to agree to a divorce, also drops out of sight. Whitaker, mysteriously assaulted, goes to the country home of his friend Martin Ember.

He makes the acquaintance of pretty Miss Fiske, a neighbor, finds spies are watching her, and follows her abductors when they kidnap her in a motor boat. Both crafts are wrecked on a reef. Whitaker and the girl are tossed upon an island lately abandoned.

The reminder had an effect singularly distressing. He turned a little faint, was seized with a slight sensation of giddiness, at the thought of food, so that he was glad of the catboat for support.

"Oh, you are!" Compassion thrilled her tone. "I'm so sorry. Come—if you can walk." She caught his hand as if to help him onward. "We can build a fire and have something hot; there's plenty of fuel."

"But—what did you do?"

"I—oh, I took my eggs au natural—barring some salt and pepper. I was in too much of a hurry to bother with a stove—"

"Why in a hurry?"

She made no answer for an instant. He turned to look at her, wondering. To his unutterable astonishment she not only failed to meet his glance, but tried to seem unconscious of it.

The admirable ease and gracious self-possession which he had learned to associate with her personality as inalienable traits were altogether gone, just then—obliterated by a singular, exotic attitude of constraint and diffidence, of self-consciousness. She seemed almost to shrink from his regard, and held her face a little averted from him, the full lips tense, lashes low and trembling upon her cheeks.

Halfway up to the farmhouse a memory shot through Whitaker's mind as startling as lightning streaking athwart a peaceful evening sky. He stopped with an exclamation that brought the girl beside him to a standstill with questioning eyes.

"But the others—!" he stammered.

"The others?" she repeated blankly.

"They—the men who brought you here—?"

Her lips tightened. She moved her head in slow negation.

"I have seen nothing of either of them."

Horror and pity filled him, conjuring up a vision of wild, raving waters, mad with blood-lust, and in their jaws, arms and heads helplessly whirling and tossing.

"Poor devils!" he muttered.

She said nothing. When he looked for sympathy in her face, he found it set and inscrutable.

He delayed another moment, thinking that soon she must speak, offer him some sort of explanation. But she remained uncommunicative. And he could not bring himself to seem anxious to pry into her affairs.

He took a tentative step onward. She responded instantly to the suggestion, but in silence.

The farmhouse stood on high ground, commanding an uninterrupted sweep of the horizon. As they drew near it, Whitaker paused and turned, narrowing his eyes as he attempted to read the riddle of the enigmatic, amber-tinted distances.

There was not a sail visible in all the blue cup of the sea.

"I don't know," said Whitaker slowly, as much to himself as to his companion. "It's odd . . . it passes me . . ."

"Can't you tell where we are?" she inquired anxiously.

"Not definitely. I know, of course, we must be somewhere off the south coast of New England. There are islands off the south coast of Massachusetts—a number of them: Nantucket, you know, and Martha's Vineyard. This might be either—only it isn't, because they're summer resorts. That"—he swept his hand toward the land in the northeast—"might be either, and probably is one of 'em. At the same time, it may be the mainland. I don't know."

"Then . . . then what are we to do?"

He looked round, shaking a dubious head. "Of course there's nothing like a flagpole here. We might nail a plank to the corner of the roof and a table cloth to that, I suppose."

"And build fires, by night?"

He nodded. "Best suggestion yet. I'll do that very thing tonight—after I've had a bite to eat."

She started impatiently away. "Oh, come, come! What am I thinking of, to let you stand there, starving by inches?"

They entered the house by the back door, finding themselves in the kitchen—that mean and commonplace assembly room of narrow and pinched lives. The immaculate cleanliness of decent, close poverty lay over it all like a blight. Whitaker busied himself immediately with the stove. There was a full woodbox near by; and within a very few minutes he had a brisk fire going. The woman had disappeared in the direction of the barn. She returned in good time with half a dozen eggs. Foraging in the pantry and cupboards, she brought to light a quantity of supplies; a side of bacon, flour, potatoes, sugar, tea, small stores of edibles in tins.

"I'm hungry again, myself," she declared, attacking the problem of simple cookery with a will and a confident air that promised much.

The aroma of frying bacon, the steam of brewing tea, were all but intolerable to an empty stomach. Whitaker left the kitchen hurriedly and, in an endeavor to control himself, made a round of the other rooms. There were two others on the ground floor; in the upper story, four small bedchambers; above them an attic, gloomy and echoing. Nowhere did he discover anything to moderate the impression made by the kitchen. It was all impeccably neat, desperately bare.

Depressed, he turned toward the head of the stairs. Below a door whined on its hinges, and the woman called him, her voice ringing through the hallway with an effect of richness, deep-toned and bell-true. He was staggered by something in the quality of that full-throated cry, something that smote his memory until it was quick and vibrant, like a harp swept by an old familiar hand.

"Hugh?" she called; and again: "Hugh! Where are you?"

He paused, grasping the balustrade, and with some difficulty managed to articulate:

"Here . . . coming . . ."

"Hurry. Everything's ready."

Waiting an instant to steady his nerves, he descended and re-entered the kitchen.

The meal was waiting—on the table. The woman, too, faced him as he entered, waiting in the chair nearest the stove. But, once within the room, he paused so long beside the door, his hand upon the knob, and stared so strangely at her, that she moved uneasily, grew restless and disturbed. A gleam of apprehension flickered in her eyes.

"Why, what's the matter?" she asked with forced lightness. "Why don't you come in and sit down?"

He said abruptly: "You called me Hugh!"

She inclined her head, smiling mischievously. "I admit it. Do you mind?"

"Mind? No!" He shut the door, advanced and dropped into his chair, still searching her face with his troubled gaze. "Only," he said—"you startled me. I didn't think—expect—hope—"

"On so short an acquaintance?" she suggested archly. "Perhaps you're right. I didn't think . . . And yet—I do think—with the man who risked his life for me—I'm a little justified in forgetting even that we've never met through the medium of a conventional introduction."

"It isn't that, but . . ." He hesitated, trying to formulate phrases to explain the singular sensation that had assailed him when she called him, a sensation the precise nature of which he himself did not as yet understand.

She interrupted brusquely: "Don't let's waste time talking. I can't wait another instant."

Silently submissive, he took up his knife and fork and fell to.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Beacon.

The girl was the first to finish. She had eaten little in comparison; chiefly, perhaps, because she required less than he. She rested her elbows easily on the table, cradled her chin between her half-closed hands. Her eyes grew dark with speculation, and oddly lambent. He ate on, unconscious of her attitude. When he had finished, he leaned back a little in his chair, surprised her intent gaze, laughed sheepishly, and laughing, sighed with repletion. A smile of sympathetic understanding darkened the corners of her lips.

"It's coming on night," said he. "You haven't forgotten our signal fires? I've got my work cut out for me, to forage for fuel. I must get right at it."

The girl rose quickly. "Do you mind waiting a little? I mustn't neglect my dishes."

She worked rapidly above the steaming dish-pan, busy and intent, the fair head bowed, the cheeks faintly flushed. Whitaker lounged, profoundly intrigued, watching her with sober and studious eyes. What did it mean, this impression that had come to him so suddenly, within the hour, that he had known her, or someone strangely like her, at some forgotten time—as in some previous existence?

It was her voice that had made him think that, her voice of marvelous allure, crystal-pure, as flexible as tempered steel, strong, tender, rich, compassionate, compelling. . . . Where had he heard it before, and when?

"It's almost dark," her pleasant accents broke in upon his revery. "I'm quite finished." The girl scrubbed her arms and hands briskly with a dry towel and turned down her sleeves, facing him with her fine, frank, friendly smile. "If you're ready . . ."

"Whenever you are," he said with an oddly ceremonious bow.

To his surprise she drew back, her brows and lips contracting to level lines, her eyes informed with the light of wonder shot through with the flashings of a resentful temper.

"Why do you look at me so?" she demanded sharply. "What are you thinking . . . ?" She checked, her frown relaxed, her smile flickered softly. "Am I such a fright—?"

"I beg your pardon," he said hastily. "I was merely thinking, wondering . . ."

She seemed about to speak, but said nothing. He did not round out his apology. A little distance apart, they stood staring at one another in that weird, unnatural light, wherein the glow from the lamp contended garishly with the ebbing flush of day. And again he was mute in bewildered inquiry before that puzzling phenomenon of inscrutable emotion which once before, since his awakening, had been disclosed to him in her mantling color, in the quickening of her breath, and the agitation of her bosom, in the timid, dumb questioning of eyes grown strangely shy and frightened.

And then, in a twinkling, an impatient gesture exorcised the inexplicable mood that had possessed her, and she regained her normal, self-reliant poise as if by witchcraft.

"What a quaint creature you are, Hugh," she cried, her smile whimsical. "You've a way of looking at one that gives me the creeps. If you don't stop it, I swear I shall think you're the devil! Stop it—do you hear me, sir? And come build our bonfire."

She swung lithely away and was out of the house before he could regain his wits and follow.

Off in the north, where Whitaker had marked down the empurpled headland during the afternoon, a white light lanced the gloom thrice with a sweeping blade, vanished, and was replaced by a glare of angry red, which in its turn winked out.

"What is it?" the girl asked. "A ship signalling?"

"No; a lighthouse—probably a first-order light—with its characteristic flash, not duplicated anywhere along this section of the Atlantic coast. If I knew anything of such matters, it would be easy enough to tell from that just about where we are. If that information would help us."

"But, if we can see their light, they'll see ours,—won't they?—and send to find out what's the matter."

"Perhaps. At least—let's hope so. They're pretty sure of it, but they may think the natives here are merely celebrating their silver wedding, or Roosevelt's refusal of a third term, or the accession of Edward the Seventh—or anything."

"Please don't be silly—and discouraging. Do get to work and build the fire."

He obeyed with humility and expedition.

Where do you think Miss Fiske learned her rescuer's first name? Do you believe she knows more about the kidnapers and their intention than she wishes Whitaker to know?

A Natural Condenser.

The rain tree of Colombia measures about 50 feet high when at maturity and about three feet in diameter at the base. It absorbs an immense quantity of moisture from the atmosphere, which it concentrates, and subsequently sends it forth from its leaves and branches in a shower, in some instances so abundantly that the ground in its vicinity is converted into a quagmire. It possesses this curious property in its greatest degree in the summer, precisely when the rivers are at their lowest and water most scarce.

BOOTH TARKINGTON AS "THE DUKE"

Few of those who have followed the life of Booth Tarkington know that at one time the author was known in Capri as "the grand duke."

Mr. and Mrs. Tarkington, who had been staying in the Hotel Quisisana, Capri, for some little time, were about to journey to Rome, where they had engaged rooms at the Palace hotel. At Capri the American novelist and his wife were known as "the grand duke and duchess," because they never questioned the first prices that were asked for anything they wished to buy, no matter how exorbitant and outrageous were these prices.

The general custom in Capri was to ask ridiculously high prices and to come down gradually to a business basis. What still further impressed the people of Capri with the munificence of their "grand duke and duchess" was that, when attending a native wedding, Mrs. Tarkington, suddenly realizing that she had no present with her for the bride, at once unclasped a pearl necklace from her neck and presented it to the astonished woman. This thrifty native was overwhelmed with joy at the American's generosity and it was not long before she was at the local jeweler's at Capri having it valued.

To Mr. and Mrs. Tarkington's immense enjoyment it was priced by this authority at 10,000 francs. The bride was the envy of all her friends while the giver and a few companions were enjoying a joke, for having left her jewelry in America, Mrs. Tarkington bought a few imitation things in England to wear until she got back. The price she paid for the pearl necklace in London was just $5.

STANDARD OIL HEAD DEMOCRATIC

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

"Standard Oil is going to keep open house here. If the newspapers want to know anything about us, they may come right here and find it out."

The speaker was Alfred C. Bedford, successor of the late John D. Archbold as head of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, the greatest corporation in the largest industrial group in the world.

The place was 26 Broadway, sanctum sanctorum of the Rockefeller interests.

Far different from the taciturn, inaccessible old-time leaders of Standard Oil is "A. C." He is an affable American business man of fifty-two, dressed quietly but well, interested in sports and church and especially in Y. M. C. A. work.

"There should be a better understanding between America's great service corporations and the people they serve," the new president went on. "A friend from Europe only a short time ago declared to me that he could not understand what he called the foolishness of the American people in attacking their service corporations instead of upholding them."
